CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

CONTAINING

THE PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

FIFTIETH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

VOLUME XIX.

WASHINGTON:
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.
1888.

VOLUME XIX, PART VII.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

FIFTIETH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

to employ and fix the compensation of such other employés as it may find necessary to the proper performance of its duties. Until otherwise provided by law, the commission may hire suitable offices for its use, and shall have authority to procure all necessary office supplies. Witnesses summoned before the commission shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 23, after the word "investigation," to insert "upon official business;" and in line 26, after the word "commission," to strike out "and the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

All of the expenses of the commission, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the commissioners, or by their employés under their orders, in making any investigation, or upon official business in any other places than in the city of Washington, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the commission.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the Senator explain why it is taken away from the Interior Department.

Mr. CULLOM. The only reason is because the Secretary of the Interior as well as the commission agree that it is only an incumbrance to the Secretary of the Interior to be imposing such duties on him. It is impossible for him to know very much about the matter, and it is a duty that is troublesome to the commission to procure what seems to be an unnecessary indorsement; and finally, it is only superfluous work on the part of the Secretary of the Interior, and they both desire that this change should be made in the law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was, in section 7, line 4, after the word "report," to strike out "to the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

SEC. 7. That section 21 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows: "SEC. 21. That the commission shall, on or before the 1st day of December in each year, make a report."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 5, after the word "be," to strike out "by him;" so as to read:

Which shall be transmitted to Congress.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire to whom the report is made?

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will look a line or two below he will find it is to be submitted to Congress.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to be the purpose of this bill to make this commission an independent Department of the Government. It does not seem to me that that is a good idea. It appears to me that they should be under the general supervision of some particular Department of the Government. We ought not to multiply these quasi Departments in this way. I do not think the objection that supervision is an annoyance to the Secretary of the Interior or anything of that kind is sufficient. I do not think a body of this kind should make its report to Congress. I think the report should be made to some Department of the Government, and by it be transmitted to Congress. But I shall not make any particular objection on that ground. I will only say in a general way that to be multiplying the small Departments or bodies which are not Departments, and have no real standing as such, is a great mistake, in my judgment. We have a number of such things now, but that is no reason why we should have more of them.

Mr. CULLOM. This is a matter of no very great consequence, so far as I know, but I do know that this commission is probably about as responsible, and about as likely to be honest and square in its dealings as any Department of the Government; and as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] suggests to me, we have some organizations now existing that are independent of any Department.

It is true that it is necessary that the commission, as the law now stands, should deal with the Secretary of the Interior, who knows nothing about the business of the commission, and who can not know very much about it in any event without giving his close attention to it; and to require that is simply an embarrassment which it seems to me might as well be avoided. The Secretary of the Interior, as well as the commission, felt the same way, and for that reason we embodied this provision in the bill as it stands. Certainly this commission, made up as it is and as it always will be, I trust, of able and honest men, is just as likely to do right, and we are more likely to get the reports from the commission promptly than we should be if they went through other hands.

Mr. TELLER. It is no criticism on this commission to require its report to be submitted to the head of a Department. It is no answer for the Senator from Connecticut or anybody else to say that the Commissioner of Patents reports to Congress or the Comptroller of the Currency. Those were things that grew up originally. The Commissioner of Patents reported to Congress before there was a Secretary of the Interior, and before he was ever in that Department. It is one of those things which have never been put in harmony with the general character of the Executive Departments of the Government. There is no reason why a subordinate body like a commission for this purpose should be reporting to Congress. The Secretary of the Interior does not report to Congress. He reports to the President. The Secretary of the Treasury, it is true, reports to Congress. That is an old practice which began early; but in regard to all bodies lately created their reports have been required to be made to some established head of Department.

I do not think it is of very much consequence one way or the other, but it is certainly no reflection upon the commission to say that they ought to report to some head of a Department. Of course it is in the power of Congress to make a Department out of this body, and I suppose to make all these commissioners members of the Cabinet if it wants them there, but it is a comparatively insignificant body. Without any reflection upon its members, I will say that their conduct heretofore has not been such, in my judgment, as entitles them to any extraordinary claim upon the American people. I do not think that there is a general feeling in the country that they have shown themselves absolutely above question. I do not think they have shown that they have mastered the difficulties presented to them in the law of last year in such a way as to always acquit them of criticism, and I suppose nobody presumed they would when they were appointed, and nobody supposed that the appointees would when the offices were created.

Mr. CULLOM. As far as the commission are concerned, I suppose that everybody knows that any body of men taking charge of the great work that was intrusted to the commission by this law would be criticised by somebody, and probably very severely, for any action taken in the premises. My own judgment is that the commission has done as well if not better than the people of this country expected. My own judgment is that they have done eminently well. But whether that be true or not, so far as these amendments are concerned which are now under consideration they are made simply for the purpose of securing prompt transaction of business and not suggested on the part of the commission with any disposition to arrogate to themselves any special power, but simply that they may be able, with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, to go on with their work without being delayed, as they occasionally have been, in procuring what was necessary to carry on the business of the commission. I hope that the members of the Senate will allow the bill to stand as it is in these respects.

Mr. GORMAN. I agree generally with the chairman of the committee, but I think there are some features of the bill that require examination. The provision is that the commission shall report directly to Congress. As they have discretion in the use of the appropriation made, I think they should report to Congress the names of persons employed and the compensation they deem proper to allow. I would suggest to add at the end of line 13 of section 7 the further proviso "and they shall report to Congress the names and compensation of the persons employed by said commission."

We have a Fish Commission for which a lump sum is voted every year; and we authorize them to employ such persons as they think proper, and at such compensation as they choose. It is impossible at this time and at this early stage to determine with accuracy the number of persons that ought to be employed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and their compensation; and I therefore trust the chairman of the committee will permit an amendment at the end of line 13, which shall require a report of the names and compensation of the persons employed by the commission.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no earthly objection to that. I think it is well enough that it should be done.

Mr. GORMAN. I send up the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 7, on page 15, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

And the names and compensation of persons employed by said commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce in section 7, line 5, after the word "be," to strike out "by him."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was, in section 7, line 7, after the word "reports," to strike out "issued from the Interior Department" and insert "transmitted to Congress;" so as to read:

SEC. 7. That section 21 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows: "SEC. 21. That the commission shall, on or before the 1st day of December in each year, make a report, which shall be transmitted to Congress, and copies of which shall be distributed as are the other reports transmitted to Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, line 3, after the word "shall," to strike out "apply to" and insert "prevent;" in line 7, after the word "thereat," to insert:

Or the free carriage of destitute and homeless persons transported by charitable societies, and the necessary agents employed in such transportation.

And after the word "religion," at the end of line 12, to insert "or to municipal governments for the transportation of indigent persons;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That section 22 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows: "SEC. 22. That nothing in this act shall prevent the carriage, storage, or handling of property free or at reduced rates for the United States, State, or municipal governments, or for charitable purposes, or to or from fairs and expositions for exhibition thereat, or the free carriage of destitute and homeless persons transported by charitable societies, and the necessary agents employed in such transportation, or the issuance of mileage, excursion, or commutation passenger tickets; nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit any common carrier from giving reduced rates to ministers of religion, or to municipal governments for the transportation of indigent persons; nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent railroads from giving free carriage to their own officers and employés, or to prevent the principal officers of any railroad company or companies from exchanging passes or tickets with other railroad companies for their officers and employés; and nothing in this act contained shall in any way abridge or alter the remedies now existing at common law or by statute, but the provisions of this act are in addition to such remedies: Provided, That no pending litigation shall in any way be affected by this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I have an amendment which I shall present as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs. On page 16, section 8, line 24, after the word "persons," I move to insert:

Nor to prevent any railroad company from making any arrangement it shall deem proper with the Board of Managers of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, for the transportation of soldiers and other persons traveling to and from such homes.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to have the last portion of that amendment read once more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. Why should "other persons" be included in the benefit of that provision?

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the Senator will strike out the words "and other persons."

Mr. STEWART. Yes; let them be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. The committee, after reporting the amendments which have been passed upon by the Senate, instruct me to offer the following additional amendment, to come in after the close of the section just disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. CULLOM. The amendment comes in as section 5 of the bill.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert the following as section 5.

SEC. 5. That section 16 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 16. That whenever any common carrier, as defined in and subject to the provisions of this act, shall violate, or refuse or neglect to obey or perform, any lawful order or requirement of the commission created by this act, not founded upon a controversy requiring a trial by jury, as provided by the seventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States, it shall be lawful for the commission or for any company or person interested in such order or requirement, to apply in a summary way, by petition, to the circuit court of the United States sitting in equity in the judicial district in which the common carrier complained of has its principal office, or in which the violation or disobedience of such order or requirement shall happen, alleging such violation or disobedience, as the case may be; and the said court shall have power to hear and determine the matter, on such short notice to the common carrier complained of as the court shall deem reasonable; and such notice may be served on such common carrier, his or its officers, agents, or servants in such manner as the court shall direct; and said court shall proceed to hear and determine the matter speedily as a court of equity, and without the formal pleadings and proceedings applicable to ordinary suits in equity, but in such manner as to do justice in the premises; and to this end such court shall have power, if it think fit, to direct and prosecute in such mode and by such persons as it may appoint, all such inquiries as the court may think needful to enable it to form a just judgment in the matter of such petition; and on such hearing the findings of fact in the report of said commission shall be prima facie evidence of the matters therein stated; and if it be made to appear to such court, on such hearing or on report of any such person or persons, that the lawful order or requirement of said commission drawn in question has been violated or disobeyed, it shall be lawful for such court to issue a writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to restrain such common carrier from further continuing such violation or disobedience of such order or requirement of said commission, and enjoining obedience to the same; and in case of any disobedience of any such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, it shall be lawful for such court to issue writs of attachment, or any other process of said court incident or applicable to writs of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, against such common carrier, and if a corporation, against one or more of the directors, officers, or agents of the same, or against any owner, lessee, trustee, receiver, or other person failing to obey such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise; and said court may, if it shall think fit, make an order directing such common carrier or other person so disobeying such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to pay such sum of money, not exceeding for each carrier or person in default the sum of $500 for every day, after a day to be named in the order, that such carrier or other person shall fail to obey such injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise; and such moneys shall be payable as the court shall direct, either to the party complaining or into court, to abide the ultimate decision of the court, or into the Treasury; and payment thereof may, without prejudice to any other mode of recovering the same, be enforced by attachment or order in the nature of a writ of execution, in like manner as if the same had been recovered by a final decree in personam in such court. When the subject in dispute shall be of the value of $2,000 or more, either party to such proceeding before said court may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, under the same regulations now provided by law in respect of security for such appeal; but such appeal shall not operate to stay or supersede the order of the court or the execution of any writ or process thereon; and such court may, in every such matter, order the payment of such costs and counsel fees as shall be deemed reasonable. Whenever any such petition shall be filed or presented by the commission it shall be the duty of the district attorney, under the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States, to prosecute the same; and the costs and expenses of such be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States. If the matters involved in any such order or requirement of said commission are founded upon a controversy requiring a trial by jury, as provided by the seventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and any such common carrier shall violate or refuse or neglect to obey or perform the same, after notice given by said commission as provided in the fifteenth section of this act, it shall be lawful for any company or person interested in such order or requirement to apply in a summary way by petition to the circuit court of the United States sitting as a court of law in the judicial district in which the carrier complained of has its principal office, or in which the violation or disobedience of such order or requirement shall happen, alleging such violation or disobedience as the case may be; and said court shall by its order then fix a time and place for the trial of said cause, which shall not be less than twenty nor more than forty days from the time said order is made, and it shall be the duty of the marshal of the district in which said proceeding is pending to forthwith serve a copy of said petition, and of said order, upon each of the defendants, and it shall be the duty of the defendants to file their answers to said petition within ten days after the service of the same upon them as aforesaid. At the trial the findings of fact of said commissioners as set forth in its report shall be prima facie evidence of the matters therein stated, and if either party shall demand a jury or shall omit to waive a jury the court shall, by its order, direct the marshal forthwith to summon a jury to try the cause; but if all the parties shall waive a jury in writing, then the court shall try the issues in said cause and render its judgment thereon. If the subject in dispute shall be of the value of $2,000 or more, either party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States under the same regulations now provided by law in respect to security for such appeal; but such appeal must be taken within twenty days from the day of the rendition of the judgment of said circuit court. If the judgment of the circuit court shall be in favor of the party complaining, he or they shall be entitled to recover a reasonable counsel or attorney's fee, to be fixed by the court, which shall be collected as part of the costs in the case. For the purposes of this act, excepting its penal provisions, the circuit courts of the United States shall be deemed to be always in session."

OHIO VALLEY CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now ask that the joint resolution (H. Res. 196) declaring the true intent and meaning of the act approved May 9, 1888, be considered. The authorities at the other end of the Avenue think it necessary to modify the language of the amendment proposed by my colleague [Mr. PAYNE].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the vote by which the joint resolution was passed will be reconsidered, as also the vote by which it was ordered to a third reading. The Senator from Ohio proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. SHERMAN. In lieu of the amendment offered by my colleague I move to insert that which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the joint resolution, in lieu of the amendment heretofore adopted, the following:

Nor shall anything in said act be so construed as to prevent the purchase of suitable materials, and the employment of proper persons to complete or modify series of objects and classes of specimens when in the judgment of the head of any Department such purchase or employment, or both, is necessary in the proper preparation and conduct of an exhibit, nor to authorize the removal from their places of deposit in Washington of any original paper or document or laws or ordinances whatever.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 4th instant, approved and signed the act (S. 1919) granting a pension to John FOX.

The message also announced that the following bills were presented to the President June 25, 1888, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which they originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, have become laws without his approval:

An act (S. 1967) granting a pension to Sarah J. Tompkins;

An act (S. 1744) granting a pension to William M. Davis;

An act (S. 175) granting a pension to Eleanor S. Lawson; and

An act (S. 1687) to restore J. Rock Williamson to the pension-roll.

THE INTERSTATE-COMMERCE LAW.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887.

Mr. STEWART. Since I offered an amendment a moment ago, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has come into the Senate and has furnished me with the amendment which was agreed upon in the Military Committee, and I would ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment and substitute in lieu of it the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 16, line 14, after the word "persons," it is proposed to insert:

Or to inmates of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers under arrangements with the board of managers of said homes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The language just read will be substituted in place of that which was announced as agreed to on the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] heretofore, if there be no objection. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] as section 5.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. That concludes all the amendments of the committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the provisions of the amendment in reference to soldiers' homes. It seems to me that the language employed will not include both national homes and State homes. If there is any doubt about that, it should be made definite. Therefore I would suggest that it would be well to have it read "inmates of national or State homes."

Mr. CULLOM. As far as the Committee on Interstate Commerce is concerned, that committee has been disposed to allow liberal language to be used with reference to the application of the law to accommodations to soldiers, whether in homes or otherwise; but I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to have the amendment extend to inmates, not only of national homes, but of State homes as well.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that it is hardly necessary to extend it to occupants of State homes, because we do not interfere with arrangements a railroad company may make within a State.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is frequently done.

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly the Military Committee did not think it necessary. The Senator can wait a few moments until we look further into the matter.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to the insertion of the words "or State" between the words "national" and "homes."

Mr. HAWLEY. It refers to the Board of Managers of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Mr. CULLOM. We have a home for disabled soldiers in our State, owned and controlled by the State, with a board of managers appointed by the governor.

Mr. HAWLEY. But the national board can not arrange for that. You want to adjust the language for that.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the words "or State" will cover the case, if inserted between the words "national" and "homes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment now reads:

Or to inmates of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers under arrangements of the board of managers of said homes.

It is proposed to amend the amendment so as to read:

Or to inmates of the National or State Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers under arrangements of the boards of managers of said homes.

Mr. HAWLEY. That, perhaps, will do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will stand as last reported, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. REAGAN. I offer an amendment, to come in as an additional section to the bill as section 9.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That the circuit and district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction, upon the relation of any person or persons, firm, or corporation, alleging such violation by a common carrier of any of the provisions of the act to which this is a supplement, and all acts amendatory thereof, as prevents the relator from having interstate traffic moved by said common carrier at the same rates as are charged, or upon terms or conditions as favorable as those given by said common carrier for like traffic under similar conditions to any other shipper, to issue a writ or writs of mandamus against said common carrier, commanding such common carrier to move and transport the traffic, or to furnish cars or other facilities for transportation for the party applying for the writ, upon such terms and in such manner as shall seem just and proper to the court in order to prevent any undue discrimination against the relator or any violation of the provisions of the act to which this is a supplement: Provided, That if any question of fact as to the proper compensation to the common carrier for the service to be enforced by the writ is raised by the pleadings, the writ of peremptory mandamus may issue, notwithstanding such question of fact is undetermined, upon such terms as to security, payment of money into the court, or otherwise, as the court may think proper, pending the determination of the question of fact by a jury: Provided, That the remedy hereby given by writ of mandamus shall be cumulative, and shall not be held to exclude or interfere with other remedies provided by this act or the act to which it is a supplement.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would suggest to the Senator from Texas whether it is desirable that lines 14, 15, 16, and 17 of his amendment, to the word "Provided," should be inserted? Would not the amendment be more perfect with these lines left out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York?

Mr. REAGAN. One moment. I am afraid the amendment would not be apt for the purpose in view with these lines omitted. The object of the amendment is where parties offer goods to be shipped to require the corporations to forward their merchandise in its proper turn and at reasonable rates of freight and on the same conditions as freight is forwarded for other persons.

As the law now stands, a transportation company may discriminate against persons or firms, delay their freight to the great injury of the shipper, subject only to a civil suit, and may continue the delay pending the civil suit. The object of this amendment is to have the goods go forward, and issue a mandamus, where the facts warrant it, to compel the moving of the freight.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I will state to him the objection to that provision.

This amendment provides for the issuing of a peremptory writ of mandamus, not the ordinary writ, but the final writ, "upon such terms and in such manner as shall seem just and proper to the court, in order to prevent any undue discrimination against the relator or any violation of the provisions of the act to which this is a supplement."

It seems to me that practically those lines place the whole matter in the hands of the court to fix the terms on which the transportation shall be had, and without any remedy to the party who is aggrieved. "Upon such terms and in such manner as shall seem just and proper to the court," is the language; and the terms upon which the freight shall be carried are to be determined by the judgment of the court. It seems to me that the Senator does not care to go to that extent of addressing the matter to the conscience of the court as to the terms on which freight shall be carried.

The proviso in the amendment, of course, is proper enough. I make no objection to that, although I did make objection to it in the committee.

Provided, That if any question of fact as to the proper compensation to the common carrier for the service to be enforced by the writ is raised by the pleadings, the writ of peremptory mandamus may issue, notwithstanding such question of fact is undetermined, upon such terms as to security, payment of money into the court, or otherwise, as the court may think proper, pending the determination of the question of fact by a jury.

It seems to me the amendment would be as perfect as the Senator would care to have it if he would leave out that discretionary power which, for aught I know, would take the place of the law itself. Leave out the judgment of a single judge as to the terms and conditions upon which the freight shall be carried.

Mr. REAGAN. In order to guard against any injury resulting from the first part of the amendment to a transportation company, the proviso was inserted which has just been read by the Senator from New York:

That if any question of fact as to the proper compensation to the common carrier for the service to be enforced by the writ is raised by the pleadings, the writ of peremptory mandamus may issue, notwithstanding such question of fact is undetermined, upon such terms as to security, payment of money into the court, or otherwise, as the court may think proper, pending the determination of the question of fact by a jury.

The object, as I stated, of the amendment is to enable the court by mandamus to compel the transportation company to move the freight of all shippers, so as not to discriminate against any shipper, so as not to delay the freight of any one. The words objected to by the Senator from New York, he seems to think, would give the courts too much discretion. They are:

Upon such terms and in such manner as shall seem just and proper to the court, in order to prevent any undue discrimination against the relator, or any violation of the provisions of the act to which this is a supplement.

When the court is petitioned for a writ of mandamus the ground of complaint is to be stated, and it may be any one of several grounds. It may be alleged that the goods were not shipped in time; there may be a refusal to ship in proper cars; it may be some other impediment to the rights of the shipper; and the object of these words is to allow the court in its judgment to meet the exigencies of the case—the precise facts of the particular case. I do not think the provision has any other meaning than simply to enable the court to give such directions under the law as will meet substantially the complaint made, and I apprehend that there can be no injury worked to any one by that; and the subsequent proviso protects completely the transportation company against any injury, because if a question of fact arises as to rates the freight owner must give security for any damages, or he may deposit the money. So the transportation company is protected against injury by the order of the court requiring the security—either personal security or the deposit of money.

I would be glad if the Senator would allow the amendment to go through in the form in which it is. It will be one of the most valuable of all the processes for obtaining justice for shippers, preventing discriminations, and preventing transportation companies from practicing such discriminations as may injure a shipper, and preventing injuries which may occur to him until the time he may recover in a civil suit by delaying his shipment if they choose to delay it. It seems to me a wholesome and necessary provision which ought to be made.

Mr. TELLER. I sympathize with the purpose of the amendment and am disposed to vote for it as it stands, although I would prefer it with the words on page 2 stricken out, as suggested by the Senator from New York. It seems to me that the purpose of the amendment is to prevent undue favoritism on the part of the railway companies.

Mr. REAGAN. In order to meet the exigencies of action I will consent to the striking out of the words suggested by the Senator from New York.

Mr. TELLER. Then I have nothing further to say about it except that I think it is in the interest of the shipper that those words should go out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the modification of the amendment?

Mr. HISCOCK. To strike out lines 14, 15, and 16 and down to the word "Provided," in line 17.

Mr. REAGAN. I accept that modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York suggests an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Texas, which will be read.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Texas consents to the modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read to the Senate.

The SECRETARY. After the word "writ," at the end of line 13 of the amendment, it is proposed to strike out:

Upon such terms and in such manner as shall seem just and proper to the court, in order to prevent any undue discrimination against the relator, or any violation of the provisions of the act to which this is a supplement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas accepts the modification, and the amendment will be so modified. The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator to strike out the words "by a jury," in line 24. The questions of fact may be determined by the court by agreement very likely, but if it is not done by agreement, of course it will be by a jury.

Mr. REAGAN. Any controversy about an amount over $20 would have to be settled by a jury.

Mr. TELLER. Unless by agreement.

Mr. REAGAN. Say "determination of the question of fact by a jury unless a jury be waived."

Mr. TELLER. Say "by the court or a jury." I would not confine it to a jury, and say that under all circumstances a jury must pass upon these questions. I think if the word "jury" is out, it is left then under the general law that it must be determined by a jury unless the parties waive a jury, which they can do.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no objection to the suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado offers an amendment, in line 24, after the word "fact," to strike out "by a jury."

Mr. TELLER. My suggestion to the Senator is that if we leave it simply to be a determination of the question of fact, it will be determined by a jury unless the parties agree otherwise.

Mr. REAGAN. Then suppose the amendment read "unless the parties agree to waive it."

Mr. TELLER. That is not necessary if you strike out "by a jury." The general practice would require it to be decided first by a jury unless the parties agreed that the court might decide.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas accepts the amendment proposed.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, I consent to strike out the words "by a jury," in line 24.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I had intended to present an amendment, and gave notice that I would do it, extending the provisions of the law to this effect:

> The provisions of this act shall apply to all persons, corporations, or companies engaged in the express business, in so far as they are engaged in such transportations of freight as is herein defined and regulated; and it shall also apply to the relations of the carriers hereinbefore mentioned with sleeping-car companies, drawing-room-car companies, palace-car companies, stock-car companies, tank-car companies, and any companies, associations, or persons furnishing for use upon railroads, cars or other instrumentalities for the transportation of persons or property.

I believe this is necessary. The committee did not agree to it, and as I deem the provisions already consented to by the Senate as valuable and important, and that they will not be contested, while to add other provisions might delay the passage of the bill, I will not for the present press this amendment, though the purpose of it was recommended by the commission. Afterwards, I think, however, they qualified their recommendation on that subject. I believe the subject is one that ought to be acted on. I simply refrain from offering it in order to facilitate the passage of the bill through the Senate in time to secure action in the other House.

I will also say that I had intended to offer an amendment to——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend until the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 62) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that will be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois asks that the unfinished business be laid aside informally. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The interstate-commerce bill continues before the Senate.

Mr. REAGAN. I had intended to introduce an amendment to the fourth section of the act of February of last year, but it was a subject very much controverted in both the House and Senate at that time, and the decision of the Senate was in favor of the present form of the fourth section. The construction which the proviso has received at the hands of the commission, it seems to me, was a strained construction and an unjust construction. It has seemed to me that the effect of the decision of the commission was to make the proviso the law and to completely ignore the existence of the body of the section, the main purpose of the act. Whether I am wrong or they are wrong on that subject it is not necessary to investigate now.

I simply desire to say that I intended introducing an amendment to that section, but as it would lead certainly to controversy and with not a very good prospect of success, I do not intend to embarrass the chance the bill now has of being passed, and I shall waive it until another session of Congress.

Mr. TELLER. I regard the amendments contained in this bill as of considerable value for the purpose of carrying out the original intention of the law of last year, and I have no desire to antagonize anything contained in the bill. I only want to say a word or two on the general subject.

I regret that the committee did not make some change in section 4 of the law, especially as to the proviso which provides:

> That upon application to the commission appointed under the provisions of this act, such common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation by the commission, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section of this act.

I am not one of those who contend that a railroad company should regulate its freight by the exact distance it is carried—that is, I do not pretend if a road is 200 miles long that it should carry freight to the center of the line for exactly one-half what it charges to carry it to the end of the road—but I do say under this provision of the law many abuses which had grown up before the passage of the act, and of which the people justly and rightly complained, have been continued, and, in my judgment, they will always be continued under this proviso until it is repealed or amended or modified in some manner.

It is very easy for the railroad companies to declare that the circumstances are so different that they can not comply with the first part of the section, and I think the Interstate Commerce Commission, endeavoring undoubtedly to do what they have believed to be proper, with an ardent desire, I have no doubt, to carry out the purpose and intention of the law, have been led into making, as was suggested a moment ago by the Senator from Texas, this the principal part of the law. They have given an importance to this proviso to the fourth section that never could have been intended by the framers of the bill, and certainly was not intended by Congress when the bill became a law.

As I said, the abuses that had grown up before have been continued, and, I may add, I think without exaggeration, that in many cases they have become exceedingly increased. There has been an aggravation of the former abuses. I can only say, by way of illustration, that under this act until very recently goods have been carried from the Pacific coast to Kansas City for considerably less than one-half what they had been carried to the interior of the continent over about one-half of the distance. Goods were carried from Pacific coast points to Kansas City, in the Missouri Valley, for $1.05 a hundred, and the same goods under like circumstances entirely were charged to the city of Denver, 600 miles nearer the Pacific coast, $2.65 a hundred. It was possible for a dealer in Kansas City to buy his goods from the Pacific coast and transfer them through the city of Denver to Kansas City and reship them to a point 100 miles west of the city of Denver, and deliver them to dealers there, having paid less freight for the shipment to Kansas City and the shipment back than a citizen of Denver had paid for the shipment to that city. Cities 300 miles west of Denver paid more for goods from the Pacific coast under this provision for a long time than cities in the valley of the Missouri 900 miles east of those points.

Recently the commission have decided that these were extortionate rates, and that there must be some modification; but what will be the modification? How much will they allow them to carry for $2 to Denver when they carry for $1.05 to Kansas City? Will the commission say that is fair? The dealers, as it is now, are left largely at the mercy of the commission. It can not be contended by anybody that they ought to be allowed to carry goods to Kansas City, 600 miles east of Denver, for less money than they carry the same goods to Denver. At least the people of Denver have a right to have their goods as cheap from the Pacific coast as Kansas City or any other city in the Missouri Valley. I do not say that the commission will not insist that that shall be done, for I do not know what the commission has determined to do in that particular; but I do say that a law is a defective law that leaves it for any body of men to say that such a proceeding may take place; and it is in the interest of the railroad companies and everybody connected with commerce and trade that this should cease.

It was enough when we said that common carriers might charge as much for the short distance as they did for the long, without giving permission under certain circumstances that they might charge less for a long distance, and in my judgment there ought to be no proviso of this kind in the bill.

I should insist upon amending this bill so as to strike out the proviso to section 4 if I did not fear that the very desirable things in these amendments might thereby be defeated. I propose therefore not to make the motion, but to allow these amendments to become a part and parcel of the law, and to give notice to the railroad companies and to everybody connected with this subject that when that is done I will join with a number of others who I know are of the same mind to declare either that the railroads voluntarily must discontinue these outrageous proceedings or the strong hand of the law shall compel them under fear of their officials going within the doors of the penitentiary, where they ought to be if they continue them.

For the reason I have suggested, that this might create an antagonism that would prevent these beneficial amendments from becoming a law, I do not propose now to move the amendment, although I regret that the committee have not seen fit to put it in and meet this issue squarely so that the question might have been determined in this country whether the railroad companies are or are not greater than the people, whether there is or whether there is not power in Congress to compel the interstate commerce of this country to be conducted upon principles of justice and equity and fair dealing. That question will be presented to Congress, and we might as well have met it now as at any other time; but I propose when it is met if possible to have the approval, the sanction, and the support of a committee of this body.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I agree in large measure with what the Senator from Colorado has said with reference especially to the enforcement of the law, and I desire to say for his information that many hundreds of the railroad companies of the country since the interstate-commerce act was passed have complied literally with the fourth section of the act, according to the reports by them and by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I desire to say further that the Committee on Interstate Commerce had the subject under consideration for a good while, and discussed the very point which the Senator has been speaking of; and the judgment of the committee was that as this law, which is a new one, only a little over a year old, and the commission under it has hardly had time to test it and enforce submission to it by the corporations of the country, it would be better to pass over the question of amending the fourth section of the act until the following session, so that the commission may have further time to investigate and report to the Congress of the United States before Congress takes any action upon it.

I think that was a reasonable course on the part of the committee. The members of the committee understand fully that there are violations of that section of the law, and I think the commission understand that, and the commission are at work with a view to enforce the fourth section of the law everywhere in this country. But the Senator must know, as everybody knows, that it takes time to put in operation and enforce a law like this, which is new upon our statute-book, and I think it is the part of wisdom that Congress should go no faster than the experience under the statute as it stands clearly justifies in the interest of fair dealing and the best interests of the commerce of the country.

I shall not take up the time of the Senate in discussing the matter at this time, as nobody feels that it is best to amend the fourth section at this session. We want the commission to have more time, also in view of the importance of the amendments which the Senate has already agreed to becoming a law before this session shall close. We do not desire as a committee to incorporate in the bill doubtful amendments which may defeat any legislation on the subject.

After these remarks I desire to call the attention of the Secretary to the numbering of the sections. The amendment to section 16 should come in before the amendment to section 17 of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That has already been done.

Mr. CULLOM. Now, I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to some amendments which have been recommended by various citizens of the United States. I have in my hand one of the petitions sent here, asking for an amendment in these words:

Provided, That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this act, to carry or transport any commodity for any shipper in a car or vehicle owned, leased, or in any way controlled by such shipper; that it shall be unlawful for any shipper to make any contract with any carrier to convey the property of such shipper in cars or vehicles owned or controlled by such shipper.

I desire to ask the Senator whether in the bill which his committee has reported there is any provision to remedy the evil pointed out in the petition which I have read? I understand that large corporations evade the force and effect of the interstate-commerce act, or that part of it which secures equality of rights and privileges and equality of rates, by owning their own cars, by owning oil-cans, or something of that kind, which enables them to evade the stringent provisions of the interstate-commerce law, attempting to secure equality of rates and of rights to all the people of this country. I say that I understand certain of these large corporations have evaded the law in the way which is pointed out in this amendment. If I can get the attention of the Senator from Illinois, I should like to ask him what provision has been made to cure that evil, or whether the committee regard it as incurable, or as something that ought not to be cured?

Mr. CULLOM. As the Senator asks me the question whether the committee has done anything to interfere with persons owning their own cars, I answer that it has not, and my judgment is that it can not afford to do so. For instance, take the dressed-beef shippers that we all know something about. When that business began to grow, and up to this time in fact, the railroad companies of the country failed to provide, did not and perhaps could not provide, the necessary cars for the transportation of dressed beef in such manner as it ought to be transported from one section of the country to another. So some of the parties engaged in the dressed-beef transportation business provided their own cars, and they are being used to-day, very many of them; but the railroads are beginning to furnish cars as rapidly as they feel able to do so. But a portion of the cars in which that article is transported are owned by the parties engaged in the business themselves, and some arrangement between the shipper and the railroad company is agreed upon by which the transportation is paid for.

I do not see myself that the Congress of the United States can undertake to provide that a man shall not furnish his own car, or that the railroad company shall furnish all the cars, because in some instances they could not do it without great embarrassment to themselves.

But there is nothing in the bill that permits in any way any advantage to be taken by the party owning the car over other persons who do not own cars. In other words, it is within the purview of the law and within the power of the commission to see to it that every question involved in the ownership and the transportation of the car where it is owned by the shipper shall be considered, and the party owning the car, taking all the facts into consideration, shall have no undue advantage over the person who does not own a car.

I think that is probably a sufficient answer to the question of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. REAGAN. The amendment which I intended offering and did not offer meets the question suggested by the Senator from Mississippi. The act of February 4, 1887, which we now propose to amend, reads, in section 1:

That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used, under a common control, management, or arrangement, for a continuous carriage or shipment, from one State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, to any other State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia.

The second paragraph of that section reads as follows:

The term "railroad" as used in this act shall include all bridges and ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the road in use by any corporation operating a railroad, whether owned or operated under a contract, agreement, or lease; and the term "transportation" shall include all instrumentalities of shipment or carriage.

When we had enumerated everything that was necessary in the original clause we inserted "shall include all instrumentalities of shipment or carriage." It seems that the commission concluded that a company other than a railroad company owning its own cars and transporting its own property is not technically a common carrier, and therefore not within the provisions of the law defining common carriers. It was not the object of the law to define common carriers. The object of the law was to regulate commerce between the States, and the transportation of that commerce, and we included a full definition of the railroad and its means of transportation as generally known, and then to cover every possible mode of conveyance of property on a railroad we added:

And the term "transportation" shall include all instrumentalities of shipment or carriage.

It seems to me that if the commission had been very anxious to protect the people they would have concluded that a car which did not belong to the railroad company was nevertheless their means of transportation under that law.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me state what I understand to be the operations of the interstate-commerce law and the intention of Congress in its enactment; and I can best illustrate by propounding this question to the Senator from Texas: Is he not aware that under the interstate-commerce law men of large capital doing a large business, able to own their own cars and ship their manufactures or their own produce, do in fact by the mere owning of their cars secure an advantage in transportation which is driving out from business all small men?

Mr. REAGAN. I do understand the affirmative of the proposition the Senator from Mississippi presents. I do understand that the Standard Oil Company, for instance, owning its own cars and tanks and shipping its own oil, is held not to be a common carrier and is not brought within the provisions of this law, and they drive other manufacturers of oil out of the market. That ought to have been met. It is not a defect in the law, in my opinion. The law is not defective, but the construction of the law ought to be met at this time by an amendment that would have told the commission, "We do not mean that the purposes of this law shall be avoided in that way."

Mr. GEORGE. If the commission that operates that law construe it so as to give these men an advantage, is it not the plain duty of the Senate and of Congress to make the law so plain that they can not evade it or misconstrue it?

Mr. REAGAN. I sympathize with that view myself.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me that the Senator from Mississippi is mistaken as to the construction put upon the law by the commission. My recollection is that the commission have decided a case involving the question between a man by the name of Rice and the Standard Oil Company, in which they have decided that the Standard Oil Company should not do what they were attempting to do on account of their having their tanks and Mr. Rice not being able to own them, but the oil should be carried at the same rate by the transportation company in tanks as it was carried in barrels, which was the only thing that the individual, Mr. Rice, was able to provide. So I think there is a misunderstanding of the construction of the statute by the commission; but I am free to say that I do not believe that the commission has been as vigorous in enforcing the law as between parties not able to own cars and those who do own them as they ought to have been. Still I do not think there is any defect in the statute that will justify a corporation or party that is able to build its own cars or its own means of transportation being discriminated in favor of as against a poor man who is not able to provide his own cars or his own means of transportation.

Mr. GEORGE. What does the Senator say?

Mr. CULLOM. I say that I do not think the law justifies any such position as that indicated by the Senator from Texas, that because a person or a corporation owns a car, it, therefore, is not subject to being controlled just the same as though the car belonged to the railroad company itself. I think the Senator will find upon reading the most recent decisions of the commission that they are holding the parties who own their means of transportation to account just as though they did not own them.

Mr. REAGAN. I did not give that as my construction, but I gave it as what I understood to be the construction of the commission and as against the terms of the law.

Mr. CULLOM. That is exactly where I differ with the Senator from Texas. I think if the Senator will read the most recent decisions of the commission he will find that the commission are holding to account a corporation or company that owns its cars just exactly as they do the party who does not own them.

Mr. REAGAN. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. GEORGE. I want to ask a question, because I want to get at the facts if I can. Does the Senator from Illinois mean to say that the commission in its recent decisions as to companies engaged in interstate commerce and carrying products and merchandise on cars owned by the shipper, has forced that shipper to pay the same price for goods consigned in cars owned by him as the railroad charges other people?

Mr. CULLOM. This is what I say. A recent case has been decided between a man by the name of Rice and the Standard Oil Company. The Standard Oil Company owns its tanks; whether it owns the trucks on which the tanks are placed I am unable to say; but it owns its tanks in which it puts the oil and in which it carries vast quantities of it, while Mr. Rice is not able to own a car or anything above the size of a barrel. Mr. Rice made a case against the Standard Oil Company or against the railroad company which involved the question, and, as I understand, the commission has decided that the railroad company was not justified in charging the amount that it did, differing largely from the freight that it charged Mr. Rice, who had his oil in barrels, and the commission held the railroad to account, and ordered that a change of charge should be made by the railroad company.

Mr. GEORGE. Did the commission hold that the railroad company should charge Mr. Rice only the same price per gallon——

Mr. CULLOM. Per 100 pounds.

Mr. GEORGE. Or per 100 pounds when shipped in barrels that it charged the Standard Oil Company when shipped in tanks?

Mr. CULLOM. That is exactly what I understand the commission has decided, that they should be allowed to charge per hundred pounds for carrying the oil, whether in tanks or barrels.

Mr. GEORGE. I am glad to hear it. Does the commission require the railroad companies to charge men shipping in their own cars the same amount per pound or per 100 pounds or any other unit, as it charges people who do not own cars?

Mr. CULLOM. I am not able to answer that question, because I do not recall any case which has come before the commission involving the question on just that point.

Mr. REAGAN. I am glad the construction of the statute is such as the Senator from Illinois has stated, but in the earlier decisions, especially the one I had reference to when I spoke, it was held that they could not deal with persons who shipped in their own cars, because they were not common carriers; they carried only for themselves; and it seems that the commission took them out of the operation of the law because they were not technically common carriers in the face of the provision which made all instrumentalities of commerce subject to the law.

The courts held, and I understand the commission followed them, as, of course, they would be likely to follow them, that the sleeping-car companies are not common carriers, that they are not part of the railroad system, that they are not part of the railroad transportation, and they manage somehow or other that there is no power over them. A gentleman from Baltimore made an ingenious statement, in which he said that such a company was not a person, was not a corporation, and he went on to define that it was not anything that the law could touch, and yet it was engaged in transportation. To the plain mind, to the unsophisticated mind, to the mind unbiased by interest, it looks pretty hard to make a distinction to reach the point that express companies and sleeping-car companies are not subject to be controlled by such a law as this, a law which embraces all instrumentalities of transportation. It does not say they shall belong to a railroad company, to any railroad corporation, to any company or any individual, but it embraces all instrumentalities of shipping.

My judgment is—and I speak it with respect, because I think the commission is composed of honest and able men—that it is simply an excess of conservatism that prevents them from being just, or a lack of that courage which is necessary to meet a great question like this. If they had been willing to execute the law in its spirit with reference to the evils the country was suffering under, and had enforced the fourth section of the law and the clause of the first section which I have read, the railroads at once would have conformed to their requirements, the country would have been quieted, and the commission would have been saved a vast amount of labor that has been imposed on them by what seems to me their vacillating course.

It is right that the representatives of the States and the people should speak and let them know that a plain law should be plainly enforced when it affects great interests like those affected by this law, and when they go off to say that because these people are not common carriers, as they did in the earlier decisions—that is, the express companies and the sleeping-car companies—when they do that in the face of this first section I have read, including every instrumentality of transportation, I think their attention ought to be called to it in the strongest possible way.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, one word further.

I have no controversy with the Senator in calling the attention of the commission to their duties. I want to say that when the original act was prepared I supposed that I had in the bill sleeping-car companies, express-car companies, and every other kind of cars or means of transportation that anybody used upon railroads. I am perfectly willing that Senators shall express their views and condemnation, if they choose, of the judgment or action of the Interstate Commerce Commission in not giving the law as we passed it a more liberal construction as to its meaning. I am inclined to think that they have not given the law as broad a construction as they were justified in doing by the language, but I must say again that the act has been in force but a little over a year, and it is certainly but fair that those gentlemen shall have time enough to do what they can under it; and it will be wise on our part that we should go a little slowly in making amendments until they, the commission, have had ample opportunity of enforcing the law as it exists already.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, the bill now before the Senate contains many provisions which, in my opinion, will effect a reform in the existing law regulating commerce, and therefore I have no disposition to obstruct the speedy passage of the bill. There are some amendments which, I think, should be made to the law that are not embraced within the provisions of the present measure.

On the 12th day of December last I introduced a bill to amend the second and fourth sections of the act to regulate commerce. The amendment to the second section was to strike out of the existing law the qualifying terms "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions." The amendment to the fourth section was to strike out the same words, and also to repeal the proviso under which so much mischief has been practiced. That bill was considered by the Committee on Interstate Commerce and was reported adversely to the Senate. At my request it was placed upon the Calendar, and it is there now.

I wish to say in advance, in order that the railroad companies and the Interstate Commerce Commission may all understand it, that unless there are corrections made by both the commission and the railroad companies in respect of the abuses which have grown up under those provisions of the present law, I shall certainly do all that may be in my power to induce the Senate to pass that bill at the next session.

I do not now wish to interfere with the progress of this bill, but all over this country instances have sprung up like unto those the Senator from Colorado has referred to, and all manner of abuses in the administration of our transportation system have been practiced and hidden behind those words in the second section, "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions."

Mr. GEORGE. That clause is a Trojan horse.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am quite content to believe that the Commission has been doing the best it could, and feeling its way toward better results; but it must travel faster than it has yet gone, and it must present fruits of action between this and the next session of Congress, or I shall endeavor to have the amendments made that are incorporated in the bill which I introduced; and I believe that as these developments go on, and the people come to understand them, unless the commission puts an end to them, Congress will do it.

I only wish to say this, sir, in the way of justifying myself in not now urging those amendments: it is an independent bill on the Calendar. I am willing to let the commission have a little longer trial; but if they will not do better then we must compel them by law, by taking away the clauses under which they have manufactured, perhaps not intentionally, subterfuges which have gone largely to the protection of the railroad companies in the practice of abuses in the matter of transportation.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am very much gratified to hear what has fallen from the lips of the Senator from Iowa. I thought when we undertook by Congressional action to manage the railroad corporations of the United States so as to have fair, just, and equal service by those companies to all the people of the United States we were undertaking a rather big job. I find, sir, that it was a big job. I am not disheartened, however.

I think when we recognize what I regard to be the fundamental idea upon which this legislation is based, and without which there is no justification or excuse for interfering at all, when we recognize that idea as a just and true idea which is to be incorporated into the legislation of this country and enforced at all hazards and at whatever expense, then we will begin to see daylight.

That idea is this, that common carriers are mere public instrumentalities subject to regulation and control by public law; that they are mere servants of the public; and that in the service they render they must render exact and equal justice to all men who may have occasion for their services. In this is embraced the further idea (and without this additional subsidiary idea the whole scheme is worthless) that in performing this service there shall be no discrimination, no alleviation of burdens, no reduction of rates on account of the largeness of the shipment as against a small shipment, so that in fact and in truth the common, ordinary people of this country, the men upon whom this country depends for its progress in peace and its defense in war, shall have upon one of their own public intrumentalities an equal and fair service with all others.

Mr. President, there is one idea which can not be too much impressed upon the American statesman, and that is that by modern economic methods arising out of our civilization, out of the progress of industry and of the arts, it almost necessarily comes that the larger the establishment the cheaper the production, so that the tendency now is that establishments are growing larger and larger on account of cheapness, and all small establishments, all small men, are being driven from the position of independent workers to that of mere servants and wage-receivers from the larger establishment.

Senators may think, if they have not reflected upon it, that this is an imaginary scare, but I tell you that the philosophic statesman, the man who will look over this country and over civilized Europe will see the truth of what I have announced, that everything now tends to make large enterprises successful and to crush out little men and little enterprises.

So far as that tendency is natural probably we can not obviate it, but when we come to deal with a public question confessedly within our jurisdiction it behooves us, sir, it is demanded of us by the highest consideration, not only of patriotism, but of philanthropy, of love for our fellow-man, that we shall do nothing, and that we shall omit to do nothing, which shall have a tendency to prevent the full operation of this economic law.

So you may have your interstate-commerce laws, you may prevent by the operation of those laws any discrimination between two millionaires shipping equally a large amount of goods; but if you stop there you have only protected men who are able to live without your protection. If you do not go a step further and say that the small shipper, the man of small enterprise, of small capital, shall have service pro rata per barrel, per hundred pounds, at the same rate exactly that the large establishments get it, you have failed to do your duty.

So, Mr. President, I shall offer to this bill the amendment to which I called the attention of the Senator from Illinois a few moments ago. It will not go to its full extent, I know. We had a proposition once before the Senate on that subject, introduced by my friend from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], advocated by him in an able speech, and supported by me in a much less able one, and that proposition in the American Senate, representing democratic America, representing probably fifty-five millions of poor men to four or five millions of rich men, received the enormous vote of four in the Senate. I had then as full confidence as I had in the justice of Almighty God that a discrimination so unjust against the laboring and toiling men and women of America could not live long.

I do not go to that extent this morning; but I shall offer the amendment which I find in a petition sent to me from Mississippi, and will see if we have made any progress in the last year in favor of protecting small men and small enterprises in America against the overwhelming advantages which larger capital and larger enterprises have.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to hear the amendment read. I did not know the Senator had offered one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 3 of the original act the following proviso:

Provided, That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to carry or transport any commodity for any shipper in a car or vehicle owned, leased, or in any way controlled by such shipper, unless the said common carrier shall charge for the transportation of said goods, wares, and merchandise so carried the same price exactly as would have been charged if the same had been shipped in cars belonging to said carrier: And provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any shipper to make any contract with any carrier to convey the property of such shipper in cars or vehicles owned or controlled by such shipper.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Mississippi makes a very vigorous speech in favor of the rights of the people. In nothing that he has said does he differ from the law as it exists now. In other words, the act which Congress passed a year ago or more provides against extortion, against unjust discrimination in every form; and I assert that there is no principle the Senator has enunciated that is not already incorporated in the interstate-commerce act, which the Senator voted for.

Mr. GEORGE. Is it enforced that way?

Mr. CULLOM. Whether it is enforced I am not prepared to say absolutely. I want the Senator to answer me whether Congress in any way can enforce a law after it has been passed?

Mr. GEORGE. No, sir; but we may do this: If a law be doubtful and we find that its just meaning, its just sense, is evaded, we can make it so plain that nobody dare evade it afterwards.

Mr. CULLOM. The law is already so plain that any man who reads it may understand what it means. While it is the duty of Congress to enact laws, and to enact just laws protecting the rights of the people of this country, it is the duty of the Administration of this country to enforce the laws exactly as they are written upon the statute-book. If the Congress of the United States is to sit here and undertake to amend every time that it sees that a law is violated, it is plain that we could do nothing else, and we should sit here from one year's end to another.

I say, Mr. President, that there is nothing in the interstate-commerce act which justifies any unjust discrimination between the small shipper and the large one; on the contrary, it forbids it.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator say "any discrimination?"

Mr. CULLOM. I say any discrimination that is unjust.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator knows just as well as any other man that there are circumstances under which discriminations must be made in the interest of the business and the commerce of this country.

Mr. GEORGE. There are no circumstances which can rightfully exist under the sun which will justify a discrimination between a large shipper and a small shipper merely because one is large and the other is small.

Mr. CULLOM. I entirely agree with the Senator from Mississippi in that proposition; and yet when he says there is no instance in which discrimination ought to be made, the Senator admits that he does not know anything about the subject. If there is any fault anywhere it is in the enforcement of the act which is upon the statute-book to day. We legislated as plain as language could be written against extortion from anybody. We legislated as plain as any language could be written against unjust discrimination between places or between individuals.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator will allow me to state that there is not any jurisdiction in the commission to execute the law except in cases made before it by parties who complain before it that it has been violated. I desire to state further that there has not been a single case of complaint made of a violation of the interstate-commerce law in the particular stated by the Senator from Mississippi. There has not been a single case made by parties before the commission that has not been fully investigated, and fairly and correctly decided according to the interstate-commerce law.

In every instance where I have read the decision, I defy the power of any lawyer in the Senate who is opposed to this whole legislation to undertake to show that the decisions of the commission have not been in every case in strict accordance with the law, and in execution of the law. The railroads have submitted to the decisions, and the shippers have submitted to the decisions. In the case made by Rice in reference to the shipment of oil the decision of the commission was a most elaborate one. The case was thoroughly investigated; it was thoroughly argued by lawyers on both sides; and every aspect of the question was fully considered.

If gentlemen who complain of the non-execution of the law have not read the decisions of the commission, I should like to understand how they are prepared to criticise them. Gentlemen come here and talk about the non-execution of the law. There is no power to execute it except where there has been a complaint made, and in that case the commission have the power to examine. Only in that case have they the power to examine. Wherever there has been a case made they have examined, thoroughly examined, and correctly decided the law and executed it.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to ask my honorable friend from Alabama whether it is not his judgment that the law as it stands upon the statute-book provides against extortion in any case and against unjust discrimination in any case?

Mr. PUGH. There is no doubt of it, and it is executed in every case made before the commission. If gentlemen can find any decision where it has not been executed, or any decision where there has been any relaxation of the law, or any hesitation to execute it to the full extent and meaning of the remedy provided, I should like to have it pointed out and the case specified. It can not be done, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, we are getting up a little breeze here this morning.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator desire to occupy the floor?

Mr. GEORGE. I do.

Mr. CULLOM. I have the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. I beg pardon; I thought the Senator had resigned it.

Mr. CULLOM. Not just yet. I will yield to the Senator for a remark or an interrogatory, if he desires.

Mr. GEORGE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I had no idea of trenching on holy ground.

Mr. CULLOM. Not at all. I have no objection to the Senator taking the floor, but I should like to be asked about it first.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not know the Senator was on the floor.

Mr. CULLOM. It is very easy to talk about the railroads of the country violating law, and about the abuses upon the people, and all that sort of thing, but I desire to remind Senators that since the interstate-commerce act has been in force, in thousands of instances abuses which theretofore existed have been cured. I desire to remind Senators, taking the fourth section of the act, that I think three hundred, and I am not sure but five hundred railroads report an absolute compliance with the fourth section of the act.

Senators may stand upon this floor and undertake to make the country believe that they especially are the people's defenders. I have no objection so far as I am concerned; my whole purpose and object and labor have been to protect the people of this country from abuses on the part of the railroad corporations of the country. If the Senator himself can say that he has done as much, then I am willing for him to criticise the action of Congress, or of those who are more especially responsible for the legislation upon this subject.

I am ready to amend the bill wherever it is necessary to do so in the interest of protecting the people's rights against the corporations of the country, having due regard to the rights of railroads as well; but let me say to Senators that there was a great step taken within the last year or two when we passed the act regulating the commerce of this country, placing the railroad corporations of the country subordinate to law and subordinate to the control of the Government of the United States.

I am ready, as I said, to vote for and advocate any reasonable measure in the interest of protecting the rights of the people where it seems to be necessary; but here is a law upon the statute-book which prevents unjust discrimination, which prevents extortion in all cases, whether the man is rich or whether he is poor, and it is our duty to consider well any amendment we make to it.

Let me say to Senators that many times within the last year have I been assailed by communications because the law as it is now upon the statute-book would not allow the great corporations or moneyed manufacturing concerns to get an advantage over the little one that happened to be poor; and I answered them that the very object of the statute was to protect every individual, whether he was rich or whether he was poor, whether he did a small business or whether he did a large one.

That was the object of the statute, and it has accomplished great work in bringing about the results which it had in view, in protecting the small manufacturer and dealer as against the power of the men of large means in getting advantages in transportation. Before this law was enacted a man or set of men carrying on a large business would trample out competitors by secret rebates, by drawbacks, and by every other subterfuge which could be used to their advantage against the small operator who did not have the opportunities that they had. The law came into force, and it rectified and cured those evils in a large degree.

I do not say that they are all cured, and I submit in all candor whether it is to be expected by reasonable men that all the evils connected with transportation should be cured within the period of a year or fourteen months. I say the law has been operating well. We have introduced, and the Senate has passed in Committee of the Whole, amendments curing some of the evils, putting up some of the gaps where we saw that the law ought to be strengthened a little. We provide in these amendments that the agent of the corporation who, with his eyes open, violates the plain letter of the law shall not only be subject to a fine of $5,000, but that he shall be subject, in the discretion of the court, to be sent to the penitentiary as well. We provide against the subterfuge of underbilling that was adopted by collusion between railroads and the large shippers of grain and other articles. We make it a penitentiary offense to violate the law in that respect and in every other, except on the pure naked question whether it was right to charge this amount or that involving the question of reasonableness, about which honest men may differ.

I am anxious that these amendments shall be passed by the Senate without delay. I know that there are other things, perhaps, that ought to be taken into consideration, and doubtless they will be by the time another session of Congress comes around; but let me remind Senators that the English Government has been legislating upon this subject for years and years, and has passed hundreds and hundreds of acts trying to perfect their system of regulation in the British Government. We have just taken hold of the subject, and I am proud to say that the American nation is abreast of the English Government in legislation upon this subject, if we are not in advance of her.

Let us not undertake to do everything at once. Let us not be so rash in declaring that we in the interest of the great body of the people will do something, and then do that which will injure the great body of the people. I want to go just as fast as certainty and wisdom will justify us in the interest of the people, but I am not willing to rush headlong into legislation that will cripple the commerce of the country, that will close up the markets against the commerce which comes from the far West or from the South; but let us go step by step, taking only those steps which we are sure we are right in taking, and give a little time to perfect legislation upon the subject.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I shall not enter into competition or rivalry with the Senator from Illinois——

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask him a question before he proceeds?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator know, and is he able to state here in the Senate, that any railroad company charges less to persons who furnish their own cars than it does when the shipments are made in the cars of the company? I ask because we ought not to act without knowledge.

Mr. GEORGE. I tried to get that information from the Senator from Illinois. I do not know exactly how he answered it.

Mr. PLATT. Then why should we act in a matter of this sort without any knowledge whatever. There is no necessity for it.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not get a very satisfactory answer from the Senator from Illinois.

As I was going on to remark, I shall not enter into any competition or rivalry with the Senator from Illinois as to the love of the dear people of this country. I am willing to acknowledge that so far as I am concerned he is wholly devoted, waking and sleeping, eating and drinking, night and day, in cold and in heat, in storm and in sunshine, to the dear interests of the great people of this country. I can not dispute that; and if it is any consolation to him to have me acknowledge it on the floor of the Senate, I do acknowledge it most thoroughly.

But, Mr. President, this is not a matter to be disposed of by exhortation. It is not a matter to be disposed of by impassioned appeals to one's own rectitude or his love for his fellow-men, or anything of that sort. It is a pure business proposition, whether a man who ships 10 barrels of flour upon a railroad train shall be charged $1 a barrel for that flour on 10 barrels, $10 for the lot, and a man who ships a car-load of 80 barrels shall get his car-load for 60 or 80 cents a barrel. That is the proposition, and I aver here, notwithstanding the statements made upon this floor, that under the operation of the interstate-commerce law as it now is, the habitual practice is to charge more per barrel or per package on a small shipment than when the shipment is made by the car-load; and I defy any Senator here to deny it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a single question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Does the Senator pretend to say or to argue that in the case of a railroad company receiving a car-load of flour from Mississippi and delivering it, say, at the port of New York, by reason of a contract entered into at a given rate, it would be fair to exact of that same company the transportation of 10 barrels of flour over the same route at the same price as a car-load, requiring the railroad company to send a car throughout the length of the entire line, gathering up pieces of freight at different stations along the road? Does he pretend to tell the Senate that the 10 barrels of flour shipped from the same point should be brought to New York at precisely the same rate per barrel at which the car-load should be brought?

Mr. GEORGE. That is precisely what I mean to say, but I will put it a little different from the way the Senator does. He seems to understand very well the operation of the railroad companies. Let me put it to him in a different way. A car-load of flour I understand is eighty barrels. A man at St. Louis buys eighty barrels of flour and puts it in as a car-load. It is delivered at a railroad station in Mississippi, say, at a dollar a barrel. Eight men buy ten barrels apiece in the city of St. Louis, and for those eighty barrels, belonging to those ten men and put in a car, when it is transported into Mississippi they are charged a dollar and a half, or some greater sum than $1. That is precisely what I mean to put down, if I can. I mean to say that on public instrumentalities men doing service for the public under public law shall not dare to charge one man for a pound or for any other measure of traffic more than a man who ships more is charged.

There seems to be a little difference between the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH]. The Senator from Alabama gets up in some excitement and with some emphasis declares that the law as it now stands is fully, completely, impartially administered. I have not assailed that. The Senator from Illinois, when pressed as to the wrongs done now, complains that the fault is in the administration of the law and not in the law itself. I leave these two learned doctors on the subject to settle that difference between themselves, and to ascertain whether the Senator from Alabama is right in saying that the law has been fully and fairly and strictly enforced, or whether the Senator from Illinois is right in saying that the law is perfect and the administration is wrong. That is a question I do not propose to settle.

But it is a fair object of legislation to remove a doubt in the construction of a statute. It is one of the most beneficent ends of legislation. The Senator from Illinois knows, as every Senator on this floor knows who has paid any attention to the business, that small shippers do pay more per package than the men who are able to ship by the car-load.

I desire to make a remark or two as to the amendment which I have offered. I could not exactly understand the answer of the Senator from Illinois as to what was done when a man or a firm or a corporation used his own cars in shipping his own goods as compared with the man who did not own cars. I desire to know, and I ask the Senator again, if in the shipment of beef the railroad company charges the man who ships beef in his own cars the exact price per pound or per hundred pounds that it charges a man who ships in cars belonging to the railroad company?

Mr. CULLOM. I stated to the Senator that I did not know the exact facts in that case; but taking a dressed-beef car, for instance, made for the purpose of transporting dressed beef, my impression is that such a car costs from $20,000 to $25,000. I am not sure I am right in that, but it costs a pretty large sum. The Senator must know, I think, or must admit, that if a man engaged in shipping dressed beef furnishes a car costing such a price and asks the railroad to haul it, the shipper must get a less rate per pound as freight on the beef in that car than he would get if the railroad furnished the car and transported its own car with the beef in it.

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly; and when you allow them to make a difference who can prevent such difference as to destroy the small shipper, the man who has not got his car? I ask the Senator, who does not know that the shipment of dressed beef to-day is in the hands of a few large firms, everybody else being excluded?

Mr. CULLOM. Let me make one further remark.

Mr. GEORGE. Who does not know the sad fact that whilst beef brings less to the raiser, the producer, to-day than ever before, it is as high if not higher than ever before to the consumer, so that somewhere between the man who raises the beef and the man who consumes the beef there are arrangements, there are charges, which equally rob the producer and the consumer?

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to say a word?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to say, in the first place, that there is an established arrangement, I understand, between railroads as to the transportation by one railroad of the cars of another; they charge so much for a car. Of course all the time almost every road, in every train it runs from one side of the country to the other, is carrying cars belonging to other roads. Here is an individual or a firm that is shipping beef from Chicago to New York or Boston or to Louisiana, and they ship some of it in their own cars. They are charged exactly the same rate that the railroad charges other people or other railroads for hauling their cars, taking into account weight and all the facts.

Again, the dressed-beef firm has not cars enough and it asks the railroad company to furnish them. As a matter of fact, so far as the firm that I know about is concerned, they are asking daily almost that the railroads shall furnish the cars and relieve them from the necessity of doing it. The railroads are not inclined to do it as fast as the firms or the shippers want them to do it; and where they do not do it there is a regularly established arrangement for the transportation of the car or a given number of pounds in it. Where they do do it they charge just the same to one shipper as they do to another, under the same circumstances, doing a like or the same business.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to ask either the Senator from Illinois or the Senator from Mississippi, who have undertaken this debate, if they will state to the country whether there is anything in the law or anything in the rulings of the commission or anything in the practice by which a distinction is made between the dressed-beef cars of one owner and those of another owner?

Mr. CULLOM. The law does not allow any such thing, and I have no information that any such thing is practiced.

Mr. McPHERSON. I can give the Senator the information in a single moment.

Mr. DAWES. If there is no distinction between the dressed-beef cars of one owner and the dressed-beef cars of another owner, what advantage can there possibly be to a large owner over a small owner?

Mr. McPHERSON. There can not be any.

Mr. REAGAN. I will say that I do not know what the facts now are, but it has not been long since the Cattle Eveners' Association had an advantage of $20 on a car by a drawback of that amount in their favor.

Mr. DAWES. That must be a gross violation of the statute.

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly it was a gross violation.

Mr. DAWES. I am quite with the Senator, if he will make good such a complaint as that, to see to it whether it lies at the door of the commission or at the door of Congress.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from Texas please repeat the statement he made? I failed to hear it.

Mr. REAGAN. I made the statement that I did not know what the facts are now, but that it had not been a great while since the Cattle Eveners' Association got a drawback of $20 per car upon cattle transported to the East from Chicago.

Mr. McPHERSON. I thought the Senator said they got $20 for the use of the car.

Mr. REAGAN. They got a drawback, an advantage of $20.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to say to the Senator from Texas——

Mr. REAGAN. I do not wish to give way at this time. I propose an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi, which I will ask the Secretary to read in its proper connection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the amendment—

After making reasonable deductions for the use of such car.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to make a statement in connection with what has been said. The commission has held in more than one case that a large shipper should not be charged less than a small shipper; for instance, that a man having ten car-loads of freight shall not be charged less per car than one having a single car. The commission has held that, and rightly held it, and it is in conformity with the judgment of Mr. Fink and some of the best railroad managers of the country.

There is a difference between shipping by the car-load and in small packages that we can not well overlook in considering this case. Shipping by the car-load may be, and generally ought to be, somewhat cheaper than shipping in small packages less than a car-load, and so far as any argument would ignore that distinction I think it is erroneous.

The amendment which I propose is that when persons ship in cars of their own they shall pay the same rate of transportation as if they shipped in the cars of the railroad company, deducting the reasonable cost of the car. That gives a fair rule.

There has grown up in the country the practice of shippers owning their own cars. Some transporting companies own their own cars. It would hardly be just, since that has been allowed to be the case, to say that a law shall be passed which would compel them to lose the use of their cars, or to sell them at less than their value. But we can avoid that injustice by saying that when they ship in their own cars they shall pay as much as others do, less the value of the use of their cars. That makes it equitable, it makes it right; and with that modification I will vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

The question was asked with some degree of confidence of the Senator from Mississippi whether he could point to any case in which some shippers were charged less than others. I separate the question of the transportation of ordinary freights from the question of transportation in the cars of individuals. Whether it is true or not, the commission in its report to the Secretary of the Interior recommended that legislation was necessary in order to enable them to control that very kind of cases; so that they thought it necessary. I suppose if that fact had been known to the Senator from Mississippi it would have been an ample answer to the interrogatory so confidently propounded to him. The commission believed it was necessary, but from some cause we have not so far incorporated the necessary legislation.

While the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi reaches but to a single branch of the subject, and does not reach sleeping-cars and some others that I mentioned awhile ago, it does mention the kind in which one of the greatest abuses exists; that is, the cases in which individuals use their own cars to ship their own products and thus get an advantage over those who are unable to own cars and ship their products themselves.

The able argument of the Senator from Mississippi, showing the danger of such legislation as will enable the large corporations and men to absorb and destroy the smaller ones, can be met, without doing injustice to anybody, by saying, as I propose by my amendment to say, that they shall pay the same price for the transportation of their products as people who ship in the cars of the railroad company, less the value of the use of the cars that carry their freight.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, I wish to say a single word respecting the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. There is not a single line of railroad in the United States to-day of any prominence or any importance that does not belong to an association of railroads which have a fixed rule with respect to the transfer of cars from one line of railroad to another. For instance, the cars owned upon one line of road and running in conjunction with and forming a continued line, say from the extreme West to the seaboard, allow the line of road that owns the car a certain amount of mileage per mile when it reaches the junction road or the road which forms the connecting link. The rule is three-quarters of a cent a mile for the use of a car.

If any individual wished to build cars and put them upon the line of railroad or upon any of these roads, under the general arrangements which have been made by the railroads with one another, that individual would be entitled to three-quarters of a cent per mile for the use of his car.

There are certain railroad lines in this country that scarcely own a single car. I can name you one. One of the great trunk lines of road, which transports perhaps as much freight from the West to the East as any single line, does not own to-day scarcely a single freight car upon its line. It does pay the owner of the car, whether it belongs to a rolling-stock company—I mean by that, construction companies that build cars to lease to railroads—or whether it belongs to an individual who has built a certain peculiar kind of car for his own peculiar business, like the dressed-beef business, to which the Senator from Massachusetts referred, which requires a peculiar sort of car, a peculiarly constructed car, capable of being refrigerated; and, as a matter of course, all the cars are not capable of refrigeration.

Hence, as I say, there is a regular rule, there is a law which governs all railroads and which as between railroad companies is just as rigid as the interstate-commerce law itself. There is also a rule governing what shall be the amount of loss that the owner of the car or the railroad company running the car shall stand in case of a wreck or a collision. It has been worked down to a nicety, until there is a regular master mechanic's law governing the question of repairs. There is an absolute inflexible rule governing the amount of compensation.

Now, we will get down to the dressed-beef car of which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] speaks. There are four or five companies transporting dressed beef from the extreme West to the seaboard. I understand they go West as far as Kansas City. Certainly in Chicago there are great slaughterers of live-stock who own these cars themselves, and if they did not own the cars they would not be transporting any dressed beef eastward, for the railroad companies would not build the cars for them. Railroad companies never make experiments in cars, and just so long as it is an experiment the public must do it, but they never refuse to run experiment cars at regular rates.

The railroad companies receive those cars on their line with a car-load of freight just exactly as they would receive their own cars or if the freight were placed within their own cars. They transport the car to New York over their line for a certain fixed sum, which is an advertised rate, as the interstate-commerce law requires, but they do not own the car.

Now, what do they do? They turn around and pay to the owner of the car filled with his own freight three-fourths of a cent per ton per mile for the use of it, and no more. So it practically makes not one particle of difference whether the railroad company owns the car or the individual owns it, for there is a fixed rule between the railroads governing that matter, and it is a just one. Some railroads think they can not afford to own the cars, and they hire all their rolling-stock.

We will suppose that the Senator from Mississippi desires to transport dressed beef, as he has made that the subject of his debate, from the city of Chicago to New York. He goes to the different railroad companies, seven or eight of them, leading out of Chicago, and he desires them to furnish appliances to transport his dressed beef. "Oh, no," they say; "we have cattle-cars, an abundance of them, for transporting live cattle from Chicago to New York, and why should we build you a peculiar kind of car, that is unfit for any other purpose on earth, to enable you to try an experiment, to know whether you can get dressed beef between Chicago and New York or not without spoiling? We will make no experiment; we have the appliances under which you can reach the city of New York with your car-load of cattle, and you may ship them in our cars or you may provide your own; and if you will provide your own car I will pay you the same mileage on your car exactly that I pay the owner of the live-stock car. We hire all our cars. We hire the live-stock car that transports the car-load of live cattle. We hire the dressed-beef car from the owner of that car, and we pay exactly the same mileage upon the dressed-beef car that we pay upon the live-stock car."

Now, what injury is done? Who is hurt by it? The railroad company prefer to do that to building their own cars, and every line of railroad in this country from the Gulf of Mexico to the St. Lawrence River or Lake Ontario is governed by the same rule as to mileage.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator dispute the statement of the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], as a matter of fact, that by some trick or some mystery, not known to the ordinary mind, there comes out a result that some particular corporation or ownership gets an advantage in some mysterious way, which amounts to what he says?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will answer the Senator, because I think that that matter was very well ventilated before the Senate at the time the original act was passed. There was a period or time from 1875 to 1880 when the railroad companies——

Mr. DAWES. I do not speak of anything beyond the interstate-commerce law.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Oh, that was long before the interstate-commerce law; I have never heard of anything of that kind since. Of course the railroad companies were anxious to get business.

They did establish, as I have heard stated here upon the floor of the Senate, a pool, by which they agreed to pool their earnings, and they agreed to give, as the Senator from Texas said, a certain compensation to a certain set of men called eveners, who would see to it that every line of railroad got its full portion of business at a given maintained rate.

Mr. DAWES. The important question is, whether that is possible now?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Not at all. Under the interstate-commerce law that would be subject to high fine and to imprisonment. Therefore it is all nonsense and perfectly absurd to talk about what took place ten or fifteen years ago as an argument at the present time.

Now, the Senator from Mississippi proposes by an amendment he offers to the bill that every line of railroad shall own the cars, whether they wish to do it or not, or whether it would be profitable or not.

In other words, if you want to establish the biggest monopoly in the world adopt the amendment the Senator from Mississippi proposes, for no line of railroad except one worth enough to own its railroad and its cars and to try all kinds of experiments could enter into it—indiscriminate car building—and then as a matter of course if successful they would get a monopoly of the business.

In respect to the statement made by the Senator from Mississippi before he took his seat, I wish to ask him a simple question. Does the Senator from Mississippi himself believe the statement that he made at that particular time as to its result? He stated that there were dressed-beef operators in Chicago who are controlling the market; that while beef to-day was worth less to the producer than ever before, there was no reduction in the price to the consumer.

Let us follow that out to its natural and logical conclusion and see where the Senator lands. Formerly in any State of the Union, anywhere within reach of a line of railroad a man could take a single car-load of beef, drive them to a station, load them upon a car belonging to the railroad company itself, or one that they will hire, and transport it to the consumer in any market in the United States, and that can be done at the same rate under the interstate-commerce law that a man can have who transports a thousand cars.

Now, what perfect nonsense it is to say that that producer of the single car-load of beef, when the consumer is paying just as much as he ever was, would be compelled to submit to such a reduction as that. Supply and demand regulate the market everywhere. When a man is enabled to reach a market with the product of his own farm and reaches the consumer with his product, what a perfect absurdity it is to say that beef is lower in the country to the producer than it ever was. And yet he says higher to the consumer. Why, I ask, shall beef be low in the hands of the producer and very high to the consumer, with all the avenues of transportation open to the farmer, with cheap rates, as cheap to the farmer as to anybody? If the fact which the Senator states as a fact did exist, it would not be creditable to the farmers' intelligence, but the fact does not exist. Beef is alike cheap to the producer and consumer.

Mr. President, as I was saying before, to add to the bill the amendment which the Senator from Mississippi proposes would simply be to defeat this proposed act. It would help to build up a monopoly in the hands of a single rich railroad, while the poorer lines of railroad would not get the business because they could not build the cars necessary to do it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. REAGAN. I propose to modify that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi accept the modification made by the Senator from Texas?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir; I do.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, with the modification offered by the Senator from Texas.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the end of section 3 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, the following proviso:

Provided, That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to carry or transport any commodity for any shipper in a car or vehicle owned, leased, or in any way controlled by such shipper: And provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any shipper to make any contract with any carrier to convey the property of such shipper in cars or vehicles owned or controlled by such shipper, or to charge persons shipping in their own cars less than is charged for like service in the cars of the railroad company after deducting a reasonable compensation for the use of the cars of such shipper.

Mr. REAGAN. I thought the amendment I offered would obviate the difficulty in the language there. I did not understand it. I see it does not. According to the amendment there would still be a prohibition against shipments in a car other than the company's car. I think that should be modified.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I see from the reading of the amendment that the first paragraph of the amendment makes it unlawful and a misdemeanor for any line of railroad to contract to receive or to take the cars of any shipper, or any company, or any person, or any manufacturer who has cars to furnish, or who leases cars. Then it ends there and a new paragraph begins, and it is provided that the shipper himself shall not contract with the railroad company except upon certain other conditions.

Mr. DAWES. It results in this, that every car has got to change ownership as it passes from one road to another or else the freight has got to be reshipped.

Mr. MCPHERSON. They would have to break bulk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as it now stands is the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir; and I withdraw that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. With a view of allowing the Senator from Texas to offer his proposition.

Mr. REAGAN. I can not offer that amendment to the Senate, because I have already in conversation agreed to another amendment of the committee that will obviate the necessity for it at present.

Mr. GEORGE. Then I will offer it.

Mr. CULLOM. Let me appeal to the Senator from Mississippi. The Committee on Interstate Commerce discussed the amendment which the Senator now holds in his hand over and over again for a number of days, and concluded that it was almost impracticable to embody that sort of provision in the bill and make it operate as part of the system. My purpose is between now and the next session to get up an amendment, if I can, which will meet the case.

I offered substantially that amendment myself. After investigation, however, I made up my mind that it was not best to put it on this bill; but in the future it is my purpose, and I think it is the purpose of the committee, to investigate all the matters involved in that amendment, with a view of ascertaining whether or not we can not at a future session provide proper legislation covering all the ground that is in the amendment which the Senator has.

Mr. GEORGE. Has the Senator also considered this question?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly. If there is any provision necessary I will certainly look into it.

Mr. BLAIR. The discussion indicates how absolutely impossible it is that the inequalities, the difficulties, the burdens, and the oppressions which exist under our transportation system shall be removed until such time as the transportation as a unit is taken control of by the people as a whole. I do not believe myself that it is possible by the operation of the interstate-commerce law or by any system of legislation to embody the remedy which is sought by the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi; but when the transportation, that great element in the cost of production to the consumer, is furnished to the community at large in such a way that every producer of things transported stands exactly on an equality with every other producer, then these difficulties will be removed; but this progress implies a transfer of the ownership, or at least a transfer of the function of transportation from individuals and from corporations to the people as a whole. That is a tremendous step in the direction of socialism. Whether the people are prepared to take that step now or are to take that step in the future, is a question which we shall be obliged to consider if we inquire what legislation will result in the removal of those inequalities, those hardships which result from the attrition of large accumulations of capital with small capital, men of large means with men of small means.

Mr. President, there is another difficulty in this matter. The transportation system of the country as it is now managed is done by corporations, the creatures of the Government, artificial persons created by the act of law, and these corporations have been invested with certain functions. We give them these functions as an entirety, and they are the transporters, the common carriers. What do we find these common carriers doing? Without the consent of Congress, without the consent of the States which gave them existence, they transfer these corporate functions to individuals and to partnerships, and thus, without the authority of law, the common carrier bargains away a portion of the functions he has agreed to perform from time to time and which he engaged to transact by virtue of the corporate powers intrusted to him. Thus it is that these parties construct for themselves the cars for the accommodation of their business between particular points. They do this as individuals for their own interest and in their own interest, and thus they come to control that transportation in which they are interested; and in order to get the business at all it is a necessary consequence that the corporation which is created by law and which is charged by law with the important public function of transportation, makes the best terms it can with this private individual or private party, so that that individual gets a percentage; and so the road-bed is given up to the owners of this rolling-stock at whatever rate the owner of the rolling-stock chooses to give, and it is at such a rate as that, on the whole, the cost of transportation falls more heavily on the private individual, the small capitalist, the small transactor of the same species of business, than it does upon the man or the corporation or the partnership which is in the possession of the rolling-stock for its own accommodation and so is able to compel the public at large to yield to it the performance of a part of the corporate function that by law has been given to the common carrier and which he has promised to perform so as to give to everybody, high and low, rich and poor, an equality of rights.

I look upon this as a violation of the chartered obligations of the railroad companies. I do not consider that a railroad company has any right whatever as a creature of law thus to farm out its functions, to give to this man the privilege of constructing and operating its rolling-stock, to the other man some other privilege, and so all the way round. If it may give to one individual the right to construct rolling-stock, that in which he is interested, it may farm to another man another privilege, and thus liberate itself entirely, and in this day of competition work out to the community at large the most diverse and glaring instances of injustice which can be imagined.

There is no other way, I believe, for us to do but to deal with the corporations directly, and compel them to perform their own work and to stand upon their contracts with individuals without farming out any portions of their plant, by which they yield the control of their business to those who are able to have it done on their own terms.

I only make these suggestions as the subject is passing away from the Senate, but whenever it comes up for action it is an important one to be considered.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], who has charge of the bill, as I have not been present during all the period of its consideration. I find these words commencing at the bottom of page 5:

> It shall be unlawful for any common carrier, party to any joint tariff, to charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for the transportation of persons or property, or for any services in connection therewith, between any points as to which a joint rate, fare, or charge is named thereon than is specified in the schedule filed with the commission in force at the time.

I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois why the committee have incorporated a new principle into the interstate-commerce law? In the interstate-commerce law we did make it unlawful to charge a greater compensation for carriage over a certain length of road. There is a schedule rate, and the companies are to advertise their rates in some public place where all can see them. The interstate-commerce law in the past as it has been enforced required that there should be no excess of charge over that advertised rate. Now it is proposed here to fix the rate absolutely; it shall not be "greater or less" than the advertised rate. I should like to know why that provision is inserted?

Mr. CULLOM. I can answer the Senator very easily. The law as it stands as to rates upon any railroad provides that it shall not change its rates without notice as to an advance. Now we amend the law and provide that there shall be three days' notice before a reduction shall be had. The law as it stands already on the statute-book reads as follows:

> And when any such common carrier shall have established and published its rates, fares, and charges in compliance with the provisions of this section, it shall be unlawful for such common carrier to charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation.

That is the language of the law as it is now, and the amendment only provides that joint rates shall not be changed without notice. The present law is a little indefinite as to whether they were required to be made public. The same language is used and applied to joint rates.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The interstate-commerce law was passed to prevent extortion in rates, to require that all should have equal rates. In other words, it was passed in order that there might be no discrimination as between individuals. The rates are advertised, and each and every individual, whether he is a shipper of a car-load of freight or a shipper of 100 car-loads of freight, pays exactly the same rate for transportation. Now, it is proposed here to establish an arbitrary rule. Instead of preventing extortion above that rate or exceeding the rate, you now say they shall not go below it. In other words, you are now legislating in this way to benefit the railroads a thousand times more than individual shippers.

Mr. CULLOM. The law provides that the railroads shall publish their rates, exactly what they charge. Then it provides that the railroads shall not change their rates until they have given notice. Now, the proposed law simply says that they shall neither charge more nor less until they have given notice that they desire to change the rates. That is all there is of it. There may be as much unjust discrimination in some cases by reducing rates as by raising them.

Mr. MCPHERSON. No; there is a very wide difference.

Mr. REAGAN. The language of this bill is the same as the language of the interstate-commerce law; that is, under the law the transportation companies are only required to publish their rates on their own particular lines. There was no regulation for publishing the rates where their lines were prolonged in connection with other companies so as to make through rates. Now, it is provided in this bill that when they make those rates the commission may require them to publish the rates, and when published they shall not charge more or less than their published rates. This covers a longer haul than the other did.

Mr. MCPHERSON. That becomes a portion of the rates of the road itself, a part of the new line of road.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, where there is a prolongation by different companies, where different companies agree to a certain through rate.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I know of no reason why it is necessary in a case of that kind. I can see very good reason why it should not be in the law, unless we have found it necessary to hold all the parts of a long line of railroad together by some provision of that kind. I can see no reason why it is necessary, and I do not see any part of this bill that deals with that question as to transportation through Canada.

Mr. CULLOM. There is nothing in this bill about transportation through Canada. The object is to prevent unjust discrimination. In other words, a railroad publishes its rates. You go to the railroad agent and say, "I want to ship to a given point at a particular date," and unless these words are placed in the law they would be at liberty to give you a less rate; but they are not permitted to do so under this bill until the change of rate is advertised, so as to give every one a chance to know it.

Mr. McPHERSON. Under the interstate-commerce law, if they gave a less rate to Mr. A, they would be obliged to give a similar rate to Mr. B, and they would be obliged to do it at once. The result is that every shipper over that line of road will be entitled to the reduction of rates. In other words, this is altogether in the interest of the shipper.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McPHERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask him if, the rate being established and published, he goes to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at Jersey City and says: "I wish to ship twenty-five car-loads of flour to Washington; your published rate is 10 cents a barrel, I will give you 5," and they say, "done," and it is done—I ask whether they have violated the law in doing that?

Mr. McPHERSON. Not at all, if they give the rate of 5 cents to every man who ships on that given day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have they violated the law in doing that thing?

Mr. McPHERSON. I think not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Suppose I go to them in the afternoon, my friend having gone in the morning, and say: "I wish to ship ten car-loads of flour to Washington; your published rate is 10 cents a barrel; I want to give you 5" and they say, "No, you must pay our published rate," and I pay it. Under the present law, what would they violate?

Mr. McPHERSON. They would be subject to fine and imprisonment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How?

Mr. McPHERSON. By that discrimination.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They have not made any discrimination in this to the public. They gave you a favor. They do not choose to favor me. They have held out only the published rate. I stand by the published rate. They may carry for you for nothing if they choose under the present law. The provision in this amendment now proposed is to meet that kind of favoritism, which in some way or other is practiced by some of the corporations. I refer to that particular one only for illustration, knowing nothing about it. Unless they are held up as well as down to their published rates to all persons while those rates are in force, there will be a continued favoritism that plunders one man for the benefit of another.

Mr. McPHERSON. I remember hearing this statement or one something like it on the floor of the Senate when the original interstate-commerce law was passed, that if public men were trying to devise some method by which railroads could be benefited more than another, a better way could not be devised than the interstate-commerce law. It has been in operation for over a year, and during that time the railroad companies have received about 16 per cent. more for the transportation of freight and merchandise than they did under the old policy, and the difference the people have paid.

Mr. REAGAN. By making high charges for the purpose of making the law odious.

Mr. McPHERSON. The cost of transportation in this country for the amount of freight carried has been 15 or 16 per cent. more under the interstate-commerce law than it was for two or three years preceding its passage. What benefit have the public got? They have this benefit, they have this satisfaction, and only this, that we have the railroads now under Congressional control. In other words, we have the railroad system of this country in a condition where the railroads have recognized Congressional power and the right of Congress to legislate in respect to them, but the public are paying for it all the time. Since the passage of the interstate-commerce law the railroads have increased their receipts, and some which were unable to pay expenses prior to its passage have been able to pay dividends out of the same patronage they had before.

Mr. TELLER. What does the Senator think of the bill to compel the railroads to deal more equitably, having destroyed all favoritism that existed by which they gave one shipper a low rate and another shipper a high rate?

Mr. McPHERSON. I think to-day there is as much discrimination in rates as there ever was before.

Mr. CULLOM. The records do not show it.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from New Jersey is correct, the railroads are violating the provisions of the law.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not make answer as to that; but I think there is really as much discrimination as ever.

Mr. TELLER. That is in violation of the statute.

Mr. McPHERSON. You are now legislating, you are amending the existing interstate-commerce law in such a way that it seems to me to be perfectly absurd to leave that clause in the interstate-commerce law which prohibits pooling. Here you make an arbitrary rule that the railroad companies shall fix a rate, and where they have fixed the rate and it is advertised they can not charge a lower rate even if all the conditions were such as to justify them in doing it. As it is to-day, a railroad company may lower its rates, may reduce them 50 per cent. on a given day, but that reduction, in order to conform to the law, must be for all shippers over its line on that given day, or until some new advertisement is made and a new schedule of rates is published. For instance, grain, provisions, or anything of that kind might be sent from Chicago, not at the advertised rate, but at a lower rate, if a foreign market could be found for it; but if the railroad company wished to accommodate that shipper by reducing the rate 50 per cent. from the advertised rate and was not willing to make the same rate to every shipper of the same kind of goods under exactly the same condition, that could not be done. I claim there would be no violation of the law in it now.

Mr. CULLOM. The Committee on Interstate Commerce investigated pretty thoroughly the question of giving notice before reducing rates, and we had information before us from very many shippers in different parts of the country, some of them desiring five days' notice, some of them ten, some of them even as high as thirty, but others were a little in doubt whether any notice at all was best, and the committee thought that, in view of the uncertainty and doubt as to the exact time, we should fix it at three days' notice before a reduction should be made, and ascertain by experience after that what the operation of it would be, and whether it would be beneficial or not, or whether a longer time should be required than the three days. But we thought it unsafe to make it longer than three days as a beginning and as, I may say, an experiment on the question of time of notice given of a reduction.

I can not see that any possible wrong can come from giving that brief notice before a reduction shall be made, and certainly some notice ought to be required or an announcement be required when a reduction is made so that everybody can get the benefit of it alike, and we thought it was best in the interest of the shippers—not the railroads, but in the interest of the shippers, some of them asking as high as thirty days—that a brief time should be given before a reduction should be made.

Mr. McPHERSON. Does the Senator pretend to say that under this provision as to the days, rates can be advanced on the same notice?

Mr. CULLOM. Before an advance can be made there must be ten days' notice.

Mr. McPHERSON. I understand that, but if the other matter of reduction is left where the interstate-commerce law left it, so that a railroad company to-day may give to the public the benefit of a reduction at once without asking of anybody the privilege of doing it, and be compelled to give the reduction it proposed to give to all shippers at the same time, then your bill is a grave censure of the law.

Mr. CULLOM. All I have to say is that the great majority of those who were heard on the subject, business men and shippers, favored a notice before a reduction of rates.

Mr. GORMAN. I concur very much with what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] said. I admit that so far as concerns the operations of the railroads, from the day the interstate-commerce law went into effect, owing to the course of the Interstate-Commerce Commission, there has been less charged upon through rates than was ever charged in five years preceding except in the cases where they were warring with each other; and notwithstanding that, the aggregate receipts, by reason of the large increase of the volume of business known as through business, have exceeded the receipts during the years prior to the passage of the act.

I desire to make the further statement that there is not a commercial community along the seaboard or in the interior where it has not been demonstrated and recognized by everybody to be the fact that there is no longer a hundredth part of the discrimination between firms and individuals that there was prior to the passage of this law.

Mr. DAWES. What has been the effect on local trade?

Mr. GORMAN. In the matter of local trade there has been greater uniformity than formerly.

Mr. CULLOM. And great reductions in rates.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes, sir; reductions have been made. There has been a readjustment of rates which has produced contentment with the present condition of affairs in comparison to what it was prior to the passage of the law, and I venture the assertion, though I have not the statistics before me, that there are 50 per cent. fewer suits against railroad companies because of discrimination since the passage of the interstate-commerce act than there were prior to it.

Mr. DAWES. What has been the effect on the aggregate earnings of the companies?

Mr. GORMAN. While the receipts of the railroad companies have been increased very largely, it is not because of increased rates, but because of the increased volume of business.

Mr. DAWES. Then I understand the Senator from Maryland to say that while the through rates as a whole have been in the aggregate less, and while the local rates have produced greater content and satisfaction, still, on the whole, the earnings of railroads have not suffered under this law.

Mr. GORMAN. The business is increasing every year as the population increases and manufactures and products increase. Those things swell the gross receipts of railroads.

In regard to the interstate-commerce law, the same effect has been had in the United States at large that was had in the State of New York when the State law was passed there. The railroads have not been crippled; they have carried on their business with greater satisfaction; the public have been content, and overcharges which formerly existed have not been made.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I know that the Senator from Maryland is qualified to testify in this matter. I have stated that the public have paid 15 cents more per ton for the average transportation from the West to the East—I speak now of the great trunk lines and the great receiving points—than they had paid in the two years preceding the passage of the law. I understand the Senator to say that the railroads never charged less than now, except in times when they were fighting each other. In other words, the earnings have not been more than they were in olden times, except when the roads were in battle. I never saw the time before the passage of the interstate-commerce bill, I fail to recall the year, in which the roads were not in battle. They were in a fight always; they were in competition always, the most active competition for business, and the rates were made lower by reason of it. But I stated that the public have paid more for transportation under the interstate-commerce law than they did before the passage of the law. That was my statement.

I move to strike out the words I have referred to on the fifth page and wherever else they appear. I have not had time to find all the places where they occur in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator indicate the words proposed to be stricken out?

Mr. MCPHERSON. The words "or less" in line 116, where the bill reads:

It shall be unlawful for any common carrier, party to any joint tariff, to charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for the transportation of persons or property, or for any services in connection therewith.

I move to strike out the words "or less."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, on page 6, line 116, after the word "greater," it is proposed to strike out "or less."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This amendment having been adopted in Committee of the Whole is not subject to amendment at this stage of the bill. The Senator can move to amend it in the Senate. If there be no further amendments the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If the amendment I moved is in order now I move it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will first put the question on concurring in the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the reserved amendment indicated by the Senator from New Jersey; which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, on page 6, line 116, after the word "greater," it is proposed to strike out the words "or less."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on this amendment of the Senator from New Jersey to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 1669) authorizing the Mississippi and Louisiana Bridge and Railroad Company, of Natchez, Miss., to construct a bridge over the Mississippi River, at or near Natchez, Miss.; and

Joint resolution (S. R. 96) authorizing the District commissioners to designate a site for a statue of Benjamin Franklin.

SALE OF FORT OMAHA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 671) to provide for the sale of the site at Fort Omaha, Nebr., the sale or removal of the improvements thereof, and for a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon; which was on page 2, line 1, after the word "Attorney-General," to insert:

And provided further, That not more than one-third of said sum shall be expended in the purchase of a site; and the whole expenditure for site and improvement shall not exceed the sum of $200,000.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

FORFEITURE OF UNEARNED RAILROAD LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1430) to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes; which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendment of the House and ask for a conference thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. DOLPH, and Mr. WALTHALL were appointed.

LANDS IN DENVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to prepare a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (H. R. 3300) to amend an act to enable the city of Denver to purchase certain land for cemetery purposes, and deliver the same to the Senate, and request that body to furnish the House with a duplicate copy of the amendments of the Senate to said bill, and indorse on the duplicate engrossed bill and amendments the action had in the Senate thereon, and return the same to the House; the original bill and amendments having been lost.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1818) to grant to the town of Moscow, in Idaho Territory, certain lands for cemetery purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3219) to increase the pension of Keyes P. Cool, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

VETOED PENSION BILLS.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] to print 5,000 additional copies of Senate Report No. 1667, being the report of the majority of the Committee on Pensions on vetoed pension bills, have directed me to report in favor of printing the same, including the views of the minority, and, as amended, they recommend its adoption. The cost will be $60 only.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion provides for the printing of the report of the majority of the Committee on Pensions on the veto messages.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be printed and lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

Mr. HAWLEY. The motion as referred to the committee is the barest informal memorandum. I can put it in the form of a resolution. It is simply that 5,000 copies of Report No. 1667 be printed for the use of the Senate. The amendment includes the minority report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri desire to have the report lie over?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. MCPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 3295) to amend section 563 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. COLQUITT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims, under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MCPHERSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, it was Ordered, That Samuel W. Ravenel and others, citizens of Boonville, Mo., have permission to withdraw from the files of the Senate a petition presented to the Senate March 9, 1886, praying for the passage of a bill prohibiting Chinese immigration, under the rules of the Senate.

ACCOUNTS UNDER THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1729.

Mr. BLAIR. Before that is taken up, I give notice that to-morrow morning I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 405) providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law.

SEACOAST DEFENSES.

Mr. STEWART. I must insist on the regular order. It has been laid over from time to time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the bill (S. 62) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses.

ARKANSAS RIVER BRIDGE AT CUMMINGS' LANDING.

Mr. BERRY. I appeal to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] to let the regular order be informally laid aside that I may call up the bill I have mentioned. It is important it should be passed at once. It will cause no debate whatever.

Mr. DOLPH. I want consideration of the regular order. I do not propose to discuss it, but I want to get a vote on it. If it is up I will yield to the Senator informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is before the Senate. The bill referred to by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated by title, if there be no objection.

Mr. BERRY. It is Order of Business 1729.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 1729, being the bill (S. 3215) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Cummings' Landing, Lincoln County, Arkansas.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 3, line 4, after the word "shall," to strike out "not to be less than 160 feet in the clear" and insert "be of such width as the Secretary of War shall prescribe;" in line 8, after the word "spans," to strike out "be not less than 10 feet above" and insert "shall be of such height above;" and in line 11, after the word "bridge," to insert "as may be directed by the Secretary of War in the interests of navigation;" so as to read:

SEC. 3. That the said bridge shall be constructed with a draw or pivot-span, which shall be over the main channel of the river at an accessible navigable point, and the openings on each side of the pivot-pier shall be of such width as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, and, as nearly as practicable, both of said openings shall be accessible at all stages of water; that the spans shall be of such height above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the lowest point of the superstructure of said bridge as may be directed by the Secretary of War in the interests of navigation; that the piers and draw-rests of said bridge shall be built parallel with the current at that stage of the river which is most important for navigation, and the bridge itself at right angles thereto; and that no riprap or other outside protection for imperfect foundations be permitted to approach nearer than 4 feet to the surface of the water at its extreme low stage, or otherwise to encroach upon the channel-ways provided for in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 4, after the words "whenever the," to strike out "Congress" and insert "Secretary of War;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved, and the right to require any changes in said structure, or its entire removal at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever the Secretary of War shall decide that the public interest requires it, is also expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE NEAR KANSAS CITY.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VEST. I ask my colleague to withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I withdraw the motion for my colleague.

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10628) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Clay County and Jackson County, Missouri, at a point to be selected consistent with the interests of river navigation between Kansas City, Mo., and a point within 5 miles below said city, to report it without amendment; and I ask that it be put on its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIENS OF JUDGMENTS AND DECREES.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask the Senator to yield to me a moment.

Mr. DAWES. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask for the consideration of Calendar No. 1180, being House bill 8180. It will take but a minute. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8180) to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has heretofore been read at length and the amendments of the Committee on the Judiciary have been agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to submit two amendments. I move to insert, in line 12, after the word "county," the words "or parish in the State of Louisiana;" so as to read:

Provided, That whenever the laws of any State require a judgment or decree of a State court to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or any other thing to be done, in a particular manner, or in a certain office or county or parish in the State of Louisiana, before a lien shall attach, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I also, by instruction of the Committee on the Judiciary, offer the following amendment as an additional section to the bill:

SEC. 3. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to require the docketing of the judgment or decree of a United States court, or the filing of a transcript thereof, in any State office within the same county or parish in the State of Louisiana in which the judgment or decree is entered, in order that such judgment or decree may be a lien on any property within such county.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Iowa to explain that.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The province of that amendment is to provide against the necessity of having these transcripts of judgments and decrees rendered in the United States courts, filed in the local offices of the State within the same county where the judgment or decree has been rendered. There can be no propriety in requiring that to be done, because it would be merely going to the expense of having two places instead of one in such county; that is to say, for instance, in the city and county of New York, if this amendment shall be adopted, it will not be necessary to take transcripts of judgments and decrees in the United States courts in that city and county and file them in the county office in order to constitute a lien; but in all other counties, where the United States courts are not located, and the States have made provision for the filing of those transcripts, then this bill will have effect.

Mr. CALL. What is the meaning of the provision as to Louisiana?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is merely for the purpose of designating parishes there in addition to counties in other States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. WILSON of Iowa, Mr. EVARTS, and Mr. GEORGE were appointed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After nine minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 10, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate July 9, 1888.

UNITED STATES JUDGE.

John H. Keatley, of Iowa, to be United States judge for the district of Alaska, vice Lafayette Dawson, resigned.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES.

Roderick Rose, of Dakota Territory, to be associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Dakota, vice W. H. Francis, whose term has expired.

Hugh W. Weir, of Pennsylvania, to be chief-justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Idaho, vice J. B. Hays, deceased.

Charles H. Berry, of Minnesota, to be associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Idaho, vice Case Broderick, whose term has expired.

Elliott Sandford, of New York, to be chief-justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Utah, vice C. S. Zane, whose term has expired.

John W. Judd, of Tennessee, to be associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Utah, as provided for by the act of Congress approved June 25, 1888.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

Henry M. Barlow, of Delaware, to be collector of customs for the district of Delaware, in the State of Delaware, to succeed Henry F. Pickels, whose term of service has expired.

James E. Otis, of New Jersey, to be collector of customs for the district of Little Egg Harbor, in the State of New Jersey, to succeed George W. Mathis, whose term of service will expire by limitation on July 6, 1888.

REVENUE SERVICE.

First Lieut. Washington C. Coulson, of Indiana, to be a captain in the revenue service of the United States, in the place of Capt. James M. Selden, deceased.

Second Lieut. James B. Butt, of Pennsylvania, to be a first lieutenant in the revenue service of the United States, in the place of First Lieut. Washington C. Coulson, to be promoted.

Andrew J. Henderson, of the District of Columbia, to be a third lieutenant in the revenue service of the United States, in the place of Third Lieut. Edward F. Kimball, resigned.

Godfrey L. Carden, of Illinois, to be a third lieutenant in the revenue service of the United States, in the place of Third Lieut. Howard M. Broadbent, promoted.

William V. E. Jacobs, of Maryland, to be a third lieutenant in the revenue service of the United States, in the place of Third Lieut. William E. Reynolds, promoted.

Staley M. Landrey, of Indiana, to be a third lieutenant in the revenue service of the United States, in the place of Third Lieut. William E. W. Hall, resigned.

Frank L. Smith, of Massachusetts, to be a third lieutenant in the revenue service of the United States, in the place of Third Lieut. Charles A. Barnes, resigned.

Preston H. Uberroth, of Pennsylvania, to be a third lieutenant in the revenue service of the United States, in the place of Third Lieut. Daniel P. Foley, promoted.

Eugene Vallat, jr., to be second assistant engineer in the revenue service of the United States, in the place of Second Assistant Engineer Frank W. Waterman, resigned.

POSTMASTERS.

William A. Hall, to be postmaster at Phœnix, in the county of Maricopa and Territory of Arizona, in the place of George E. Mowry, whose commission expired June 16, 1888.

Hugh A. Clark, to be postmaster at San Jacinto, in the county of San Diego and State of California, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

John Field, to be postmaster at Cloverdale, in the county of Sonoma and State of California, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Margaret A. Finn, to be postmaster at Santa Monica, in the county of Los Angeles and State of California, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Josiah B. Moores, to be postmaster at Ontario, in the county of San Bernardino and State of California, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Robert J. Pauli, to be postmaster at Sonoma, in the county of Sonoma and State of California, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

William L. Smith, to be postmaster at Selma, in the county of Fresno and State of California, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Charles E. Flanery, to be postmaster at Akron, in the county of Washington and State of Colorado, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Joseph M. Graham, to be postmaster at Buena Vista, in the county of Chaffee and State of Colorado, in the place of Carlos B. Wilson, whose commission expired July 1, 1888.

Alonzo C. Allen, to be postmaster at Suffield, in the county of Hartford and State of Connecticut, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Frank P. Smith, to be postmaster at Faulkton, in the county of Faulk and Territory of Dakota, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

William Marshall, to be postmaster at Farmington, in the county of Fulton and State of Illinois, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Drake H. Vancil, to be postmaster at Cobden, in the county of Union and State of Illinois, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

William Swint, to be postmaster at Boonville, in the county of Warrick and State of Indiana, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

James R. Williams, to be postmaster at Danville, in the county of Hendricks and State of Indiana, in the place of Archibald P. Pounds, deceased.

Patrick H. Wilson, to be postmaster at Worthington, in the county of Greene and State of Indiana, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Martin Cooper, to be postmaster at Forest City, in the county of Winnebago and State of Iowa, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

David C. Clark, to be postmaster at Phillipsburgh, in the county of Phillips and State of Kansas, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Ira Steinberger, to be postmaster at Erie, in the county of Neosho and State of Kansas, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Caspar Horwickholst, to be postmaster at Hays City, in the county of Ellis and State of Kansas, in the place of Joseph E. Wilson, removed.

William D. Kelly, to be postmaster at Ellis, in the county of Ellis and State of Kansas, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Thomas Madigan, to be postmaster at Wallace, in the county of Wallace and State of Kansas, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Frank F. Stevens, to be postmaster at Richfield, in the county of Morton and State of Kansas, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Miss Lucy Hocker, to be postmaster at Eminence, in the county of Henry and State of Kentucky, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Samuel J. Robinson, to be postmaster at Towson, in the county of Baltimore and State of Maryland, in the place of Sarah Feast, whose commission expired June 28, 1888.

John Duane, to be postmaster at West Medford, in the county of Middlesex and State of Massachusetts, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after April 1, 1888.

Charles H. Loud, to be postmaster at South Weymouth, in the county of Norfolk and State of Massachusetts, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Cornelius Cronin, to be postmaster at Kalkaska, in the county of Kalkaska and State of Michigan, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Eugene R. Savage, to be postmaster at Mancelona, in the county of Antrim and State of Michigan, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Otto A. Kohler, to be postmaster at Hutchinson, in the county of McLeod and State of Minnesota, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Charles W. Main, to be postmaster at Tracy, in the county of Lyon and State of Minnesota, in the place of Ernst O. Brauns, whose commission expired July 2, 1888.

Horace Picket, to be postmaster at Fergus Falls, in the county of Otter Tail and State of Minnesota, in the place of George L. Nichols, whose commission expired May 29, 1888.

Alexander Elson, to be postmaster at Unionville, in the county of Putnam and State of Missouri, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Frank W. Sprague, to be postmaster at Rushville, in the county of Sheridan and State of Nebraska, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

David H. Applegate, to be postmaster at Red Bank, in the county of Monmouth and State of New Jersey, in the place of William Applegate, whose commission expired June 16, 1888.

Catherine W. Baker, to be postmaster at Millington, in the county of Morris and State of New Jersey, in the place of James A. Baker, whose commission expired April 8, 1888.

William B. Carpenter, to be postmaster at Flushing, in the county of Queens and State of New York, in the place of Andrew W. Smith, resigned.

James S. Logan, to be postmaster at Port Chester, in the county of Westchester and State of New York, in the place of Charles H. Palmer, whose commission expired July 5, 1888.

Walter E. Northrup, to be postmaster at Oneida, in the county of Madison and State of New York, in the place of Watson A. Stone, deceased.

Martin Walrath, jr., to be postmaster at St. Johnsville, in the county of Montgomery and State of New York, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Theodore W. Miller, to be postmaster at London, in the county of Madison and State of Ohio, in the place of Katharine W. Hanson, whose commission expired June 28, 1888.

William W. Montgomery, to be postmaster at Port Clinton, in the county of Ottawa and State of Ohio, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Wesley A. Savage, to be postmaster at Paulding, in the county of Paulding and State of Ohio, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

James Stratton, to be postmaster at Auburndale, in the county of Lucas and State of Ohio, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Francis G. Andrews, to be postmaster at Oxford, in the county of Chester and State of Pennsylvania, in the place of Samuel H. Smith, removed.

Isaac F. Bomberger, to be postmaster at Lititz, in the county of Lancaster and State of Pennsylvania, in the place of Mrs. Sarah A. Christ, whose commission expired July 4, 1888.

Robert I. Fleming, to be postmaster at Lock Haven, in the county of Clinton and State of Pennsylvania, in the place of William W. Rankin, deceased.

William B. Jack, to be postmaster at Leechburgh, in the county of Armstrong and State of Pennsylvania, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Peter A. Rattigan, to be postmaster at Barnhart's Mills, in the county of Butler and State of Pennsylvania, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

James G. Peck, to be postmaster at East Providence, in the county of Providence and State of Rhode Island, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Charles R. Haynie, to be postmaster at Bastrop, in the county of Bastrop and State of Texas, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Henry Mertz, to be postmaster at Uvalde, in the county of Uvalde and State of Texas, in the place of Nathan L. Stratton, whose commission expired June 12, 1888.

Levin Perry, to be postmaster at Jefferson, in the county of Marion and State of Texas, in the place of Ernestine Sterne, whose commission expired June 26, 1888.

James H. Rodeffer, to be postmaster at Woodstock, in the county of Shenandoah and State of Virginia, in the place of Daniel Lichliter, whose commission expired May 21, 1888.

William C. Weaver, to be postmaster at Front Royal, in the county of Warren and State of Virginia, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Benjamin S. Thompson, to be postmaster at Hinton, in the county of Summers and State of West Virginia, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Charles F. Kalk, to be postmaster at Cumberland, in the county of Barron and State of Wisconsin, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

John R. Mathews, to be postmaster at Menomonee, in the county of Dunn and State of Wisconsin, in the place of Edward L. Everts, whose commission expired July 4, 1888.

Fredrick Swain, to be postmaster at Washburn, in the county of Bayfield and State of Wisconsin, the appointment of a postmaster for said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Leopold L. Daus, to be postmaster at Rock Springs, in the county of Sweetwater and Territory of Wyoming, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1888.

Edwin S. Hallock, to be postmaster at Evanston, in the county of Uinta and Territory of Wyoming, in the place of Alanza A. Bailey, whose commission expired July 5, 1888.

ASSISTANT SURGEON IN THE NAVY.

Albert Montgomery Dupuy McCormick, a resident of Virginia, to be an assistant surgeon in the Navy, to fill an existing vacancy.

CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

Col. Thomas L. Casey, to be Chief of Engineers with the rank of brigadier-general, July 6, 1888, vice Duane, retired from active service.

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

First Lieut. Orin B. Mitcham, to be captain, June 17, 1888.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

Charles F. Mason, of Virginia (late assistant surgeon), to be assistant surgeon with the rank of first lieutenant, July 2, 1888, vice Anderson, resigned.

TO BE SECOND LIEUTENANTS.

Class rank.

First Regiment of Cavalry.

20. Cadet John D. L. Hartman, vice Foltz, promoted.

Second Regiment of Cavalry.

9. Cadet John S. Winn, vice Rucker, promoted.

Third Regiment of Cavalry.

14. Cadet Charles A. Hedekin, vice Isham, resigned.

Fourth Regiment of Cavalry.

21. Cadet Clough Overton, vice Benson, promoted.

Fifth Regiment of Cavalry.

13. Cadet Solomon P. Vestal, vice Hunter, transferred to the Fourth Artillery.
18. Cadet Claiborne L. Foster, vice Waite, promoted.

Tenth Regiment of Cavalry.

15. Cadet Francis J. Koester, vice Trippe, promoted.

First Regiment of Artillery.

4. Cadet George W. Burr, vice Bailey, promoted.
6. Cadet John L. Hayden.

Fourth Regiment of Artillery.

7. Cadet Charles D. Palmer, vice Townsley, promoted.

Fifth Regiment of Artillery.

5. Cadet Charles C. Gallup, vice Carbaugh, promoted.

Second Regiment of Infantry.

24. Cadet Edward R. Chrisman, vice Mallory, promoted.

Ninth Regiment of Infantry.

19. Cadet Charles W. Fenton, vice Wassell, resigned.

Tenth Regiment of Infantry.

35. Cadet William H. Wilhelm, vice Stottler, promoted.

Eleventh Regiment of Infantry.

17. Cadet Charles P. Russ, vice Clayton, resigned.

Thirteenth Regiment of Infantry.

16. Cadet John S. Grisard, vice Buck, promoted.
31. Cadet Peter C. Harris, vice Dade, transferred to the Tenth Cavalry.

Fifteenth Regiment of Infantry.

30. Cadet Edward Anderson, vice May, promoted.

Nineteenth Regiment of Infantry.

34. Cadet William T. Wilder, vice French, promoted.

Twentieth Regiment of Infantry.

33. Cadet William H. Hart, vice Waters, resigned.

Twenty-first Regiment of Infantry.

12. Cadet James W. McAndrew, vice Brook, promoted.
32. Cadet Munroe McFarland, to fill a vacancy to be created by the appointment of a regimental adjutant.

Twenty-fourth Regiment of Infantry.

36. Cadet Charles V. Donalson, vice Hovey, promoted.

Twenty-fifth Regiment of Infantry.

37. Cadet George E. Stockle, vice Webb, promoted.

TO BE ADDITIONAL SECOND LIEUTENANTS.

Attached to the Corps of Engineers.

1. Cadet Henry Jervey.
2. Cadet Charles H. McKinstry.
3. Cadet William V. Judson.

Attached to the Cavalry Arm.

22. Cadet William J. D. Horne, to the Ninth Cavalry.
23. Cadet Robert L. Howze, to the Fifth Cavalry.
25. Cadet Guy H. Preston, to the First Cavalry.
26. Cadet Edwin M. Suplee to the Second Cavalry.
27. Cadet Andrew G. C. Quay to the Eighth Cavalry.
28. Cadet John P. Ryan to the Third Cavalry.

Attached to the Artillery Arm.

8. Cadet William S. Pierce to the First Artillery.
10. Cadet Peyton C. March to the Third Artillery.
11. Cadet Eugene T. Wilson to the Fifth Artillery.

Class rank.

Attached to the Infantry Arm.

29. Cadet William R. Sample to the Fourteenth Infantry.
38. Cadet William R. Dashiell to the Eighth Infantry.
39. Cadet Eli A. Helmick to the Eleventh Infantry.
40. Cadet Alexander W. Perry to the First Infantry.
41. Cadet William T. Littebrant to the Nineteenth Infantry.
42. Cadet Charles G. French to the Twentieth Infantry.
43. Cadet Capers D. Vance to the Twenty-first Infantry.
44. Cadet Matthew C. Butler, jr., to the Fourteenth Infantry.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 9, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CRISP, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. ROWLAND, for one day, on account of sickness.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1387) for the relief of certain volunteer soldiers;

A bill (H. R. 5096) authorizing the construction of a bridge across Flint River, in the State of Georgia;

A bill (H. R. 5903) for the relief of Lewis Davis, a soldier of the war of 1812;

A bill (H. R. 9816) to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Fort Smith, Ark.;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 191) relating to the pages of the House of Representatives; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 193) directing the Clerk of the House of Representatives to amend the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 9397) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the regular order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction and reference of bills and resolutions.

CONTRACT LABOR.

Mr. FORD. I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that the present immigration to the United States is excessive, artificial, and injurious, and is encouraged to satisfy private greed;

Whereas it is charged by prominent journals that the law prohibiting the importation of contract labor is being extensively evaded, owing to a lack of machinery to enforce the provisions of said law;

Whereas it is claimed that the present indiscriminate immigration is not voluntary or natural, but is promoted and stimulated by transportation companies, and by so-called bankers and padroni in America, and that such immigration is having the effect of decreasing the wages of the workingmen in the United States: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Speaker shall appoint a select committee of five, which committee is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the subject-matter herein referred to, and report their conclusions thereon to the House at the earliest practicable moment, by bill or otherwise. Such investigation shall be conducted at such times and places as the said committee may deem proper, and may be continued after the adjournment of the present session of Congress if necessary. Said committee is hereby authorized to send for and examine persons, books, and papers, and administer oaths to witnesses, and to employ a messenger and stenographer, and the expenses of said investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. FORD. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to inquire how it becomes pertinent to that committee.

The SPEAKER put the question, and was in doubt as to the result.

A division was called for.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 47.

So the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs was agreed to.

SUGAR AND OIL TRUSTS.

Mr. ADAMS. I offer a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and desire to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas on January 25, 1888, a resolution was adopted by the House reciting that certain individuals and corporations had combined to increase the price of some of the necessaries of life, thereby injuriously affecting commerce between the States and impairing the revenues of the United States derived from its duties on imports, and requiring the Committee on Manufactures to investigate the matter and report the result of such investigation to the House with such recommendations as the said committee might agree upon; and

Whereas the purpose of said resolution was, among other things, to obtain information in regard to the so-called sugar trust and enable the House intelligently to consider a revision of the tariff duties on sugar, and also to obtain information in regard to the so-called Standard Oil trust and enable the House to consider whether legislation in regard thereto ought to be had during the present session of Congress; and

Whereas the broad scope of the resolution as adopted by the House renders it impracticable for the Committee on Manufactures to make during the present session a final report with recommendations covering all the subject-matters embraced within the terms of said resolution: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures be directed to report immediately to the House, with or without recommendation, all the evidence heretofore taken by said committee relating to the so-called sugar trust; and that said committee be also directed immediately to make a separate report to the House, with or without recommendation, of all the evidence heretofore taken by said committee relating to the so-called Standard Oil trust.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not care whether the resolution goes to the Committee on Rules or to the Committee on Manufactures, to which it relates.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

PUBLIC BUILDING, CAMDEN, N. J.

Mr. HIRES introduced a bill (H. R. 10754) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Camden, N. J.;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL CEMETERY ROAD, VICKSBURG.

Mr. CATCHINGS introduced a bill (H. R. 10755) to provide for the repair of the road built by the Government from Vicksburg, Miss., to the national cemetery adjacent thereto; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, LAKE ONTARIO.

Mr. NUTTING introduced a bill (H. R. 10756) to establish a life-saving station on the coast of Lake Ontario, in the county of Oswego; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

BLAIR EDUCATIONAL BILL.

Mr. THOMAS H. B. BROWNE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Whereas the people of the United States have largely petitioned Congress for the passage of a bill to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools; and

Whereas many of the States, through their legislative assemblies, have urged the necessity of such aid, notably that of the State of Virginia, in a joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved (the House of Delegates concurring), That the Senators from Virginia be instructed, and the members of the House of Representatives from Virginia be requested, to vote for a federal aid to public free schools, and to support the measure commonly known as the Blair bill, or some other better measure; and

Whereas the Senate, during the early part of the present session of Congress, passed Senate bill 371, being a bill to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools; and

Whereas said bill has been before the Committee on Education for several months; and

Whereas the majority of said committee have failed to report said bill and have the same placed on the Calendar of the House for its action; and

Whereas the majority of the committee have refused to meet to consider said bill and have on various occasions left the committee-room for the purpose of breaking a quorum, so as to prevent the consideration of said bill; and

Whereas the Republicans in caucus have asked unanimously that said bill be reported and placed on the Calendar of the House; and

Whereas it is contrary to the spirit of the Constitution and subversive of free government to suppress the will of the people:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education are hereby relieved from the further consideration of said bill, and that Tuesday, the 17th day of July, be set apart for the consideration of said bill, that it shall have precedence of all other business until disposed of, and that no dilatory motions shall be entertained during the consideration of said bill.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a personal explanation. I notice in the RECORD of July 7, that my colleague [Mr. GROSVENOR], speaking of his pair upon the land-forfeiture bill, used the following language:

I am announced as being paired with my colleague [Mr. OUTHWAITE]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "no;" I therefore uphold the pair and would have voted in the affirmative.

I do not know whence the gentleman received his understanding. If he were present this morning I should have inquired of him, but he is not present. I should have voted "yea" upon all occasions on that bill. I have supported the bill as earnestly as I possibly could, and, as it was distinctively a Democratic measure, I can not conceive how the gentleman should have supposed that I would have voted "no."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to introduce a bill.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. LAWLER. At the end of the roll-call I wish to ask unanimous consent to have a petition printed.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded by several gentlemen, and the Chair is executing the regular order. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is recognized to introduce a bill under the call.

STANDARD OF LENGTH, ETC.

Mr. BLAND introduced a bill (H. R. 10757) to establish public standards of length and standard directions for ascertaining the variations of the compass; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

CAPITOL, NORTH O AND SOUTH WASHINGTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BREWER (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 10758) to amend the charter of the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS OF SURVIVORS OF WAR OF 1812.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, introduced a bill (H. R. 10759) to increase the pensions of the survivors of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF POSTAL APPROPRIATION ACT.

Mr. PETERS introduced a bill (H. R. 10760) to amend section 215, chapter 456, of "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MILLS. I call for the regular order.

COL. JOHN GEORGE RYAN.

Mr. LAWLER. I hold in my hand a petition making a claim against the Government for damages for the false imprisonment of Col. John George Ryan, who was claimed to be John Surratt, concerned in the conspiracy against the life of Abraham Lincoln. This is a very important matter, damages being claimed to the amount of $100,000. I do not ask that the petition with the accompanying affidavits be read, but I desire that it be published in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded, and unless that demand be withdrawn the Chair can not entertain the gentleman's request. Does the gentleman from Texas withdraw his demand?

Mr. MILLS. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER] asks to have this petition printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HOLMAN. Without the names?

Mr. LAWLER. There is only one name.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STEELE. What is the petition?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois states that it is a petition of a certain gentleman who claims that he was falsely arrested and imprisoned by the Government upon the allegation that he was John Surratt, and who asks damages to the amount of $100,000.

Mr. STEELE. I think the petition had better go to the proper committee. I object.

Mr. LAWLER. What objection can the gentleman have to printing the petition in the RECORD?

Mr. STEELE. It is not necessary to lumber up the RECORD with matters which are not pertinent.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This day, being the second Monday of the month, is set apart for the consideration of business of the Committee on the District of Columbia, if claimed by that committee. If not, the ordinary business of the House will proceed.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of taking up House bill No. 8272.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8272) to provide for the payment of F. H. Bates as military instructor at the Washington High School, District of Columbia.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HEMPHILL, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 15, noes 63.

Mr. MILLS. I now rise for the purpose of moving that the House go into Committee of the Whole, but I will yield a moment to the gentleman from California [Mr. BIGGS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] desires to call up another bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think it fair to the House to state that we are prepared to go on with District business, if the House will sustain us, and are anxious to do so. But it is not necessary to consume time in making repeated motions. I will therefore submit only one other motion, with the view of testing the sense of the House as to whether we shall be permitted to go on with District business to-day. I therefore move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of taking up the bill (H. R. 9581) to incorporate the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator and Railway Company.

Mr. MILLS. I hope that motion will be voted down.

The question being taken, the motion of Mr. HEMPHILL was not agreed to; there being—ayes 7, noes 76.

Mr. HEMPHILL. In consideration of the action just taken by the House, indicating its desire to consider the bill which the gentleman from Texas has designated, I will not further urge at this time the business of the District of Columbia Committee, as there is an evident majority against its consideration to-day. But I would like to say that when we get through with the tariff bill I will, throwing myself upon the mercy and kindness of the House, appeal to it to give us additional time for the consideration of our District measures.

Mr. MILLS. I yield a moment to the gentleman from California [Mr. BIGGS].

Mr BIGGS. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, and that it be put on its passage.

Mr. BUCHANAN. After our experience of the last two days, I call for the regular order.

Mr. BIGGS. I hope the gentleman will not object; it is a bill that he has agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will object until these things are made less one-sided.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the tariff bill. Before that question is put, I ask consent that we close debate on the pending paragraph of the bill at 1 o'clock to-day.

Mr. RYAN. And all amendments?

Mr. MILLS. And all amendments. After that you can vote as much as you please.

Mr. CANNON. So far as concerns the amendment I have offered, and so far as concerns myself in connection with it, I will say, speaking for myself, that I am ready to consent that the debate be closed at any time. But so far as concerns closing debate on amendments which are to follow, several of which, of great importance I understand, are to be offered in good faith, I can not, for one, assent to closing debate in any time short of two days. Perhaps the subject may not take us so long as that, but a number of gentlemen want to offer amendments in good faith and want an opportunity to discuss them.

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me we ought to come to some agreement to limit debate and finish this whole paragraph to-day.

Mr. REED. I do not believe there will be any discussion beyond what is necessary, and I think the gentleman had better let it run on for a while.

Mr. MILLS. Very well. Then I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, and let the debate drift.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

THE TARIFF.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the tariff bill. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out and insert what has been read.

[Mr. WILKINSON withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, I believe I owe the House no apology for occupying a few moments this morning, this being the first time I have intruded myself into the discussion of this question. I learned very early in the course of this debate that discussion on this question was of very little use to us here. I comprehended long since the star chamber proceedings of the Committee on Ways and Means. I learned that no discussion, no appeals, no protests from this side of the House would avail to change one paragraph, sentence, line, or word of this bill. The unalterable fiat had gone forth that their dark-lantern bill must pass just as it came from the committee, with possibly a few exceptions agreed to in caucus, where a pot of glue or a wooden screw might serve to mend the broken fences of some Democratic Congressman in a very close district. [Laughter.]

I do not intend now to enter into a discussion of its merits. Over three hundred hours of continuous debate here have failed to convert one single member of this House. What, then, is the use of talking? I am not especially charmed with the sound of my own voice. Nor is it necessary to inform my constituents how I stand on this question; I have frequently declared to them my position. They understand that I am an American; that I am a protectionist from the crown of my head to the soles of my feet, and that consequently I am a Republican, and that I stand upon the platform of the Republican party.

Gentlemen on the other side of this House who were so terribly elated by our friendly dialogue here last Saturday need not worry themselves about our family affairs. I desire to say to them that we are not afraid to discuss this question among ourselves. We may differ as to the ways and means which should be used in correcting the irregularities and inequalities of the tariff while preserving the protective principle, yet, Mr. Chairman, as to the principle and its results we are one. The venerable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] may not travel in the exact line with his more conservative brother, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and my friend from California [Mr. MCKENNA] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] may differ slightly with my colleagues from Iowa and myself. And some of us may even be in favor of free lumber, free salt, free rice, and free sugar, and be opposed to bounties, yet we may all stand solidly together upon the national Republican platform, and we all do stand uncompromisingly in favor of the prosperity and growth of all our country, and of the elevation, the advancement, the peace, and happiness of all our people. Oh, gentlemen on the other side, you need not trouble yourselves about the Republican platform. We will take care of that. And right here I desire to have the Clerk read, for your information, an epitome of that platform, so that you may be more fully conversant with it than you seem to be now.

The Clerk read as follows:

Condensed into the form of a short creed, the Republican platform is something like this:

We believe in a free ballot and in having every vote counted;
We believe in protection for protection's sake, and we are not ashamed of it;
We believe in abolishing internal taxes created for war purposes;
We believe in the direct protection of American labor against cheap foreign labor;
We believe in free internal competition;
We believe in railroad regulation;
We believe in homesteads and good homestead titles for citizens;
We believe in home rule for big and intelligent Territories;
We believe in a double monetary standard;
We believe in the utmost facilities for education, as worth all they can cost;
We believe in a big merchant marine and in American ship-yards;
We believe in a good navy, good coast defenses, and good water routes for commerce;
We believe in making other nations respect our rights and pay for all they get from us;
We believe in protecting American citizens against foreign interference, not only at home, but in any part of the world;
We believe in civil service reform more than ever; and
We believe that nothing is too good for the soldiers who risked their lives to save the country, and saved it.—New York Press.

Mr. CONGER. Those are the principles on which the Republican party stands. Those are the principles which the manufacturers of this country indorse; those are the principles which the farmers of this country indorse; those are the principles which the miners of this country indorse; those are the principles which the wage-earners everywhere indorse; and which will receive on the 6th of November next so universal an indorsement that they will thenceforward be recognized not only as the creed of the Republican party but the creed of the nation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana, addressed the Chair.

Mr. MILLS. I now ask unanimous consent that a vote be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. We can then go on and talk upon some other proposition. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I would like to speak for five minutes.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman wants only five minutes.

Mr. MILLS. Then I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have read the following amendment, to be presented at the proper time:

Strike out line 329 down to and including the word "gallon," in line 355, and insert the following: "All sugars and molasses shall, on and after January 1, 1889, be admitted free of duty."

Mr. Chairman, in the levying of impost duties I believe they should be so adjusted as to develop our industries. This has become the settled policy of this country and I do not believe any considerable portion of our people desire to change it. But when it has been demonstrated by means of a high protective tariff after years of trial that the industry is not susceptible of development in this country so as to meet the wants of the people, then I believe we should place the article on the free-list. Hence I have offered the amendment which has just been read.

Sugar, one of the great necessities of life, as made from sugar-cane proper, can only be produced in a limited area of the United States. It matters not to what extent we foster this industry by a tariff, we can not extend or materially develop it. The amount of the annual production is less than $20,000,000. A fraction over one-tenth of the amount consumed is produced in this country. Our people pay a yearly tax of over $56,000,000 on this one article alone. We do not produce to-day near as much sugar as we did before the war. In 1861–'62 we produced 539,830,500 pounds of sugar; in 1885–'86 the production was 302,754,486 pounds. While our home consumption is increasing at the rate of 10 per cent., our home product is decreasing.

During the past ten years we have paid out over $455,000,000 in duties on sugar. It is estimated that the ordinary-sized family pays not less than $5 in duties on the amount of sugar consumed in a year. Eighty-two per cent. ad valorem is the protection given sugar under the present law. This protection has not increased production, but has enhanced the price. Now, after years of a high protective tariff of 2 cents a pound on sugar and the production decreasing and equal to-day to only one-tenth of our consumption, is it the part of wisdom, I ask, or of statesmanship to longer continue the duty? Our Democratic friends need not longer talk about consistency, for it is not found in a bill containing such a hardship on the people. While this bill may have some merit, yet it will not meet with favor by the people of this country when it contains such a manifest injustice.

But Louisiana must be kept in the Democratic column, even if it compels our Democratic friends to support a measure which is neither "fish or fowl," neither protection or free trade—a bill illogical and built on no connected plan, the chief characteristic of which is its extreme sectionalism.

We hear just now of wonderful experiments in the obtaining of a large percentage of sugar from sorghum cane. If it should prove to be true as stated, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska can produce sugar for the world, for we can raise sorghum cane as certain as Indian corn. I would make liberal appropriations to continue these experiments, not only in Southeastern Kansas but in Iowa, Illinois, and other States, and if it proves to be a success, as claimed and hoped, it will be a very easy matter to renew the tariff on sugar and assist in developing this new industry.

Some of our friends advocate a bounty. The giving of direct bounties or subsidies it seems to me is contrary to the spirit of our form of government. It is in the nature of class legislation, which I can not favor. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, when this question was first brought forward in the House I was not present, and thinking it was a proposition for free sugar, and that the result would be to strike down one of the industrial interests of the South, I felt like opposing it. I believe that the industries of this country, North, South, East, and West, no matter were they are located, deserve to receive the support of every man on this floor. But as the debate progressed, I ascertained that it was proposed to make sugar free, and that it was also proposed to pay a bounty to those who are engaged in the production of sugar in this country. I decided in my own mind, after reflection, that the proposition was a wise one, and that it was a proper one to receive the approval of the House.

Any gentleman on either side who differs in regard to that matter, and who opposes the adoption of such an amendment, would do well to carefully consider just what the result will be. When they go before their constituents in any district, North or South, East or West, and say they have voted against such an amendment, they will find it difficult to convince them that they have acted in behalf of their best interests.

Now, how is this bounty to affect the people of the country? It is a question whether they are to pay six millions of dollars, or sixty millions of dollars.

According to the committee which formulated this bill, this is one of the clauses which they ought to have stricken out, instead of asking for it the support of the House. If they had done that they would have acted in accordance with the recommendation of the President of the United States, and in favor of the people taxed upon the necessaries of life.

Let me ask any gentleman upon this floor the question whether he does not consider sugar as one of the necessaries of life. If there is any one here who does not think so, let him ask his constituents, and he will find that they are of an entirely different opinion, and he will find that they will say universally that it is a necessary of life, and that it is not only a necessary of life but that it is one of the prime necessaries of life. Like flour in the house, they can not do without it.

If the amendment making sugar free should pass the House and become a law, what will be the result? The poor man who goes to the store to buy a dollar's worth of sugar—5-cent sugar, for that is the standard quality in this country—gets 20 pounds for a dollar. If the amendment should pass and become a law the result would be that instead of 20 pounds he would get 32 pounds. Now, how are you going to explain to your people that you have looked after their interest when you defraud every workingman out of twelve pounds of sugar in every dollar's worth? If adopted, your constituents will get twelve pounds more for a dollar than they now get, and if it is not adopted they will get only 20 pounds instead of 32 pounds.

Now, our people do not complain that sugar is too high. They are not complaining of any commodity in this country as being too high. All they complain of is that at times they are out of employment, and at other times when they are employed they do not get sufficient wages. From whom, then, does the complaint come? It comes mainly from the rich people. It comes from those who brought about the abolition of the income tax. They are always complaining. Governor St. John explained that in his speech which I read this morning in the Sun. I have a suit of clothes for which I paid $75. In Canada I could have purchased a similar suit of clothes for $20. By buying that suit here I had to pay $50 more. He does not stop to inquire how in the long run the encouragement of each industry reduces prices generally while at the same time all our industrial interests are sustained and encouraged; but those are the men who are always complaining of high prices, the men who are best able to pay them.

It is just that kind of people who are too nice to use the domestic production, but who can afford to pay for the foreign imports, and they ought to have the privilege of paying that duty. But does your workingman buy the imported article? He is glad to be able to buy the home product, and does not seek to get the imported article. He is very well satisfied with the domestic goods. He is the one, therefore, that you ought to think of in the consideration of your tariff. With the rich classes everything they get must come from Europe. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLS. I hope now we will have a vote on this question.

Mr. CANNON. So far as I am concerned, I am ready for a vote on my amendment, but I would like first to be permitted to occupy five minutes.

Mr. MILLS. Very well, with that understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. It is understood that at the expiration of the five minutes to be occupied by the gentleman from Illinois the vote will be taken.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is the agreement.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say in that five minutes, in reply to the gentlemen—first in reply to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILKINSON]. I hold in my hands a statement taken from the official report made to and adopted by an international convention between Great Britain, France, and Germany in 1879 touching sugar, from which it appears that in many thousands of actual practical experiments in France in refining raw sugars there was practically no loss of saccharine matter. In the high grades of sugar the loss was less than 1 per cent., and since that time the business of refining sugar has been improved.

A word in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], who made that wonderful statement.

Mr. WILKINSON. I would like to have the opportunity of stating to the gentleman——

Mr. CANNON. I can not yield.

Mr. WILKINSON. I yielded to the gentleman's interruptions several times in the course of my remarks, and hope he will allow me to make a single statement.

Mr. CANNON. I hope this interruption is not to be taken out of my time. I would cheerfully yield to the gentleman if I had ten or fifteen minutes.

A word; I say in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky, who always, when he talks in his sincerity and magnificence and smoothness, makes me feel like I wanted to say, "now let us pray, brethren" [laughter]—in reply to him and his statement wherein he stated that the labor in the refinery must be protected, and that we can not cut down any lower and have anything left for decrease upon other articles than sugar, and for that reason did not cut but 20 per cent, why, my friend, you can let raw sugar come in just as provided in the Mills bill—and none other is or will be imported—and then if you go to the higher grades above No. 13, all of which pass through the refineries and none of which are imported, and decrease the amount of the duty upon those higher grades one-half, you will just cut off $14,000,000 from the profits of the refiners and leave them $14,000,000 still, and I say again, you will not affect the revenues of the Government one cent. The gentleman knows that. I believe he is on the Committee on Manufactures. I think the Committee on Ways and Means know it. I think they knew it when they first drew their bill, and first called the attention of the country and the House to it and boasted of this reform they were going to make. But, Mr. Chairman, when the bill was reported and the refiners protested, the refiners and the trusts were left in the Mills bill, and they struck out the reform they put in when it was first drawn up and reported to the committee. Why did you do it? I asked that question before and I ask it now, and nobody has so far answered it. Again I repeat the inquiry, why did you do it?

Now a word in regard to my own amendment. I think that amendment ought to be adopted. I suppose it will not be. I apprehend that you are not going to sacrifice the St. Louis platform in this particular by adopting my amendment. True you have been making some little inroads upon the platform by adopting some amendments, four or five small changes, perhaps unimportant ones, the wood-screws of Connecticut, for instance, to satisfy some people on the other side; but I suppose you will not do it here, first, because it would not suit Louisiana men, and second, it would not suit the sugar trust.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], which will again be read.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out lines 329 to 361, inclusive, of section 2, and insert as follows:

"All sugars not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color, all tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, and all molasses testing not above fifty-six degrees by the polariscope not otherwise specially enumerated or provided for in this act shall be exempt from duty: Provided, That if an export duty shall hereafter be laid upon sugar or molasses by any country from whence the same may be imported, such sugar or molasses so imported shall be subject to duty at the rates provided by law at the date of the passage of this act.

"All sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color, three-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

"Molasses testing above fifty-six degrees by the polariscope, 1½ cents per gallon.

"Maple sugar, 2 cents per pound of crystallizable sugar contained therein as ascertained by the polariscope.

"Maple sirup or molasses, 4 cents per gallon.

"Glucose or grape sugar, 1 cent per pound.

"Sugar candy, not colored, 5 cents per pound. All other confectionery not specially enumerated or provided for, made wholly or in part of sugar, and on sugars after being refined when tinctured, colored, or in any other way adulterated, and on all chocolate confectionery, 10 cents per pound: Provided, That if an export duty shall hereafter be laid upon sugar or molasses by any country from whence the same may be imported, such sugar or molasses so imported shall be subject to duty as provided by law at the date of the passage of this act: Provided further, That for the encouragement of the production of sugar and molasses there shall be paid a bounty to the producers thereof in the United States, when made from beets, sorghum, imphee, or other sugar-cane raised in the United States, as follows:

"On sugar, 2 cents for each pound of crystallizable sugar contained therein, as ascertained by the polariscope. On molasses testing above fifty-six degrees by the polariscope, 6 cents per gallon; testing not above fifty-six degrees by the polariscope, 4 cents per gallon; and the bounties provided for in this act shall be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe."

Tellers were demanded and ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] as tellers.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry; whether this amendment is not susceptible of division?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a motion to strike out and insert, and is not susceptible of division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 108.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent that we may have a yea-and-nay vote on this amendment in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee can not make an arrangement of that kind that the House will recognize.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend in lines 336 and 337 by striking out "1.15 cents" and inserting "seventy one-hundredths of a cent."

In line 339 strike out "thirty-two one-thousandths" and insert instead "two one-hundredths."

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to occupy a little more than five minutes, and in order that I may not be interrupted I ask unanimous consent to speak fifteen minutes if I need the time. I probably shall not require so much time.

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered proposes to reduce the duty on sugar from the present enormous rate of 82 per cent. to 41 per cent. or one-half; in other words, to reduce the present specific rate of 1.40 cents per pound for raw sugar polarizing 75 degrees, to seventy one-hundredth cents per pound, and the present rate of four one-hundredth cents per pound for each additional degree to two one-hundredth cents per pound.

The amendment which I propose is in harmony with the protective lists of the present tariff, and treats sugar, from the protective standpoint, as an article which may be produced in this country to the extent of our wants, notwithstanding the fact that we now produce less sugar in the United States than we did before the war raises a serious doubt as to our ability to overcome climatic disadvantages. I am willing, however, for the present to continue a policy based on the belief that we can develop the production of sugar to the extent of our wants.

We are frequently told by gentlemen upon the other side that the average duty imposed on imports on the dutiable lists of the present tariff is 47 per cent., and that the Mills bill proposes to reduce that average only 7 per cent., leaving still an average of 40 per cent.

Every gentleman who stops to consider the subject appreciates the fact that a comparison of two tariffs by their dutiable lists alone without regard to their free-lists, for the purpose of showing the average imposed by each, is misleading and worthless. No comparison that is just or instructive can be made except by taking both the free and dutiable lists and estimating the average duties of the two united, for it is only by doing this that any tariff obtains proper allowance for transfers from the dutiable to the free list.

Estimated on this proper basis the average duty on all imports under the tariff of 1824 was 47 per cent.; under the tariff of 1846, 26 per cent., and under the tariff of 1883, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1834, it was 28½ per cent., and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, in consequence of the reduction in the invoiced value of goods on which specific duties were imposed—which reduction increased the ad valorem equivalent—it was 32 per cent.

Under the tariff of 1824 the average duty on dutiable goods was 51 per cent.; under the tariff of 1846 it was 27 per cent.; under the tariff of 1872 it was 43½ per cent.; and under the first year of the tariff of 1883 it was 41½ per cent.

What is it that has increased the average duty on imported articles on the free-list of the tariff of 1883 from 41½ per cent. for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, to 47 per cent. for the year ending June 30, 1887, without any change in the law? It is the decline of value of imported articles on which a specific duty is fixed; and the article which has had the most influence in increasing the average duty is sugar, which, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, paid a duty of only 50 per cent., but for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, paid a duty of 82 per cent.

In other words, if sugar in the last fiscal year had borne a duty of 50 per cent. the average duty of the dutiable lists of the present tariff in the last year would have been only 42 per cent. instead of 47; and if sugar had borne a duty of 41 per cent., as proposed by my amendment, the average duty of the dutiable lists of the present tariff would have been only 40½ per cent. instead of 47.

In other words, it is the increase of the ad valorem duty on sugar from the 50 per cent. contemplated by the tariff of 1883 to 82 per cent. that has raised the average duty of the dutiable lists from 41½ per cent. in 1884 to 47 per cent. in 1887. And now gentlemen who are animadverting on the average duty of 47 per cent.—made so large by the enormous duty on sugar—are supporting a bill which imposes a duty equivalent to an ad valorem duty of 68 per cent. on sugar, against an ad valorem of 50 per cent. as contemplated by the tariff of 1883, and are claiming that they have largely reduced the duty on sugar, when, as a matter of fact, the ad valorem equivalent of the specific duty which they propose on sugar—and our friends on the other side always insist on comparing ad valorem equivalents—is 18 per cent. more than the ad valorem equivalent for the first year under the tariff of 1883.

Mr. Chairman, as I have already intimated, if my amendment should be adopted, the average ad valorem duty of the protected lists of the present tariff would be 40½ per cent., and sugar would have 41 per cent., and that, too, specific, which is equivalent to 10 per cent. more than a duty of 40 per cent. ad valorem on most manufactured goods where undervaluations are the rule.

Sugar with that reduction would have more than the average duty on the protected manufactured products, notwithstanding it is a cruder article than advanced manufactures. The average duty on iron in the present tariff is 40½ per cent., on cottons 37½ per cent., and on woolen goods (excluding the compensatory duty for wool) 38 per cent., and an ad valorem duty, too, which in fact is not more than 32 per cent. specific. Therefore my amendment deals with sugar on the principle of protection and gives that industry the average protection given manufacturing industries, notwithstanding it is not yet clear that it can be produced in this country to the extent of our wants, ay gives sugar more protection than it gives on the average to manufactured products.

In 1853–'54 Louisiana produced 368,129,000 pounds of sugar, and the remaining Southern States, 18,173,000 pounds, total, 386,302,000 pounds. In 1861–'62 the total product of sugar in these States was 539,830,000 pounds. But in no year since the war has the total annual product exceeded 320,000,000 pounds.

In 1886 this country consumed 1,389,125 tons of sugar, or 53.3 pounds per inhabitant. And of this consumption 1,235,213 tons, or nearly 90 per cent., were imported, and 153,912 tons, or 10 per cent., produced in this country. Certainly it would seem from our experience thus far as if our climatic disadvantages are such that we can not successfully produce sugar here to the extent of our wants. If not, then sugar would not properly be an article to come within the policy of protection, which applies only to articles whose production can be developed to the extent of our wants. But in view of the alleged success during the past year of experiments for the manufacture of sugar from beets in California, and from sorghum in Kansas, I am willing to treat the sugar industry as one which within a reasonable period can be developed to produce sufficient to supply the wants of our country, and to give it the same protection as manufacturing industries.

It should be borne in mind that the tariff of 1846 imposed a duty of only 30 per cent. on sugar, and that of 1857 only 24 per cent., both only the average of the protection lists. My amendment proposes to give sugar 41 per cent.

If greater protection than this is required to make the sugar industry a success, greater than has been required to establish other industries of a more advanced character, the States in which such industries are to be carried on will undoubtedly hasten to temporarily aid when satisfied that sugar can be made here to the extent of our wants without climatic disadvantages.

Mr. Chairman, I can not consent by my vote to retain a duty of 68 per cent. on so indispensable an article of food as sugar, as is proposed by the Mills bill. I trust that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN], who assured the House that the Mills bill was a bill to reduce the cost of the food of the people, will listen. If the duty is so fixed as a protective policy, I must object to it as entirely unnecessary and indefensible to protect an industry which has existed in this country for half a century.

If it is maintained as a revenue duty, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] intimated a few days ago, I object to it as unjust, in that it is a duty on a necessary article of food, consumed by the poor man to nearly the same extent as the rich man; an article produced to so small an extent in this country that home competition can not fix the price (as it does in the case of manufactured goods which can be made here to the extent of our wants), but the price is inevitably the foreign cost with the duty added.

In the case of sugar, therefore, we have an article where no one denies that the duty is a tax which increases the burden of the consumer to the extent of the rate, where the commodity is a necessary article of food; where after forty years' trial and with the highest encouragement ever given an industry we are unable to supply only one-tenth of our wants, an article where every reduction of the duty will certainly reduce the revenue which the majority profess to seek to reduce; and yet it is this article which the Democratic majority insist on maintaining at the high rate of 68 per cent.

And while seeking to retain this high rate of duty on so necessary an article of food as sugar, the same Democratic majority place on the free-list the products of the lumber-manufacturing industry, of the grain-bag manufacturing industry, of the brick-making industry, of the rough building-stone industry, and in the original bill as indorsed at St. Louis the lime and wood-pulp industries, and such products of the farm as wool, pease, beans, vegetables, cucumbers, tomatoes, milk, meats, and poultry; and seriously reduce the duty on manufactured articles, articles such as we can produce in this country to the extent of our wants, and on which for that reason the import duty is not a tax which increases the burden of our people, but a benefit to all classes.

Gentlemen on the Democratic side protest that their great object is to reduce our excessive revenue. If so, why do they reduce the duty on sugar so little, when by making the reduction one-half they can surely cut off $28,000,000 in revenue on one article, and still leave as high a duty as the average of the protected lists, and when every cent of reduction of duty will surely reduce the cost of a necessary article of food? Why, instead of doing this, do they select articles heretofore insufficiently protected, where the reduction of the duty will increase the revenue, and injure rather than benefit the people?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Do I understand the gentleman to say that his amendment cuts down the present duty on sugar one-half and provides for no bounty?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes, it cuts down the duty one-half. The duty now is 82 per cent. ad valorem, and I propose to make the duty a specific equivalent of 41 cents, without any bounty.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. And still the duty will be above the average duty on protected articles?

Mr. DINGLEY. It will. If sugar bore an ad valorem duty of only 41 per cent., the average duty of the dutiable lists under the existing tariff would have been only 40½ per cent. last year.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is a dose which even the free-trade Democracy ought to jump at.

Mr. GEAR. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Under the Mills bill, as I understand, sugar is left at a duty of 68 per cent.?

Mr. DINGLEY. Sixty-eight per cent.

Mr. GEAR. And the gentleman proposes to cut the duty in two?

Mr. DINGLEY. I propose to cut the original 82 per cent. duty in two, making the rate 41 per cent., being 27 per cent. lower than the rate proposed in the Mills bill.

Mr. MACDONALD. Will the gentleman from Maine indicate how many votes this bill would receive on the other side if his amendment were adopted?

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not know that that makes any difference.

Mr. MACDONALD. It makes a difference to me.

Mr. DINGLEY. We are now considering the question of sugar; and if the object is to reduce the revenue and reduce the burdens of the people, here is an opportunity to do so.

Mr. MACDONALD. I expect to vote for this bill, because I can not get anything better; but I do not propose to vote for any amendment of the opposition unless it will secure votes for the bill, instead of weakening it on our side.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I have been somewhat surprised at the character of the debate which has taken place during the last few days, and which has been continued this morning. The statements expressed by the gentlemen on the other side of the House are so strangely opposed to the declarations set forth in their platform of principles that they would lead one to believe that those pledges have been either forgotten or abandoned; and it adds to our surprise to see them, while in such an embarrassing perplexity, venture to charge others with lack of consistency and fealty to party promises. The leading feature of the Chicago Republican platform, the rule of action by which the party proposes to be guided, is expressed in the demand for—such a revision of the tariff laws as will tend to check imports of articles such as are produced by our people, the production of which gives employment to our labor.

Mr. Worcester defines the word "check"—

To stop, to repress, to restrain.

Mr. Webster—

To make a stop, to pause.

Now, if this demand of the Republican platform means anything it must be that a product like sugar, coming as it does clearly within the class of articles which the Republican party pledged itself to protect by revising the tariff so as to check and stop its importation from foreign countries, should be subjected to a high if not prohibitory tariff duty.

Last year we imported sugar to the value of $68,897,102.27, and the duties collected on this importation were $56,515,601.67.

Personally and as a friend of the people I am strongly in favor of reducing the tax on sugar, and the bill we are considering makes a reduction of $11,292,087.94, a larger amount than is remitted upon any article except those on the woolen schedule. The tariff tax on sugar as fixed by a Republican Congress was 82 per cent., while the bill now before us fixes it at 65 per cent. The same Republican gentlemen who voted for the bill of March 3, 1883, and fixed the duty on sugar at 82 per cent., which is the existing law, now vote for amendments to either remove the duty altogether or make it only nominal. I wish those gentlemen would explain how they reconcile such a course with their party pledges. Sugar is an article—such as is produced by our people, and the production of which gives employment to our labor.

The laborers who are given employment in Louisiana and Florida are colored men. The labor employed in Kansas, California, and other States are our good white farmers, and I would like to ask how our Republican friends reconcile their votes for free sugar with the pledges of their party to those citizens who labor in the production of that article. Sugar is a product of our agricultural industries, and to show how little consideration that industry has received from the Republican party I beg to call the attention of the House to the depressed condition of our farmers as compared with other, and especially with our manufacturing industries.

The census of 1880 shows that the value of the farms in the United States was $10,197,096,776. There were employed on these farms 7,670,493 persons, and the total product of the farms and orchards—including what was consumed by the farmers themselves—amounted to $2,264,278,718.

We see from this that the gross product in our agricultural industries was about 22 per cent. on the capital invested, and the annual value of the product per capita was about $300.

This computation does not take into the account the amount of the capital invested in, or the wear and tear of, farming implements, the cost of seeds and fertilizers, the amount of capital invested in work-stock, nor the cost of their subsistence. Were these items included the profits of farming would probably be reduced one-half of the amount I have indicated; but to be liberal, we will say they would reduce my estimate one-third—$200 per capita, instead of $300.

From the same census we learn that the amount of capital invested in manufacturing industries was $2,790,223,506; the number of hands employed was 2,738,930, and the total value of the product was $5,369,667,706. The value of the product in the manufacturing industries is thus shown to have been about 200 per cent. on the capital invested, nine times greater than the per cent. of gross product realized in agriculture. The value of the product was about $2,000 for each person engaged in manufacturing, or seven times as much as the product per capita realized in farming.

But I should deduct the value of the materials used in manufacturing. Let us see what will be the result. The value of the materials used by these 253,840 manufacturing establishments was $3,394,340,029, leaving an excess of product over the materials used of $1,975,327,677, or about 70 per cent. on the capital invested—more than three times the per cent. gained in farming—and the annual amount produced per capita, less the cost of materials, was about $720, just three and three-fifths times the per capita of the product by farming.

As these statistics are highly instructive and very important, as well as interesting, I have prepared a table which will show at a glance the marked difference between the condition of an industry which for twenty-five years has borne all the burdens and received none of the benefits of legislation as contrasted with industries which have been developed by partial laws into powerful monopolies.

Table showing the comparative results of our agricultural and manufacturing industries.

FARMING INDUSTRIES.

Amount of capital invested, exclusive of implements, cost of seeds and fertilizers, work-stock, or cost of their subsistence	$10,197,096,776
Number of persons employed	7,670,493
Value of gross product, including consumption by farmers	$2,264,278,718
Value of product for each person engaged in farming, about	$300
Per cent. of product on capital invested	22
Product of each person after deducting cost of seeds, fertilizers, feed of work-stock, etc.	$200
Per cent. of product on capital invested	14⅓

MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES.

Amount of capital invested	$2,790,223,506
Number of persons employed	2,738,930
Value of gross product	$5,369,667,706
Value of product for each person	$2,000
Per cent. of product on capital invested	200
Value of materials used	$3,394,340,029
Product after deducting materials used	$1,975,327,677
Product of each person after deducting value of materials used	$720
Per cent. of product on capital invested	70

We therefore see that after deducting the cost of the materials used in the manufacturing industries, and deducting the cost of seeds, fertilizers, feed of work-stock, etc., used in agricultural industries, the value of the product of one person in manufacturing industries is three and three-fifths times as much as the value of the product of each person engaged in farming. We also see that for every $100 capital invested in manufacturing a product is realized of $70, while for every $100 capital invested in farming there is realized a product of only $14.

From this comparison of the relative prosperity of our agricultural and manufacturing industries it is undeniably evident that, even so far back as 1880, the Republican tariff tax had so militated against the interests of the farmers that one man engaged in agriculture could produce only about one-fourth of the amount in value which one man could produce in manufactures, and that a given amount of capital invested in farming industries produced only one-fifth as much value of product as the same amount produced in manufacturing industries.

I think I have a right, Mr. Chairman, I think I may say it is my solemn duty, to appeal to the Republican party to halt in their mercilessly destructive legislation against the interests of the farmers of the United States. Lamentable as was the picture in 1880, it is more deplorable to-day. Palaces and untold wealth concentrated in the hands of the highly-favored few, while a leaky roof and a mortgaged home is all that is left to the once proud, independent, and happy American farmer.

As evidence of the fact that this statement is no exaggerated picture of the pitiable extremity to which Republican legislation has reduced the farmers of the country, I beg to remind the House that it has been repeatedly asserted on this floor that the farms of the great West are almost buried in mortgages, held by the manufacturing capitalists of the East. I have no personal knowledge of the accuracy of these assertions, but I will give as my authority in one instance an article from the Missouri Republican, one of the leading papers of the United States. It says:

WHO OWNS THE WEST?

All the advocates of high protective tariff have one refrain to their songs, speeches, magazine essays, and sermons—the vast wealth of the country. "We are the richest country on the globe," they assert, "and the protective tariff has made us so;" and then they present us with a bewildering array of figures towering up into the billions to show how prosperous the land has been under the protective policy of the last twenty-six years. In 1862 we had only 32,000 miles of railroad; now we have 150,000. In 1860 we had only $200,000,000 deposits in savings-banks; now we have $1,100,000,000. In 1860 we had 2,044,000 farms; in 1880 the number had increased to 4,008,000, and at the present time it can not be less than 5,000,000. All this they tell us has been brought about by the protective policy—as if the industry, enterprise, and patient hard work of the people had nothing to do with the matter.

It may be admitted that the country is rich, and growing more rapidly in wealth than any other country on the globe. But the people have made it so, not the tariff. It has thrived in spite of protection. That policy has drawn enormous wealth from the twenty-nine agricultural States and concentrated it in the nine favored industrial States; and it is in the latter the affluence that excites the admiration of the high-tariff advocates is most conspicuously illustrated.

But, they tell us, the agricultural States have grown rich, too. They also have prospered under protection. See how farms have multiplied in the West and Northwest, and see how railroads have been built in Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin, and the States and Territories west of the Mississippi, even to the Pacific, and how this vast region has been subdued to settlement.

All true. But who owns these farms and railroads in the Western States? In one word, who owns the West? The people of the West, it might be answered. But the answer would not be true, as a few indisputable figures will sufficiently prove.

First, as to farms. In 1880 there were 138,500 farms in Kansas, 256,000 in Illinois, 194,000 in Indiana, 247,000 in Ohio, 185,300 in Iowa, 154,000 in Michigan, and 134,300 in Wisconsin—making a total of 1,309,100 in the seven States named. Recent statistics collected by Granger associations and printed in farm journals make the following exhibit of farm mortgages in these same States:

Kansas	$235,000,000
Illinois	1,000,000,000
Indiana	635,000,000
Ohio	1,227,000,000
Iowa	567,000,000
Michigan	500,000,000
Wisconsin	357,000,000
Total	4,521,000,000

These figures are so startling in their enormity as to seem incredible. We do not vouch for their accuracy. They present the 1,309,100 farms in seven Western States as encumbered with an aggregate of four and a half billion mortgage indebtedness, or an average of over $3,400 for each. The assessed valuation of property in these States in 1885 was as follows:

Kansas	$275,500,000
Illinois	797,000,000
Indiana	793,000,000
Iowa	625,000,000
Michigan	850,000,000
Wisconsin	496,000,000
Ohio	1,671,000,000
Total	5,507,500,000

It will be seen that the reported mortgage debts cover about four-fifths the assessed value of the farms; and the bulk of these mortgages are held in the Eastern industrial States.

Next, as to railroads. In the seven Western States named there were, in 1885, 37,000 miles of railroad, with a stock and bond account and net earnings as follows:

States.	Stocks and bonds.	Net earnings.
	$	$
Kansas	$195,700,000	$9,440,000
Illinois	740,000,000	16,000,000
Indiana	320,000,000	5,700,000
Iowa	105,000,000	2,180,000
Michigan	214,000,000	5,000,000
Wisconsin	236,000,000	6,900,000
Ohio	767,000,000	12,300,000
Total	2,537,700,000	57,520,000

These 37,000 miles of railroads, having a nominal value of $2,537,700,000 (over two and a half billion dollars) and yielding annual net earnings of $57,520,000, are put down in the statistics of the day as part of the property of the States in which they lie. But it is a notorious fact that only a very small fraction of their values is owned in these States. The last report of the Iowa railroad commissioners states that only one out of forty stockholders in Iowa roads lives in the State, and only one-seventieth of the capital stock is held in the State. In Illinois a similar condition of things prevails. The official report of the railroad commissioners does not state what proportion of the aggregate capital stock of the Illinois roads is held in Illinois, but the location of the capital stock of the leading roads will assist us in forming an estimate. The Illinois Central has $29,000,000 capital stock, only $685,000, or less than 3 per cent., of which is owned in Illinois. Of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, about 5 per cent. of the capital stock is owned in Illinois; of the Ohio and Mississippi stock, only one-half of 1 per cent.; of the St. Louis, Alton and Terre Haute, less than one-half of 1 per cent. Taking these figures as a guide we may safely estimate that of the 19,000 miles of railway in Illinois, valued in stock and bonds at $740,000,000, the people of Illinois own 5 per cent.; the other 95 per cent. is owned in the rich industrial States of the East.

As Illinois is called the most prosperous and one of the richest agricultural States of the West, it may be inferred that the other States are in no better condition than it in the matter of railroad ownership, and therefore it may be broadly asserted that practically all the railroads of the seven States named, valued at $2,537,700,000 (two and a half billion dollars and over), are owned in the industrial States. The industrial States are therefore drawing a pretty round sum of money for one thing and another from the seven Western States named every year. The items may be stated as follows:

In protective taxes	$150,000,000
In interest on mortgages	270,000,000
In railroad net earnings	57,000,000
Total	477,000,000

The Western States are, in fact, being bled to death. Western farmers are actually becoming poorer and poorer every year. As a body they do not make a living, and the convincing proof of this fact is that their farms are fast passing under mortgage to the money-lending manufacturing States of the East. Twenty-five years ago these mortgages were few in number and small in amount; now they number millions and cover an aggregate value of thousands of millions, and all bear 6 to 8 per cent. interest.

The West does not own itself. It is owned by the industrial States. Twenty-six years of the malign, sectional, and oppressive policy of high tariff has done the work and done it effectually. The industrial States of the East, enriched beyond estimate by the annual tribute of $600,000,000 exacted for a quarter of a century from the other States under the false pretense of building up home manufactures, own all Western railroads, telegraph lines, and bridges, and hold mortgages on nearly all farms, their cities, and towns.

This condition of the farmers of the West results directly from the legislation of the Republican party, and, it seems to me, gentlemen on the other side of the House would feel it to be their duty to aid in finding a remedy for so glaring an evil. And yet we see them now resisting, by every resource at their command, the accomplishment of this object.

The Republican platform recently promulgated at Chicago declares that the party will—favor the entire repeal of the internal taxes rather than the surrender of any part of our protective system.

Two years ago all the gentlemen were clamorous for the protection of the farmers by the oleomargarine bill. This year they go to Chicago and, by their platform, demand a repeal of that law rather than any part of their tariff for protection.

Not satisfied with this attack on the farmer, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. FULLER], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and many other Republican gentlemen, insist upon the entire repeal of the tariff on sugar, a tax which has existed since the first tariff tax levied by the Government under the Constitution, and even anterior to that, to the tariff exacted during the period of the Confederation. Now, why are the gentlemen so hostile to the interests of the farmers?

Do they imagine they can elect anybody to any office against the votes of our honest farmers?

Do they imagine that this kind of Republican legislation will draw any votes to their party?

I can not think it is because they are really hostile to our agricultural interests; but I believe the country is rapidly coming to the conclusion that the Republican party is dominated and controlled by the great monopolies of the Northeast, and that the interests of the great mass of the people have, with that party, been subordinated and made a secondary consideration.

It was not always thus. Let us recall some of the utterances of these distinguished Republicans in the last Congress.

I read from volume 79, page 4895, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 25, 1886, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], speaking on the oleomargarine bill, said:

The agriculturists, who constitute the great foundation of industry—nearly one-half of our whole population—have for nearly a century submitted to taxation which tended to give a diversity of industries, and have rarely asked for taxation which would tend to benefit them directly. * * * It is objected that the proposed tax is too high, and that we do not need the revenue.

Mr. Chairman, in reply I call attention that the proposed tax is not so great as that upon the product of corn when it is made into whisky, or upon tobacco, or upon many articles imported to this country. * * * If gentlemen think we are getting too much revenue, it is perfectly competent to reduce internal taxation upon other articles, or to remove taxes, in whole or in part, upon some of the articles we import.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. FULLER], who has just struck his blow at the farmers, two years ago was equally earnest in his advocacy of the oleomargarine bill.

On page 4904 of the same volume of the RECORD I read that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] said, replying to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY]:

No man respects the gentleman more than I do and have done for years, but I regret that the trembling hand of age is now being laid upon the very foundation industry that gives life and vitality to the Republic. He would defend a few glutted money corporations and capitalists and strike down the purest industry that gives safety and business prosperity to the nation—the great farming industry. * * * I serve notice on Pennsylvania here and now that if there is to be no interest protected in this Chamber but iron, and if the farmers of this land and the great, glorious West are to be sacrificed to protect your iron industry, you will get your "eye-teeth" cut before many Congresses come and go. [Applause.] * * * The farmer does not often come into our presence demanding protection, but he is here now, and in earnest. In whatever way we strengthen him we add prosperity to every business pursuit in the land. Each owner of the soil is a stockholder in the Republic. As you strengthen, enrich, and protect that element you do add blessings to all the people.

On page 4966, same volume, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 26, I read that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] said:

Now, sir, I believe it to be a high duty to protect the agricultural industries from unfair rivals from within or from without. * * * Besides, are not the dairymen, the farmers, working people? They compose upward of 60 per cent. of our working people, and no people work harder.

On page 4969, May 26, I read that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], in further reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], said:

The gentleman assumes here to speak for the people whom I represent, and who have placed me here as the guardian of their interests. I thank him for his kind co-operation; but the farmers of Iowa reject the proffered aid. * * * So far as I have made the utterance that the Western country demands and will have protection—by argument if need be, but by war if necessary—I retract not a word. On that ground I stand, and will stand. I insist that tariff legislation is not the only medium by which the rights of the people can be protected.

It seems that two years ago this gentleman was determined to have war unless the farmers' rights were protected.

But now he and they go to Chicago and fling their banner to the breeze, with the inspiring rallying cry to the hosts of protection that rather than have one iota of protection taken off of iron or other imports, they would repeal the whole internal-revenue taxation, oleomargarine and all.

How will the dairymen of the country receive this astounding declaration?

In the same spirit of disregard for the interests of the farmers the Republican members of this House, with a few exceptions, have vehemently opposed the effort of the Democratic party to abolish or even reduce the tax on lumber, so as to enable the farmer to build himself a neat cottage and purchase more cheaply the lumber for his fences, wagons, and farming implements.

When the proposition to tax lumber was first brought before Congress twenty years since, a most distinguished member of the Republican party—he is its dictator and idolized leader to-day—denounced the project in unmeasured terms.

I read from the Congressional Globe, Fortieth Congress, second session, page 3049, June 10, 1868:

Mr. BLAINE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I desire to discuss briefly the amendment which the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means so vigorously opposes. And in the first place, let me say that during the entire war, when we were seeking everything on the earth, and in the skies, and in the waters under the earth, out of which taxation could be wrung, it never entered into the conception of Congress to tax breadstuffs—never. During the most pressing exigencies of the terrible contest in which we were engaged, neither breadstuffs nor lumber ever became the subject of one penny of taxation. What was the reason of this? Let me tell my friend from Ohio that it was not because of the influence of the rich grain-dealers at Chicago or Toledo or Milwaukee. It was because, if anything be universal, breadstuffs are universal; for they constitute literally "the staff of life."

If you impose on them a tax ever so small in amount it will be made a pretext by the very speculators of whom gentlemen talk for adding an appreciable amount to the cost of a barrel of flour. I do beseech this House not to sanction the principle of subjecting such an article to taxation for the sake of the paltry amount that is to be gained from this source.

Mr. WELKER. Does the gentleman expect to secure an exemption for lumber by advocating an exemption for breadstuffs? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. I am referring to breadstuffs because it illustrates a principle. I beseech this House not to sanction a tax on breadstuffs which will simply build up a mountain of prejudice for the sake of a mole-hill of revenue.

It will be observed from this last remark that, while speaking of breadstuffs, Mr. Blaine's real purpose was to oppose the tax which was then sought to be imposed on lumber. And it is very remarkable that his most devoted followers should now strenuously oppose Democrats in their efforts to enact tax laws which, twenty years ago, Mr. Blaine insisted was wise and necessary legislation. To show how earnest he was in his advocacy of free lumber, I will continue to read from Mr. Blaine's remarks on that occasion:

But, sir, I have said enough on that point. Now, as to the article of lumber. I again remind the House that there has never been a tax upon this article. The gentleman from Ohio may talk of this question as he pleases, but I say that wherever the Western frontiersman undertakes to make for himself a home, to till the soil, to carry on the business of life, he needs lumber for his cabin; he needs lumber for his fence; he needs lumber for his wagon or cart; he needs lumber for his plow; he needs lumber for almost every purpose in his daily life.

Mr. PAINE. Does he not need clothing also?

Mr. BLAINE. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to tell me why it is that these articles have never been taxed heretofore?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman mean to say they have never been taxed?

Mr. BLAINE. I do.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Were not the manufactures of wood taxed? Is not lumber wood?

Mr. BLAINE. Not at all; and I am surprised that a gentleman who lives so near Maine as the gentleman from Massachusetts should be so ignorant of what lumber is.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Will my friend allow me to ask whether the tax was not upon lumber, manufactured or unmanufactured?

Mr. BLAINE. I am not answerable for the singular verbiage incorporated in the act of March, which excepted the manufacture of lumber and breadstuffs.

The difference between manufactured and unmanufactured lumber is known to everybody, or ought to be known to everybody who attempts to draw the act. Boards, joists, work that comes from the saw-mill (for I use the generic phrase), is lumber. Where it goes through the planing-mill for finer purposes it is not classed as lumber, or if classed at all, as in the reciprocity treaty, it is called manufactured lumber, not unmanufactured lumber. The planing-mill is distinct from the saw-mill.

So we see that, at the threshold of the pending campaign, the Republican party is divided, not on sugar alone, but its members are at variance with the views of its most prominent leader upon the important question of the propriety of a tax on lumber.

Mr. Chairman, I have done. My sole object in addressing the House to-day was to make one more appeal for the farmer. The figures I have given can not be disputed. They show that, weighted as he is in the struggle for life and fortune by the calamitous effects of Republican legislation, he can not, under existing laws, hope for more than one-fifth of the prosperity which rewards the efforts of his more fortunate brother who is engaged in avocations which for twenty-seven years have enjoyed the fostering care and special favor of the party by whose laws the country has been ruled during all that period.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GEAR. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] be allowed to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. For how long?

Mr. RYAN. Until he concludes his remarks.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not ask more than five minutes additional.

Mr. STRUBLE. I must object to an indefinite extension.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the time of the gentleman from Alabama for five minutes?

Mr. BLAND. I object to all extensions; let us have a vote.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask but two minutes more.

Mr. BLAND. It is too hot to continue these discussions indefinitely.

Mr. MILLS. I ask for a vote on the pending proposition.

Mr. BAYNE. I want to make a remark before the vote is taken.

Mr. GEAR. If I can obtain the floor, I will yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. BLAND. I object.

Mr. HOOKER addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Mississipi [Mr. HOOKER] rise?

Mr. HOOKER. For the purpose of taking the floor and yielding it to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BLAND. I object to that.

Mr. HOOKER. If the Chair recognizes me, I have a right to yield my time to any gentleman I may designate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that he may be recognized for five minutes, and may yield his time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. BLAND. I object. Let us wait for cooler weather before indulging further in this speech-making. I call for a vote.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know what is the question before the House—whether we are not discussing it under the five-minute rule, and whether each member is not entitled to speak for five minutes if he wishes to do so?

The CHAIRMAN. He is not. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows, from clause 5, Rule XXIII:

5. When general debate is closed by order of the House, any member shall be allowed five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer, after which the member who shall first obtain the floor shall be allowed to speak five minutes in opposition to it, and there shall be no further debate thereon; but the same privilege of debate shall be allowed in favor of and against any amendment that may be offered to an amendment; and neither an amendment nor an amendment to an amendment shall be withdrawn by the mover thereof unless by the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. MILLS. I hope we will now have a vote. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. BAYNE. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 48.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. ROGERS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the tariff bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the tariff bill; and pending that motion I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to fifteen minutes; that is, to 2 o'clock.

Mr. DINGLEY. Nothing will be offered but substantial amendments, and I hope gentlemen will not limit the debate upon the paragraph.

Mr. BAYNE. I want five minutes, and that is all I want, and then I am done with sugar.

Mr. MILLS. What do gentlemen suggest on the other side?

Mr. REED. Limit the debate to the pending amendments. There are some matters of classification, and it is difficult to say now to what extent the debate should be limited upon them.

Mr. MILLS. Very well; then I will move that the debate on the pending amendments be limited to ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendments has been limited by order of the House to ten minutes.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I trust the proposition of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] will be acceptable to every Republican on this floor, without exception, and I hope it will be acceptable to every Democrat on this floor. The proposition of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] is to reduce the duty on sugar to an equivalent to 41 per cent.—a high rate of duty on a necessary of life. The present law places the duty on sugar at 82 per cent. ad valorem. That is to say, the specific duty is equivalent to that. The Mills bill proposes to retain the specific duty, but to reduce it to 68 per cent. ad valorem, putting on this necessary of life a high rate of duty. The amendment of the gentleman from Maine proposes to place the duty on sugar at the equivalent of 41 per cent. ad valorem, which is a high rate of duty on a necessary of life. The amendment of the gentleman from Maine, on the basis of last year's importation, will reduce the revenue $29,000,000 on a necessary of life.

With unction and with earnestness and with zeal free salt was advocated on that side of the House. If the whole duty on salt were paid by the consumer it would amount to 1 cent. upon each man, woman, and child. If the amendment of the gentleman from Maine be adopted, it will amount to 50 cents on each man, woman, and child, which is a tax to that extent.

Gentlemen who have declaimed so much in favor of reducing the duties on the necessaries of life are confronted now with a proposition. They are confronted, to use the language of the President, by a "condition." [Laughter.] They have the opportunity now by voting for this amendment to reduce the duty on that necessary of life to 41 per cent. ad valorem. Will you do it? You might as well do it, because you will be confronted with that condition until you put yourselves on record by a yea-and-nay vote for or against that proposition. And if you go to the country this fall voting against that proposition to reduce the duty to 41 per cent. ad valorem and attempt to keep the duty up to 82 per cent. ad valorem, the country will draw the proper inference and arrive at the conclusion that the gentlemen who have so strongly advocated reduction of taxes—for this is a tax—on the necessaries of life did not mean what they said, but that they meant to protect a Louisianian industry and sugar refineries, and that they had not the courage or the will to strike down the sugar trusts.

I have heard declamation on that side of the House against trusts. I have heard declamation against a high tax on the necessaries of life. You are confronted now with the opportunity of striking down trusts and confronted with the opportunity to-day of reducing the tax on a necessary of life. Will you do it? We shall see when the voters pass between the tellers on this proposition.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an article on "Our sugar industry—shall it be protected?" from a pamphlet recently issued by Henry A. Brown, ex-Treasury agent. I do not ask to have it read, but that it shall be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and that will be done.

Mr. KELLEY. In the course of the debate on Saturday I said if the duties on sugar were extraordinary or inordinate, graduate them; but I shall now be found passing through the tellers in favor of specific duties equivalent to 41 per cent. and a fraction ad valorem. [Applause.]

The article referred to is as follows:

OUR SUGAR INDUSTRY—SHALL IT BE PROTECTED?

With fivefold sources of sugar production in this country—cane, beet, sorghum, maple, and corn—and climate suitable to each, it is absurd to pretend that sugar producing should be left to tropical climes. Germany, France, Belgium, Holland, Austria, and Russia are not tropical climes, yet their sugar products flood the markets and rule the prices of sugar in London and New York.

France pays 2 cents per pound bounty on sugar exports, and virtually prohibits imports of sugar. Germany pays bounty on exports of sugar from 32 cents to about 63 cents per 100 pounds, according to grades, and virtually prohibits the importation of sugar. Germany and France alone produce enough beet sugar to supply the annual consumption of imported sugars in the United States.

Duties are levied as follows on sugars imported into European beet-sugar countries, which, having gained control of the sugar trade in England through her short-sighted abolition of sugar duty, now clamor for abolition of sugar duties in the United States for the same purpose:

	Cents.
France:
On brown sugar, ninety-eight degrees and under.....per pound...	4.38
On brown, above ninety-eight degrees, and on refined.....do.....	5.47
Germany:
On all raw sugars.....do.....	2.59
On all refined sugars.....do.....	3.25
Austria, etc.:
On all sugar under No. 19 Dutch standard.....do.....	3.27
On No. 19 Dutch standard and over, and on refined.....do.....	4.36

	Cents.
Italy:
On all sugars No. 20 Dutch standard or less ..... per pound...	4.65
On all sugars above No. 20 Dutch standard..... do.....	5.81
Netherlands:
On raw sugar ninety-nine degrees, and on refined ..... do.....	4.91
On melada and on grape sugar..... do.....	3.27
Belgium:
On class 4, under No. 7 Dutch standard..... do.....	3.00
On class 3, Nos. 7 to 10 Dutch standard, exclusive..... do.....	3.59
On class 2, Nos. 10 to 15 Dutch standard, exclusive..... do.....	3.95
On class 1, Nos. 15 to 18 Dutch standard, inclusive..... do.....	4.22
On refined over No. 18 Dutch standard and loaves..... do.....	4.49
On refined crystallized..... do.....	4.80
Spain: On sugar..... do.....	5.20
Denmark: On all sugar..... do.....	3.80

Duties are levied on sugars in all other sugar-producing countries (see C. R., 73½, 1887), ranging from about 2 cents to 7 cents per pound.

The average duty on dutiable sugars imported into the United States in 1887 was 2.03 cents per pound, or less than one-half the average duty levied on sugar in the countries above named, which was 4.17 cents per pound.

Consul L. G. Reed, at Barbadoes, the largest sugar producer of the West Indies (C. R. 86, November, 1887) says: "Male laborers on sugar estates are paid 20 cents per diem; females, 15 cents; children, 8 to 10 cents, with the addition of a little molasses every Saturday."

The prices paid for labor in Germany average for men 1.75 mark to 2 marks, or 40 to 48 cents per day without board; for women, 1.1 mark, or 27 cents a day. The price paid for labor in France averages 1.75 francs to 2 francs, or 35 to 50 cents a day for men, and 1 franc, or 20 cents per day for women; as compared with prices of labor in this country these facts tell the labor story, without referring to the still worse paid labor in China, India and other countries.

The above are average examples of wages paid laborers on sugar estates in most foreign-producing countries; while countries that pay a trifle more for labor, levy prohibitory duty on sugars, and the sugar industry of this country must compete with those countries or be wiped out. American sugar industries are entitled to, and require, national protection quite as much as the beet-sugar industries of Europe, or our own cotton, iron and wool-manufacturing industries.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] admit that the duty on sugar is a tax. Is this the only tax in the tariff? I am very glad, also, to hear the gentleman admit that 41 per cent. is a sufficiently protective tax upon this necessary of life, even though its raw material is to be taxed. I would like for the gentleman, however, to reconcile that statement with the position held by himself and held by his associates on that side of the House, that while 41 per cent. on refined sugar is sufficient, even with a high tax on raw sugars, yet the proposed 40 per cent. duty on woolens with raw wool free is an insufficient tax. Here is also a necessary of life and a protected industry. How is it, further, that 45 per cent. on steel rails is inadequate as alleged for the maintenance of that industry.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman pardon me——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I really have not the time to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DINGLEY. I only wanted to say that that is 40 per cent. ad valorem, while the 41 per cent. on sugar is specific. Now, if you will give us on woolens 38 per cent. specific there will be no difficulty in the way.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will be very glad to have the gentleman from Maine elaborate the position he occupies at any other time, but in the few minutes allotted to me I must decline to yield to him. I hope he may take an opportunity to reconcile the difference which exists on that side in reference to their attitude upon these two items of this bill. Steel rails, at least, are specific, and the protective part of the tariff on woolens has not been and is not specific nor so high as proposed in this bill.

Now, sir, the gentleman has spoken of the sugar trust. The refining of sugar, Mr. Chairman, and the production of raw or low-grade sugars—that production which is engaged in by the sorghum producers of the West, by the beet-growers of the West, and cane-growers of the South—are two entirely different and distinct pursuits. The refining of sugar is done mainly in the East. The chief seats of this industry are found in Philadelphia, in New York, and in Boston.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we find—I have figured a little hastily for the purpose of getting at the margins which have been considered necessary heretofore in regard to this industry—that the margin allowed for refining previous to the adoption of the present law, taking the average of sugars below No. 13, was 1.66 cents a pound as between raw sugars and refined sugars. That was then considered necessary by gentlemen upon the other side of the House. We know that the margin that you maintain between the raw sugars and the refined sugars is independent of the question of revenue and of the original question of the tax. It is one of those business matters that has to be settled in a business way whatever may be the tax you agree upon to start with. But, sir, when gentlemen of the other political party revised the tariff in 1883 they did not consider that even 1.66 cents a pound was an adequate margin, so they made it 1.68 cents and a fraction over.

Now, gentlemen, at that time when, as now, you were not dealing with an insufficiency of revenue, when in fact you were confronted by a redundancy of revenue, you deliberately established this as a business-like and proper margin between raw and unrefined sugars, your members on the Ways and Means Committee, and many of you here on the floor, have said that we were destroying this industry. You said at Chicago you would not surrender "any part" of these rates. You are in trouble. You are trying to unload. You now say we favor a trust. Let us see. If, now, we reduce the raw sugars 20 points and the higher grades or refined sugars 20 points, we should leave the margin for the maintenance of the industry at precisely the same figure at which it now stands—that is to say, 1.68½ cents per pound.

But, sir, what have we done? We have made the margin, not 1.68½, but 1.38⅝ of a cent. We have lowered the margin to the extent of $11,000,000 of the possible profits to the refineries of this country, and we consider that a very pronounced step towards breaking up the abuses under the trusts. I think gentlemen on the other side of the House should draw a distinction between what is necessary to stop the abuses of the trust, and what may be necessary for the maintenance of the industry itself. To escape a general reform of the many abuses of the tariff you are now willing to actually kill a selected industry. We want reform, not death. Reform will give life, joy, and increased prosperity to the masses everywhere. Where are your reproaches now? Who now is reckless and desperate?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. I ask that we have a vote on the pending amendment.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. ROGERS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (S. 1669) authorizing the Mississippi and Louisiana Bridge and Railroad Company, of Natchez, Miss., to construct a bridge over the Mississippi River at or near Natchez, Miss.; and

Joint resolution (S. R. 93) authorizing the District commissioners to designate a site for a statue of Benjamin Franklin.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 7883) granting a pension to Susan L. Watson;

An act (H. R. 6949) granting a pension to Emeline C. Young;

An act (H. R. 9284) granting a pension to Webster C. Webb;

An act (H. R. 9224) granting a pension to Belle M. Baker;

An act (H. R. 4831) granting a pension to Delilah Vandevender;

An act (H. R. 5114) granting a pension to Franklin Long;

An act (H. R. 5574) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Byers;

An act (H. R. 813) granting a pension to Mrs. Lovina J. Reeves;

An act (H. R. 888) granting a pension to John Magher;

An act (H. R. 469) granting a pension to Maria A. Salisbury and Almira Morgan, only children of Maj. Abner Morgan, of the Revolutionary Army;

An act (H. R. 885) to amend chapter 253 of the acts of the second session, Forty-fifth Congress, passed June 15, 1878, granting a pension to John Langland;

An act (H. R. 8510) for the relief of Mary Command;

An act (H. R. 8299) for the relief of William M. Dayton;

An act (H. R. 3125) for the relief of Susan Jones;

An act (H. R. 3568) for the relief of B. S. Van Buren;

An act (H. R. 4770) for the relief of Franklin White;

An act (H. R. 7693) granting an increase of pension to Peter C. Cheeks; and

An act (H. R. 9347) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Buck.

THE TARIFF.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. MILLS. I ask a vote on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine which has been read.

The question being taken, there were on a division—ayes 79, noes 97.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 86, noes 105.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEBER. I now offer the amendment notice of which I gave on Saturday.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 329 to 346, inclusive, and insert the following:

"All sugars not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color shall pay duty on their polariscopic test as follows, namely:

"All sugars not above No. 13 Dutch standard in color, all tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, testing by the polariscope not above seventy-five degrees, shall pay a duty of 1.15 cents per pound, and for every additional degree or fraction of a degree not above ninety degrees shown by the polariscopic test they shall pay thirty-two thousandths of a cent per pound additional.

"All sugars not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color, testing by the polariscope above ninety degrees and not above ninety-one degrees, shall pay a duty of 1.90 cents per pound, and for every additional degree or fraction of a degree not above ninety-seven degrees shown by the polariscopic test they shall pay five-hundredths of a cent per pound additional.

"All sugars testing by the polariscope above ninety-seven degrees shall be classified with sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color.

"All sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color shall be classified by the Dutch standard of color and pay duty as follows, namely."

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Chairman, as this is a subject of considerable importance, I desire to ask consent that I may proceed without the limit required by the rules.

Mr. KELLEY. I move the gentleman have time to explain his amendment.

Mr. MILLS. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. WEBER. I think about thirty minutes.

Mr. MILLS. I hope we shall get through with this schedule to-day.

Mr. WEBER. If the gentleman will allow me, I believe the abuses that have been spoken of by the gentleman from Illinois can be corrected by a proper classification of the sugar schedule; and I do not believe gentlemen on the other side will care to put obstacles in the way of preventing the undoubted fradulent importation of sugar.

Mr. MILLS. I am willing to give the gentleman fifteen minutes, if he will accept that.

Mr. CANNON. I hope he will be allowed to proceed thirty minutes.

Mr. MILLS. I will give him fifteen minutes.

Mr. REED. This is an important matter.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILKINSON] was allowed to proceed almost ad libitum.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana. I renew the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the objection insisted upon.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman from Indiana will withdraw his objection.

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana. At the earnest request of my friends I withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now suggested that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for twenty-five minutes. Is there further objection?

There was no further objection.

Mr. WEBER. The amendment proposed by me is in the nature of a reclassification of the sugar schedule, and is not designed to interfere with the rates proposed by the committee. It is assumed, at least I assume, that the majority of this House purpose standing by the Committee on Ways and Means as to rates, and the reclassification proposed is substantially upon the rates prescribed by the bill of the committee. The amendment is in the interest of the sugar producers as well as of the consumers of this country, and is not inimical to the interests of the refiner so far as the refining interests, pure and simple, are concerned; but the amendment does aim to strike, and I believe it will effectively strike, at the viciousness of the system which is the outgrowth of the existing law, and will result in stamping out practices that have been indulged in by some of the sugar refiners and importers whose trade operations were monopolistic long before they were combined in a sugar trust.

The object of the sugar duty, Mr. Chairman, no matter what it may have been in the days gone by, whether for revenue or for protection, or for both combined, is primarily the protection of the sugar-growers of this country. How far this object falls short in the bill of the committee and in what degree it fails, a careful examination of the existing law and the practical working of the system under the law will reveal. The proposition of the committee is but a horizontal reduction of that fraud-inviting and fraud-resulting system. The committee—and when I say the committee I mean the Democratic majority of the committee, for that seems to have been the committee—the committee seems to have started out with good intentions. The original bill brought into this House fixed the color-line requiring the polariscopic test at No. 16 Dutch standard or under, and repealed that provision of existing law requiring the payment of a drawback on exported refined sugar supposed to equal only the amount of the duty originally collected, less 1 per cent. retained by the Government.

The amended bill, as reported by Mr. MILLS, drops the color line to No. 13, and restores the provision paying drawbacks. This amended bill, this sudden change of front on the part of the committee—always dangerous in the face of the enemy, so the military authorities tell us—this overthrow of sensible intention in the direction of true reform, point suspiciously to the fine Italian hand of the sugar trust. The instrument used to carry out their purposes being the Committee on Ways and Means of this House; their reliance for success being the complication of the subject and the general lack of understanding of its practical working.

I do not charge that this committee was consciously influenced by the agents of the sugar trust; but, sir, the history of the sugar frauds upon the revenues of our Government and the sudden conversion of the Ways and Means Committee, as is evidenced by the schedule as it now exists in the bill compared with the schedule as it originally came to the House, seemingly indicates that the controlling sources of information upon which their amended action was based were the agents of the sugar trust.

Before the existing schedule went into effect in 1883 sugar duties were levied according to the Dutch standard of color alone. Up to that time nine-tenths of the sugar coming into this country came in as of No. 10 Dutch standard, or under.

When JOHN SHERMAN was Secretary of the Treasury he became satisfied that millions of pounds of high-grade sugars came into this country colored to resemble lower grades in order to escape the greater duties imposed upon the higher-colored sugars. He ordered the application of the polariscopic test, in order to ascertain their true saccharine quality upon which to rate the duties. The action of Secretary Sherman was resisted. The power of the courts was invoked; and in the case of Collector Merritt vs. Welsh the courts held that the application of the polariscope test required by Secretary Sherman to detect the true quality of these sugars was beyond the letter and spirit of the law. From that time until revived in 1883 the polariscope was relegated to the rear. But during that polariscopic period of two or three years the increase of the sugar revenues are estimated to be nearly $5,000,000.

This decision of the Supreme Court of the United States referred to was rendered late in 1881, and in the tariff revision of 1883 the defects of the old system were sought to be remedied. The remedy was in the right direction, but it did not go far enough. The polariscope test was properly required, but only as to sugars grading No. 13 Dutch standard in color or under. Up to that time substantially all the sugars imported came in as of No. 13 in color or under. With such light as that Congress fixed the polariscopic test to apply to the sugar such as had up to that time been imported.

Now, I invite the attention of the committee to a study of some official statistics bearing, I think, most effectively upon this feature of the case.

In 1879 there came into this country of imported sugar 1,598,000,000 pounds, of which 1,597,000,000 pounds came in as of No. 13 or under. In 1880 there came in 1,592,000,000 pounds, of which 1,589,000,000 pounds came in as of No. 13 or under. In 1881 there came in 1,869,000,000 pounds, of which 1,867,000,000 pounds came in as of No. 13 or under. In 1882 there came in 1,913,000,000 pounds, of which 1,911,000,000 pounds came in as of No. 13 or under. I skip the year 1883 for the reason that in the middle of that year the polariscope appeared legally on the scene and was applied to all sugars of No. 13 Dutch standard and under commencing with a duty of 1.40 cents per pound for sugars testing not above 75 per cent. saccharine strength and adding four-hundredths of a cent per pound for each additional degree.

In 1884 there was imported 2,437,000,000 pounds, of which there came in claiming to be No. 13, but testing over ninety-one degrees, 288,000,000 pounds.

Now, the normal or natural color, as it used to be when color determined the quality, and upon which our tariff rates are founded, of sugars testing ninety-one degrees saccharine strength is No. 13 Dutch standard in color, and up to the date of the legal polariscope, in 1883, the highest number of pounds imported of sugars above No. 13 was 3,000,000 pounds; but as soon as the polariscope test was applied and the application of it limited to No. 13 the amount over No. 13, as determined by the color test, grew from 3,000,000 pounds to 288,000,000 pounds, testing by the polariscope ninety-one degrees, and therefore properly belonging to a color grade above No. 13, and subject to a duty under the law of 2.75 instead of 2.04 cents per pound. That was in 1884, and in 1885 the amount of increase had grown to 512,000,000 pounds.

In 1886 the increase in the imports of sugar over No. 13 was 826,000,000 pounds, and in 1887 the increase of imported sugar claiming to be No. 13, and appearing in color to be No. 13, but testing ninety-one degrees or over, and by that test shown to properly belong to the color class above No. 13, was 1,389,000,000 pounds, nearly one-half of the entire amount of sugars imported into the United States, paying 2.04 cents per pound for ninety-one degrees test because they were classed with No. 13 in color, when they should have paid, according to the color class above, to which their polariscope test consigns them, and which would have required at least 2.75 cents per pound. Now, either the sugar-planters of this country were deprived of the benefit of the protection involved between 2.04 (which would be the amount on No. 13 sugar testing ninety-one degrees) and 2.75, which would be the duty under existing law if they were above 13 in color—either, I say, the planters of this country were deprived of the benefit of that protection—or this vast sum remained in the pockets of the sugar trust.

But this is not all. There is more iniquity in that provision of the bill relating to drawbacks upon exported refined sugars, which the committee intended originally to repeal, but which for some reason as yet unexplained, but as to which, although explanation has been repeatedly invited, particularly by my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the committee have maintained a most discreet and commendable silence.

We may well look with suspicion upon the business of exporting refined sugars from this country to England upon the basis of drawbacks which shall equal only the amount of duty originally paid upon the importation of raw sugars. When we recall the facts that both countries go to the same sources of supply for the raw material; that the United States certainly has no advantage in respect of cost of capital employed to run the business of sugar refining, and no advantage in respect of cost of plant; that we stop the raw material half way, we may say, at our ports, unload it, cart it to the refineries, refine it with higher-priced labor, recart it to the wharves, reship it, retaining 1 per cent. of the duty originally collected, and that we ship it to the country which buys the raw material at the same sources of supply that we do, and undersell the sugar refiners of that country in their own market, certainly such a state of facts forces us irresistibly to the conclusion that there is something wrong somewhere. Even the very gauzy theory which I have heard announced so often upon the floor of this House during the tariff discussion, which has been so copiously dealt out to the wage-workers of this country to lull them into acquiescence to take this strong free-trade draught, and which I presume will be repeated from every Democratic stump in the country from now until election, the theory that our labor is so much more productive because it is so much more skillful than the labor of other countries—even that theory as applied to sugar refining vanishes in the face of the fact that the labor cost of refining sugar is less than one-fifth of a cent per pound.

Now I want to give the committee a few figures with reference to the sugar drawbacks, and I regret that my friend from Louisiana [Mr. WILKINSON] is not in his seat, in order that I might, with the official statistics, correct the statement he made this morning that since the reduction of drawbacks on the first grade of sugar, exports of refined sugar had almost entirely ceased.

In 1883 we paid as drawbacks on refined sugars exported $884,856.48. In 1884, after the system under the new tariff, which limited the polariscope test to No. 13 sugars, had fairly come into operation, we paid $1,579,680.61—nearly double the payment of the preceding year. In 1885—and I desire the gentleman from Louisiana to notice that there is no falling off—the amount leaped up to $6,695,892.52. In 1886 we paid $5,638,807.53, and in 1887 $5,466,501.79. I venture to say, Mr. Chairman, that in the last three years, because of fraudulent importations, $1,000,000 per annum was paid as drawbacks by the Government more than had been originally collected as duties. It is certainly a little singular that as the fraudulent importations grow the volume of exported refined sugar swells.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, you can not honestly refine sugar in this country and export it to England simply upon the basis of the duty originally collected, for the conditions are clearly against any such thing. The sugar comes in originally at a lower rate than it should pay according to law, and it goes out upon the basis of color at the rate which it is presumed to have paid in the first instance and ought to have paid, but which it did not pay. When you get this business of exporting refined sugar down to an honest basis, assuming that the elements of labor cost and capital remain the same as now, you will have stopped the business of exporting refined sugars.

Mr. Chairman, the people want relief from this burden of sugar taxation. I do not believe that they desire this relief solely because of the amount of tax which they pay, but because many of them believe that the true principle of protection, namely, the protection of our labor against the cheaper labor of foreign countries, is not involved, and that the sugar tariff is a barrier against nature, against climatic influences, against the decrees of the Almighty.

The distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], whom I am glad to see before me, apparently interested in my remarks, stated a few days ago with some earnestness and with that eloquence which usually characterizes his utterances, but as I thought in a spirit of boastful pride, that the free labor of the South to-day is cheaper than the slave labor of ante-bellum days. When the gentleman made that declaration I thought that even this principle of protection, so far as it means the protection of our labor against the cheaper labor of foreign countries, might be considered in this case to have failed. Mr. Chairman, the people do not object to this tax solely on account of its amount. They object also because they believe that a certain percentage of the tax which they pay (and which in my judgment is wholly a tax, because the home production being so insignificant in comparison with the total consumption does not at all affect the prices) does not appear in the Treasury of the United States, but remains in the pockets of the sugar refiners.

But, sir, knowing how completely that side of the House is wedded to the free-trade heresies of Democracy; having witnessed during the past few weeks with considerable admiration the grand discipline that has prevailed over there, whether brought about by the crack of the party lash, by coaxing, or by holding up the subtle influences, insinuatingly and opportunely put forward, of a well directed veto message; having noticed at least a strengthening of your lines at every weak point by sweetening our Louisiana friends with sugar, capturing Kentucky, perhaps, with whisky, wheedling South Carolina with paddy rice, screwing the courage of Connecticut up to the sticking point with wood-screws, and attaching one end of Chicago to the procession with good American stick-tight glue [laughter], I am ready to acknowledge that the two "wings of Democracy" flap loving and harmoniously together; and I am forced to admit that you on that side can not properly be charged with being infidels, for you certainly have taken good care of your own household.

But knowing also, Mr. Chairman, that gentlemen on the other side will act entirely in accord with the dictates of the Committee on Ways and Means, and recognizing the wisdom of bowing to the inevitable, I make no useless struggle for a reduction of duties; but I do plead for a reclassification of the schedule in order that there may be lifted from the shoulders of our people that portion of the burden founded in fraud and resulting in fraud, and for the purpose of showing that I am not entirely in error when I say that the people of this country demand relief from the burden of the sugar tax, I will read a brief extract from good Democratic authority, the loyalty and fealty of which I believe has not yet been questioned, and I presume will not be by any gentleman on the other side of the House. The New York World of July 3 says:

It is desirable to take the tax off sugar, since it is an article of universal consumption and the Government does not need the revenue. But there is a wide misapprehension as to the nature of the tax. The duty has much more of a revenue character than protective. Thorough free-traders prefer to have the tax continued, since five times or thereabouts as much sugar is imported as is produced in the country. And this has been so long the case that the protective idea with respect to it is practically demonstrated to be a failure. It is not profitable to raise sugar in the United States, and it is high time that poor people had ceased to be taxed to sustain the vain attempt.

As to the amendment I have offered, it is upon the basis of the rates submitted in the bill proposed by the committee. It begins at No. 13 Dutch standard in color, testing seventy-five degrees, with a duty of 1.15 cents per pound, as provided by the committee's bill, and thirty-two one-thousandths of a cent per pound for every additional degree or fraction of a degree up to and including ninety degrees.

Up to this point I am with the committee bill exactly. The variation from the committee's schedule, it may be said, begins here, for it requires all sugars not above 16 Dutch standard in color, testing by the polariscope above ninety and not above ninety-one degrees, shall pay a duty of 1.90 cents per pound, and for all additional degrees up to and including ninety-seven degrees of polariscopic test they shall pay five one-hundredths of a cent additional. In other words, as sugars increase in richness, as demonstrated by the polariscope, the duty increases.

But it will be observed that the last degree of sugar, testing ninety-seven, pays 2.20 cents per pound, precisely the amount provided in the committee's bill for sugars above 13 and not above 16. Sugars testing by polariscope above ninety-seven degrees shall be classified with sugar above No. 16 Dutch standard in color. From this point the exact text of the bill is resumed. [Applause.]

Pass that amendment and it will stop the refiners who indulge in these fraudulent practices. It will not injure Louisiana producers of sugar, but it will give them all the protection involved in the schedule, and will protect the consumers by just the amount between honest and fraudulent importations, and which now remains in the pockets of the sugar refiners of the country. [Applause.]

I reserve whatever time I have remaining.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I believe I have been recognized, and I will yield only for a vote.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of submitting some remarks.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. In that case I will continue to occupy the floor for the purpose of answering one or two points made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEBER] in the remarks which he has just submitted.

In regard to the matter of the amount of duty paid on the raw sugar which has entered into the refined sugar, that is certified to the proper officials under Treasury regulations by the refiners. The Secretary of the Treasury has always had and now has the power to fix a limit beyond which these estimates shall not be paid. Under past Secretaries our export trade in refined sugar, based on the idea that refiners did not make false certification, has been very great. I am not prepared in this matter to impeach anybody's integrity, and so far as I know nobody can do it successfully. Secretary Folger was an able, painstaking, honest man. On the 9th of June, 1883, he issued the following order:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., June 9, 1883.

To collectors of customs and others:

Until the 1st day of September, 1883, on the exportation of sugar and sirup, refined wholly from imported sugars, tank-bottoms, sirups of cane-juice, melada, concentrated melada, or concrete and concentrated molasses, upon which duties shall be paid at the rates prescribed by the tariff of March 3, 1883, drawback will be allowed at the following rates:

1. On refined loaf, cut-loaf, crushed, granulated, and powdered sugar, stove-dried or dried by other equally effective processes, 2.82 cents per pound.

2. On refined white coffee sugar, undried, and above No. 20, Dutch standard in color, 2.28 cents per pound.

3. On all grades of refined coffee sugar, No. 20, Dutch standard, and below, in color, 1.84 cents per pound.

4. On sirup resulting entirely from the refining of the above-enumerated imported materials, 4 cents per gallon.

The allowance on sugars will be subject to the deduction of 1 per cent., and the allowance on sirup to the deduction of 10 per cent., as prescribed by law.

CHAS. J. FOLGER, Secretary.

He next issued this circular:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., October 3, 1883.

To collectors of customs and others:

The provisional rates of drawback specified in the Department's circular of June 9, 1883, No. 77, will continue in force until January 1, 1884, unless sooner revoked.

CHAS. J. FOLGER, Secretary.

Then on February 7, 1884, he issued this circular:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., February 7, 1884.

To collectors of customs and others:

The following rates of drawback on sugar and its products, established provisionally by the circular of June 9, 1883, are hereby declared to be permanent:

1. On refined loaf, cut-loaf, crushed, granulated, and powdered sugar, stove-dried, or dried by other equally effective process, 2.82 cents per pound.

2. On refined white coffee sugar, undried, and above No. 20, Dutch standard in color, 2.28 cents per pound.

3. On all grades of refined coffee sugar, No. 20, Dutch standard, and below, in color, 1.84 cents per pound.

4. On sirup resulting entirely from the refining of the above-enumerated imported materials, 4 cents per gallon.

The allowance on sugars will be subject to the deduction of 1 per cent., and the allowance on sirup to the deduction of 10 per cent., as prescribed by law.

CHAS. J. FOLGER, Secretary.

Then on July 23, 1884, Acting Secretary Coon issued this order:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., July 23, 1884.

To collectors of customs and others:

On the exportation of sugar refined from imported molasses, upon which the duty of 4 cents per gallon, prescribed by the tariff of March 3, 1883, has been paid, a drawback will be allowed at the rate of fifty-five hundredths of a cent per pound, less the legal retention of 1 per cent.

CHAS. E. COON, Acting Secretary.

Exports continued large and complaints of fraud were freely made, as now. On September 28 Acting Secretary Fairchild issued this order:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., September 28, 1886.

To collectors of customs and others:

On all refined loaf, cut-loaf, crushed, granulated, and powdered sugar, stove-dried or dried by other equally effective process, exported on and after November 1, 1886, drawback will be allowed at the rate of 2.60 cents per pound, less the legal retention of 1 per cent.

The above rate is provisionally established in lieu of the existing rate of 2.82 cents per pound, pending an inquiry as to what further reduction may be necessary.

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Acting Secretary.

The principal exports were of granulated sugar. On the 3d of February, 1888, Secretary Fairchild issued this order:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 3, 1888.

To collectors of customs and others:

The rate of drawback provisionally established by the circular of September 28, 1886 (Synopsis 7780), on all refined loaf, cut-loaf, crushed, granulated, and powdered sugar, stove-dried or dried by other equally effective process, namely, 2.60 cents per pound, less the legal retention of 1 per cent., is hereby declared to be permanent.

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

You see Secretary Fairchild, first acting for Secretary Manning, and since acting for himself, has cut down Secretary Folger's allowance on granulated sugar.

Mr. DINGLEY. From 2.82 to 2.60.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman from Maine is correct.

Mr. WEBER. They were reduced by Mr. Fairchild.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Further on.

Mr. WEBER. That was the first reduction.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. But first under Mr. Manning's administration.

Now as to exports. Honest exports we do not wish to stop. It gives work for our people. During the fiscal year of 1887 the exports of refined sugar were something over $11,000,000, if I remember correctly.

Mr. WEBER. Are you speaking of sugar?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Yes, of refined sugar. I think it was something over $11,000,000.

Mr. WEBER. That is incorrect.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. No, I think it is not; but on the contrary that it is accurate. But during the fiscal year just closed this export trade has been very small. It has not been more than one-fourth or one-fifth what it was before. If you say there was fraud, I say this is evidence of better things now. I expect the Secretary has got it about right. I remember the statements of refiners with whom I have talked in relation to this matter. They have complained of what they consider the insufficiency of the present amount of drawbacks paid by the Treasury Department, and they have stated that under the restrictions of the Treasury Department the amount of the export of refined sugar has diminished until it has become merely nominal. I have not the exact data, but they complain bitterly.

Mr. WEBER. Here are all of the official statistics which the gentleman can use if he desires to do so.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I do not contradict the official statistics.

Mr. WEBER. Let me read, then. I do not think the gentleman heard me when I stated the facts derived from the official statistics.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Perhaps, if I had heard what the gentleman said, I would not be making any remarks now. I listened to the gentleman, but could not fully hear him.

Mr. WEBER. I have them here and will read them if you will allow me.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It is not necessary now.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that question of fraudulent drawbacks on exports is a question which rests at present where it has always rested—with the Treasury Department; and while I do not mean to contend against official figures, yet I have stated with some degree of confidence what I have and remember and what has been communicated to me by refiners and others who are perfectly acquainted with the subject.

It is clear to me that this matter is at least in safe condition at this time as respects frauds. It is a matter we always have had to leave with the Department, and I see no better way now. There may be a better way, but it is not proven. We had better reject these experiments, and not forget that we are doing better than we have done.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WEBER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arkansas be permitted to occupy further time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. No; while I thank the gentleman, yet I will not occupy the time of the committee now, though possibly I may take occasion later on to discuss certain other points in connection with the pending amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to strike out the last word. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York, changing the classification of sugars under the tariff laws, involves more technical knowledge of the subject than all of us perhaps have conveniently at hand. But there is one fact in regard to imported sugars and the tariff duty upon them which almost every well-informed person in this country knows. Sugars between No. 13 and No. 16 Dutch standard, as they are now produced abroad under modern processes of manufacture, are fit, or measurably fit, for consumption by the people of this country without being put through the refineries. I ought to say rather that they would be fit for consumption without refining, if they were not artificially colored to take advantage of our tariff laws. They are, or rather would be, pure enough, clean enough, and light-colored enough to suit the taste of a large proportion of the people of the United States.

But it so happens that the classification of our sugar tariff imposes a higher duty upon sugars lighter in color than No. 13 Dutch standard. Hence the foreign producer has a strong motive to darken the color of his sugar in order to take advantage of the lower duty. He changes the color of his sugar by artificial means before it passes through the custom-house. The result is that after it has passed the custom-house it is forced to go through the refineries in order to get rid of the artificial coloring instead of going directly, as it otherwise would, to the breakfast table of the American consumer. Hence the existing sugar tariff, as well as the Mills bill, for the Mills bill perpetuates the abuse, compels the American consumer to pay a tribute of about a cent a pound to the sugar-refining trust on a large portion of the sugar which he uses. This is the evil which the amendment of the gentleman from New York proposes to cure.

The Committee on Ways and Means also proposed to correct this evil when they made the first draught of their bill for the use of the committee. My colleague [Mr. CANNON] has already called attention to the amazing change of front executed by the Committee on Ways and Means between the time when they printed the first draught of their bill and the time when they submitted the bill for the consideration of the House.

The gentleman from New York has just now declared that he thought the "fine Italian hand" of the sugar trust might be discerned in this amazing change in the text of the bill. He is not far out of the way. The members of the Committee on Manufactures as well as the members of the Committee on Ways and Means would probably admit that the change was due to evidence given by New York sugar refiners before the Committee on Manufactures when that committee was investigating the sugar trust under a resolution of my colleague [Mr. MASON] which passed the House January 25. Three members of the Committee on Manufactures are also majority members of the Ways and Means. They must have begun their investigation in February. The pending bill was reported early in April.

I regret very much, Mr. Chairman, that the resolution of my colleague [Mr. MASON] was not confined to its original scope of an investigation of the sugar trust. If it had been, we should perhaps have had a report from the committee long ago. It would have been of some benefit to us in the consideration of the provisions of the pending bill relating to the sugar duties. That was undoubtedly the intention of my colleague in introducing it. The scope of that resolution was so broadened by the House that it covered not only the sugar trust, but the Standard Oil trust, and all the other trusts of which we have heard so much during the discussion of the pending bill. I am glad to have all these trusts investigated, but I wish the committee had seen fit to make at least a partial report of the evidence taken, so that we could have had some benefit at this session from their investigations.

It seems to me it would have been only fair for the gentlemen on the Committee on Manufactures who are also members of the Committee on Ways and Means to see to it that at least a partial report was made, including all of the testimony taken in relation to the sugar trust. It is not enough, in my estimation, that in a practical matter, a matter of grave importance of this kind, the facts should be familiar to but three or four gentlemen, however eminent and able they may be. If we in this House are called upon to vote for or against a proposed revision of the tariff laws, we ought to be placed in possession of all the information that is accessible to that committee or any other committee of the House. Therefore I say I regret very much the report was not made months ago.

I introduced a resolution this morning on the call of States calling for an immediate report from that committee of the evidence taken in regard to the sugar trust, and also the evidence in regard to the Standard Oil trust. That, also, is an important matter. The resolution of my colleague [Mr. MASON] was introduced with reference to legislation to be had during the present session of Congress; and yet by the slow method in which the work of that committee has dragged itself along we are not likely to get any practical benefit from it this summer or even next winter.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think I reveal no committee secrets when I state that the evidence taken by the committee on these two points has been concluded months since, and that it could have been presented to the House whenever it chose to call for it.

Mr. ADAMS. On what points?

Mr. BUCHANAN. On the Standard Oil trust and the sugar trust.

Mr. ADAMS. Well, perhaps it is my fault that I was not aware of that fact. Theoretically every one of us may be supposed to know what goes on in every committee, but practically we do not.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And I see no objection to the House ordering that testimony to be printed at once.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have a copy of the evidence on the sugar trust in my hand.

Mr. ADAMS. It ought to be in the hands of every member; and the evidence on the Standard Oil trust also.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard the pro forma amendment as withdrawn.

Mr. MILLS. Is there anything pending before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment to strike out and insert.

Mr. HOUK. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed not to exceed fifteen minutes. I do not think I will occupy ten.

Mr. MILLS. I am bound to object. We must get on with this bill.

Mr. HOUK. Then I will modify my request and ask for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee that he be allowed ten minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Chairman, I am a protectionist because I believe it protects, and were I on the Ways and Means Committee and charged with preparing a bill looking to the permanency of the protective system I would place everything on the free-list which was not produced in this country, or which we do not have the means of producing in the early future in sufficient quantities to supply in a great degree the demands of the people. Everything which we can not produce should go on the free-list, because to place a duty on such articles comes within the reasoning of the free-traders, that the amount of the duty is added to the price.

The protective theory, as I understand it, is that protection should be extended to all the industries of this country when they can produce the article in sufficient quantities to supply the demand and meet the wants of consumers. This brings about competition, and the merest tyro knows that competition reduces prices. All human experience proves this to be a practical truth. It is true in every branch of trade that a sufficient supply and competition in the trade lessens prices and cheapens the article to the consumer.

If I had been called upon to vote on the question of reducing or destroying the duty on sugar at the commencement of this session, being somewhat illy informed on the subject up to that time, I should, following my natural inclinations to maintain the protective policy of this country as the great American policy to develop and build up, have voted to maintain the tariff duty as it stands to-day. But, as I now understand it, we produce in this country less than one-ninth of the sugar necessary to supply the consumption of the American people. That fact presenting itself, uncontradicted so far as I know, without any great assurance that this production can be increased commensurate with the demand and sufficient to supply the American market, I hold that as a true protectionist it is not the policy of the Republican party to keep anything on the protected list which is not produced in such quantities in this country as to create competition in the American market and thereby reduce the price. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, for one Republican in the interest of protection, that we may not extend it to those industries which are of such small importance as to be insufficient to supply our home market and home consumption, I say I am inclined when the proper time comes to vote to put sugar upon the free-list, and shall do so unless the production shall have greatly increased in the mean time.

But I apprehend, Mr. Chairman, it makes but little difference how we vote in this committee. The decree has gone forth from the caucus, which seems to be as unalterable as the laws of the Medes and Persians, that this bill from the Ways and Means Committee is not to be marred, not to be changed in letter or line except for the purpose of accommodating some Democratic member in a district where to leave the article on the free-list would endanger his re-election. We have seen a good deal to confirm the idea that the Democracy regard the tariff as "a local issue."

I did not vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois for the reason that I, as a true protectionist, fear the result of the policy of inaugurating the bounty system by the sanction of the Republican party. I fear the result of the friends of protection inaugurating the policy of a bounty in lieu of a protective tariff. Where would it lead us to? If you strike down the tariff on sugar and substitute a bounty, why not strike down on iron, on iron ore, on woolen goods, on cotton goods, on every conceivable fabric that is now manufactured abroad and imported into this country, and give the manufacturer a bounty? I apprehend, if we shall establish this precedent of giving a bounty for the production of sugar, that we will open the gate, the entering wedge will be started, and it will finally be driven through all of our American industries, and our free-trade friends will from time to time come forward, placing this precedent in our presence, and, appealing to our past action, make war on every industry now built up and in a state of prosperity in this country by proposing to take the duty off and give a bounty.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I understand the authors of this bill, the primary object of it is for the purpose of reducing the surplus in the Treasury. Where is there an intelligent man who has studied this question and believes a reduction of duty on foreign goods and foreign importations will reduce the surplus? Does not all experience go to show that whenever the duties on foreign productions imported into this country are reduced the revenues are increased instead of diminished? Was not that so with sugar? Therefore I appeal to gentlemen on this side, and I appeal to gentlemen on the other side to let us meet this issue fairly and squarely. Talk of no bounties. Do one of two things: either place a duty on sugar or put it on the free-list.

Away with your bounties. I want nothing to do with them, nor do I believe the American people will sustain the bounty policy. I do not believe the American mind is in a humor to encourage bounties on this, that, or the other enterprise. Therefore I shall vote to oppose bounties to any enterprise, for the production of sugar or any other manufactured article. Let the protective system stand, and be applied to every industry worthy of encouragement for the benefit of the American laborer, farmer, tradesman, and manufacturer; but let us not reverse the American policy and drift off after new and strange doctrines summed up in the word "bounty."

The American policy has been to foster manufactures, increase the wages of labor, create a home market, and build up the country by a protective tariff. This Government has never committed itself to the policy of bounty-giving and has not granted bounties in more than one or two instances. These were the exception; a protective tariff has been the rule. Let us adhere to it as a trade regulation in all proper cases and whenever the circumstances and conditions surrounding any industry justify governmental aid in the interest of the people.

But now, keeping in mind the primary object you have in view in this bill, if you desire to reduce the surplus there are but two ways to do it. One way is, instead of reducing duties, to put the article on the free-list absolutely and stop any revenue from that source. The other way, the most practical way, is to repeal the tax on tobacco and on spirits used in the arts. If you please, I will go further and vote to wipe out the entire internal-revenue system from the pages of the statute-books of the United States.

Mr. CHEADLE. Except the tax on oleomargarine?

Mr. HOUK. Except the tax on oleomargarine, and we will collect that in another way. The war taxes are the taxes collected through the internal-revenue system, except the little tax on oleomargarine. Let the war taxes be wiped out and the protective system stand.

If we desire to reduce the surplus in the Treasury, let us repeal the internal-revenue system, repeal the tax on tobacco at any rate. Every Democrat who made a speech in Tennessee for ten years up to the election of Cleveland, so far as my knowledge goes, made war on the entire internal-revenue system from A to izzard. And I have heard and answered many of them by apologizing for the law and condemning the methods of its execution.

I would like to hear from our Democratic friends from my State. I would like to know how they stand on this question. I would like to have them tell me and tell this House, and through this House tell their constituents, whether they are for the repeal of the tobacco tax, or the modification or repeal of the internal-revenue system, or whether they are against it; because I tell the gentlemen their constituents will talk to them about it this fall. There will be music on this subject in many parts of Tennessee between this time and the election in November, and I am curious to know how our Tennessee Democrats are going to follow the tune.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLS. Let us have a vote on this amendment.

Mr. HOUK. I want to call attention to just one other thing.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

Mr. HOUK. I do not ask five minutes. Give me two minutes.

Another way to aid in reducing the surplus is to do our duty here, bring the Blair bill out of the Committee on Education and have a vote upon it. That will aid in reducing the surplus and will give the bread of life to the ignorant children of the South and all other parts of the country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Again, I have seen it charged in the newspapers that our candidate for the Presidency voted against the Blair bill.

I have here the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Forty-eighth Congress, first session, and on page 2724 I find that when the question was taken on the passage of that bill it was passed by a vote of 33 yeas to 11 nays, and among those voting in the affirmative is the name of Senator Harrison. Again, by referring to page 2105 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, I find that on the 5th of March, 1886, that bill being under consideration, Senator Harrison rose and said:

I am paired upon this question with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. If he were present, I should vote yea. I understand he would vote nay.

That is his record upon that question, and now I ask the Democrats to quit lying about it. [Laughter.]

Not only did our Presidential candidate vote for the Blair bill, but the Republican platform adopted at Chicago, on which he stands, explicitly declares in favor of both State and national aid to the cause of free education.

I had the honor to be a member of the committee on resolutions and platform, and I am proud to have had the honor and privilege of aiding in making a national platform, declaring against free trade, in favor of an American policy, and the education of the people. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask a question of the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means for information. I desire to ask the gentlemen of the majority of the committee (and I see three of them present), whether or not on the 26th of March last, Mr. Havemeyer, of New York, did not have a hearing by the majority of the committee, or by four members of the majority, with respect to sugar? I know that on the 12th of March there was a hearing and an examination of Mr. Havemeyer before the Committee on Manufactures, but I want to know now whether, on the 23d of March, the day of the adjournment of this House by reason of the decease of the lamented Chief-Justice of the United States, the members of the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means did not, individually or collectively, some of them, give a hearing to Mr. Havemeyer on this subject?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that anybody ever came to Washington to confer with the Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means but what he had ample opportunity to talk over the business he came here about.

Mr. McCOMAS. Does that include Mr. Havemeyer?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. As regards this particular case, I do not remember dates, but I remember that Mr. Havemeyer talked with me and perhaps a little with some of the other Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee about the sugar-refining business. It was when he was here summoned as a witness before the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. McCOMAS. That was on the 12th of March.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Very well, then, I would say that it was on the 12th. I am speaking now from memory, and I will say that at my request, having developed before the Committee on Manufactures an interesting line of investigation, precisely what the Committee on Ways and Means were engaged upon, I asked him to wait after he was done with the Committee on Manufactures and go with me to the Ways and Means Committee room, as I wanted him to talk there with one or two gentlemen of the committee. It related to some matters of a technical character that I for one wanted information about. That, I suppose, is what the gentleman from Maryland refers to.

Mr. McCOMAS. Now, does the gentleman from Arkansas recall the fact that on the day of our adjournment here on account of the decease of the Chief-Justice Mr. Havemeyer did have a hearing before the Committee on Ways and Means or some of its members?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have no recollection of it.

Mr. McCOMAS. Anyhow, you admit that he did have a hearing before the majority on some other day upon your invitation?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I do not mean to deny it, the facts, as stated, at all. My only recollection on the subject is what I have given you. But suppose he did. Suppose he had come to me or I had met him on the day you say, I would have listened to him with great pleasure.

Mr. McCOMAS. Yes; you would deny a hearing to the miner and the manufacturer and the laboring man, while you would give it to Mr. Havemeyer, the leader of the sugar trust.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That is all stuff.

Mr. MILLS. We never denied anybody.

Mr. McCOMAS. You did not deny him.

Mr. MILLS. We never denied anybody. We would not deny you, and the statement is false.

Mr. McCOMAS. You gave him a hearing.

Mr. MILLS. We did not deny anybody.

Mr. McCOMAS. I have the floor.

Mr. MILLS. You have not got the floor. I yielded to you two minutes out of courtesy for a question. You have not got any time.

Mr. McCOMAS. I was recognized by the Chair for five minutes. This is my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The five minutes have expired.

Mr. McCOMAS. My five minutes are hardly out yet, Mr. Chairman. I want just a minute more to say this. What I am talking about here is not the motives of men but the conduct of committees.

Mr. MILLS. Oh, never mind the conduct of the committee.

Mr. McCOMAS. And I have the information that at the time I have indicated the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means, or some of them, gave a hearing to the head of the sugar trust, Mr. Havemeyer, and then on the 2d of April following this bill came in, and they had struck out "16" and put in "13" Dutch standard. When the laborers of the country could not be heard, and the manufacturers of the country could not be heard, the leaders of the trusts were heard, and in obedience to their arguments and their persuasions you came here, gentlemen, and obeyed their dictates by leaving your good position and taking your worse position in behalf of the refiners' trust and of the frauds committed upon the sugar consumers of this country.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I think the statement of the gentleman ought not to go upon the record without a denial of its truth. There was no hearing given by the majority of the Ways and Means Committee to Mr. Havemeyer in the sense in which the word "hearing" has been used upon this floor.

Mr. McCOMAS. Did you not give Mr. Havemeyer a hearing upon this subject?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I did not; nor was I present at that time.

Mr. MILLS. Nor was I.

Mr. McCOMAS. Your colleague on the committee [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas] has said so.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Not in the sense of a hearing before the committee.

Mr. McCOMAS. He said so.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. He did not; that is exactly the question I am raising on the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. CANNON. What did he say?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the gentleman from Illinois, who is filching time which does not belong to him, will not interfere he will find out. What the gentleman from Arkansas said was that he invited Mr. Havemeyer to the room of the Committee on Ways and Means to give those gentlemen who were then present the information which had been given to him; he did not say that he invited Mr. Havemeyer to a formal meeting of the committee.

Mr. McCOMAS. Not formal—informal.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have not said any such thing.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Nor were some of us present. But this is the fact which the gentleman has disingenuously distorted. No human being came to any member of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee and asked to have a conversation with him when it was not courteously accorded.

Mr. McCOMAS. Did Mr. Havemeyer——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. One moment. When the gentleman says, in antithesis, that we gave a hearing to the "chief of the sugar trust" and refused it to others he is intentionally disingenuous.

Mr. McCOMAS. Let me ask the gentleman this question. If he wants to be fair and frank, does he deny specifically that Mr. Havemeyer on March 12 or 23, individually conferred, informally if you please, on this subject with a number of gentlemen of that committee?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not deny it.

Mr. McCOMAS. Ah, that is my point.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not deny it. [Applause on the Republican side.] And the gentlemen who applaud, applaud a disingenuous statement.

Mr. McCOMAS. My statement is as fair as yours. My assertion was that members of that committee, men who happen to be on that committee, a number of the gentlemen in the majority on the committee, had, informally or formally, I care not which, given time and had conversations on this question with this gentleman at the head of the sugar "trust," and within a few days thereafter reported this bill making the change from 16 to 13, Dutch standard.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Indubitably, if Mr. Havemeyer asked an audience, he got it.

Mr. McCOMAS. That was my point.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No, it was not; you have dodged.

Mr. McCOMAS. You have dodged.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Your point was that we had given it to that gentleman and had refused it to others.

Mr. McCOMAS. My point is that you heard him.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. And we heard every one else who applied in the same way; therefore your point is not a fair one.

Mr. McCOMAS. But you did hear him.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I did not hear him. I remember nothing of the kind.

Mr. McCOMAS. Other gentlemen of the committee did hear him.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. There was not a time when any gentleman could not be heard in the same way.

Mr. BRECKINRILGE, of Kentucky. The only point I desired to put on record was a denial of the double charge that certain persons were heard, while there was a refusal to hear others. That was the disingenuous and unfair statement which I desire to contradict.

Mr. REED. Yet it is a notorious fact that hearings were refused in all cases.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is not a fact that a hearing was ever refused to a gentleman who came to the majority of the committee and asked for a hearing. While formal hearings by the committee sitting as a committee were refused, yet it is not true, and the gentleman is not authorized in saying it is true, that we refused hearings to certain gentlemen and in the same sense accorded hearings to others.

Mr. McCOMAS. I think I am entitled to a minute on this subject. I want to say that the gentleman from Kentucky, by what he has said, has admitted all that I have charged.

Mr. DOCKERY and others. No, he has not.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The record will show.

Mr. McCOMAS. With respect to Mr. Havemeyer, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] has said that at his request Mr. Havemeyer talked with certain members of that committee. I understand the gentleman from Kentucky now to say that he did talk with certain members of that committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No, I did not. I said I did not know, and therefore I did not contradict it. I was not present.

Mr. McCOMAS. Did he talk with you?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have no recollection of ever having talked with Mr. Havemeyer about sugar. I talked to Mr. John Parsons in the presence of Mr. Havemeyer in a humorous way about the testimony——

[Cries of "Ah!" "Ah!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Let me get through. The gentleman, judging of me by himself, may think it was improper. I had known Mr. John Parsons; he was in the committee-room; we renewed our acquaintance, and had a humorous conversation about the gentleman being before the Committee on Manufactures, and I was introduced to three or four gentlemen, including one or possibly two of the Messrs. Havemeyer; but there was no conversation between us either about the sugar schedule or the testimony before the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. McCOMAS. I understand that Mr. Parsons is the counsel of the sugar trust; I am told so, and that Mr. Havemeyer, the head of the trust, is his client. As I now understand, Mr. Havemeyer had various conversations with certain members of that committee——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Who told you that he had "various conversations?"

Mr. McCOMAS. Well, say one—say two.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Why can you not be accurate in a single statement? Why can you not stick to accuracy?

Mr. McCOMAS. I now repeat what I have said. The first branch of it is—and I appeal for confirmation to every member on this side—that when hearings were asked for on behalf of the laboring interests by laboring men of various crafts in this country, they were turned from your door. That is one part of my proposition, and have I not proved it by all the members on this side of the House?

Now, the second one is this: That this man, Mr. Havemeyer, came here and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] said that he had conversations with certain gentlemen on the committee; that there were certain gentlemen there. When you turn to the record you will find that the gentleman said with some members of the committee. I do not say anything I can not prove. I can prove by admissions of the gentleman from Arkansas that these men had conversations with these men on this committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. As to Mr. Parsons, I had no conversation with him on the subject of the sugar schedule. I had humorous conversation about his being here before the committee.

Mr. McCOMAS. Humorous conversations!

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman manufactures his facts to fit the occasion.

Mr. McCOMAS. The gentleman is intentionally disingenuous as to the committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman, I repeat, attempts to put on record in juxtaposition the statement that we gave a hearing to some with the other statement that we refused a hearing to others, using the words in both cases in the same sense. I say we gave to all gentlemen who came before the members of that committee a courteous hearing. I say we denied no one, but treated impartially all of those who came there asking for an informal hearing. That is true, and anything contradictory of it is false.

Mr. McCOMAS. Let us poll the committee.

Mr. HOLMES. There was no hearing formally or informally on the part of the Committee on Ways and Means, and I ask the gentleman to answer that question——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What is it?

Mr. HOLMES. You gave no notice—that is the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means gave no notice they would hear parties formally or informally.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. So far as I am concerned I gave notice myself to gentlemen who are experts in these matters, who were coming to Washington, that I would be glad to get all the information from them I could. So far as I know no public notice was given by the committee, that is by the majority of the Ways and Means Committee. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. McCOMAS. You had no hearing, then, before that committee? Were not parties introduced before that committee?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Yes; parties were informally before that committee. I deny the right of any gentleman to ask for a private conversation. It is a discourteous and improper thing to do. Having said that much, I answer so far as I am concerned there were gentlemen in various avocations I heard of, and I told them I would be glad to have conversations with them, and as to other gentlemen I went further and said I would be glad if they would meet my colleagues who were seeking information from those who knew it. I was doing the best I could to get all the information before the committee I could.

Mr. HOLMES. That is, the majority of the committee granted a hearing to the capitalists of the country and the leaders of the trusts; that they have been heard, but a hearing was denied to everybody else. [Hissing and cries of dissent from the Democratic side.] The leaders of the sugar trust were invited before that committee and granted a hearing, whilst a hearing was refused to all others. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have not said a word about trusts. I do not know who the gentleman refers to as capitalists.

Mr. HOLMES. That will be all explained to the country. Now, I ask the gentleman whether the laboring men ever had a hearing before that Committee on Ways and Means, formally or informally?

Mr. ROGERS. We will discuss this question before the country. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. HOLMES. I say a hearing was granted to those capitalists and leaders of the sugar trust, but that no hearing of any sort was granted to the laboring men of the country. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Oh, you are demagoging, my friend; all of you are.

The question recurred on Mr. WEBER's amendment.

Mr. WEBER. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 78, noes 97.

Mr. WEBER. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WEBER and Mr. MILLS were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 86.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MILLS. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 353 strike out the word "four" and insert "two and three-quarters;" so that it will read, "molasses testing not above fifty-six degrees by the polariscope shall pay a duty of 2¾ cents per gallon."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means why he could not reduce it to 2 cents a gallon instead of 2¾ cents?

Mr. MILLS. Because it will make an improper proportion between that and the other provisions relating to sugar.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I am informed by those interested in boiling molasses that the duty on molasses should be, under the provisions of what the committee have fixed on sugar in this bill, 2 cents a gallon. They have not been able to make any profit for the last two or three years under the present duty; and when the committee are reducing the duty on sugar they think that the duty on molasses, to make it right, so that they can boil that article with a profit to themselves, should be put at 2 cents a gallon. They have made calculations which bring out that result as the proper amount of the duty, and a proper relation between the duty on molasses and sugar; and I ask the chairman of the committee why he can not get it down to 2 cents a gallon at once?

Mr. RANDALL rose.

Mr. MILLS. I will answer by saying——

Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard?

Mr. RANDALL. I only wanted to say that the exact relation which molasses that is boiled and sugar produced from it has to the rate of duty fixed in the bill of the Committee on Ways and Means is 2½ cents; and that 2½ cents is the proper rate of duty.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Why will not the chairman of the committee agree to fix it at 2½ cents instead of 2¾ cents, so that those who boil molasses may have some of the advantage which is necessary to enable them to carry on their business under the operations of this law? And I think if that rate was fixed it would be satisfactory to all concerned.

Mr. MILLS. At the reduction of from 4 to 2¾ cents we have made a larger reduction on molasses than upon sugar. If the relation between sugar and molasses is correct according to the existing law, then we have given the molasses people a very large advantage over the sugar people.

Mr. RANDALL. If you would put them exactly on the basis of a 20 per cent. reduction you would fix the duty at 2½ cents, for that is the exact equivalent, if I am not mistaken in the calculation.

Mr. MILLS. But this is more than that. It is even as much as 30 per cent.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means fixes the amount at 2¾, and we would be satisfied with 2½; and I think this sum, if the committee will not agree to reduce it to 2 cents, ought to be adopted. I hope it will.

Mr. RANDALL. The 2½, as I understand it, is the exact relation which that molasses would bear to the reduction made in this bill on sugars. I have been advised by some of the Louisiana members here that they desired it 2¾, but I do not think that is a proper relation. The fact is, the molasses that comes into this country to be boiled does not come in competition nor in the same period of the year with the Louisiana molasses.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I would state in reply that the molasses-boilers would be satisfied, I believe, with 2½, if they are unable to get it fixed at a lower rate. Still, I hope the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means will agree to make it 2 cents. I have spoken with one or two of the Louisiana members myself, and I know they will take 2¾ cents if they can not get the rate lowered.

Mr. MILLS. When this bill comes back from the Senate there may be some matters in conference to be decided. After a full examination of the matter if it be then necessary these changes can be made.

Mr. MASON. Are you sure it will ever get there?

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Texas by making it 2½ cents.

The amendment was rejected.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. MILLS, it was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending, proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. FULLER], which the Clerk will now read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out line 329 down to and including the word "gallon," in line 355, and insert the following:

"All sugar and molasses shall, on and after January 1, 1889, be admitted free of duty."

The amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. ROGERS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which concurrence was requested, the joint resolution (H. Res. 196) declaring the true intent and meaning of the act approved May 9, 1888.

It further announced that the Senate requested the return of its resolution agreeing to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 899) for the relief of Mary M. Briggs.

It further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1983) to ratify an act entitled "An act creating the county of San Juan, in the Territory of New Mexico."

THE TARIFF.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 329 to 351, inclusive, and insert:

"All sugars not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color shall pay on their polariscopic test as follows, namely:

"All sugars not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color, all tank-bottoms, sirups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, testing by the polariscope not above seventy-five degrees, shall pay a duty of 1.15 cents per pound, and for every additional degree or fraction of a degree shown by the polariscopic test they shall pay three hundredths of a cent per pound additional.

"All sugar above No. 16 Dutch standard in color shall be classified by the Dutch standard of color, and pay duty as follows, namely:

"All sugar above No. 16 and not above No. 20 Dutch standard, 2.20 cents per pound.

"All sugar above No. 20 Dutch standard, 2.50 cents per pound.

"Molasses testing not above fifty-six degrees by the polariscope shall pay a duty of 4 cents per gallon; molasses testing above fifty-six degrees shall pay a duty of 6 cents per gallon.

"Provided, That if any export duty shall hereafter be laid upon sugar or molasses by any country from whence the same may be imported, such sugar or molasses so imported shall be subject to duty as provided by law at the date of the passage of this act: And provided further, That no drawback of duty shall be allowed or paid on any sugar exported from the United States."

Mr. CANNON. I desire to add to that amendment the following words, which I will give to the Clerk:

Sugar-candy, not colored, 5 cents a pound; all other confectionery 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to state very briefly what this amendment is. It is precisely the provision that was first reported by the majority, the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee to the full Ways and Means Committee on the 1st day of March last. I then read an account in the Courier-Journal and in papers throughout the country of interviews with gentlemen on that committee, and the comments and dispatches sent off by the Associated Press. I read them with great pleasure, because they stated, and stated truly, that under the provisions which are embodied in the amendment one-half of the sugar that the common people of this country use would go into consumption without passing through the refineries.

It is also true that they would have gone into consumption at over a cent a pound less than they would go into consumption under the provision as the bill stands to-day. Judge of my sorrow, surprise, and indignation when the Ways and Means Committee reported that bill and I found they had changed it so as to drive the poor man's sugar through the refinery by artificial means and subject it to the extortion of the sugar trust. I wondered why it was. It has been partially explained this morning. The gentleman from Maryland asked if Mr. Havemeyer was before that committee. The answer was, "Oh, no; but before members of the committee." Who is Havemeyer? The greatest sugar refiner in this country, at the head of the trust, the organizer; the man whose iron hand crushes out every refiner who does not come into the trust; the man who levies a toll on 60,000,000 people to the extent of $30,000,000 annually; the man who stands eminent and prominent in the Democratic party fighting its battles.

He is the rich man, the Crœsus of New York, if you please, to whom many Democrats look with hope for relief in his earnest and efficient advocacy of the re-election of Grover Cleveland, as he advocated the election of Grover Cleveland. There is the cat in the meal; there is the nigger in the wood-pile. I have called attention to it time and time again and asked for an explanation, and have had to speak right out in meeting. Take the bill as it was originally reported, take the bill as it stands to-day, take Havemeyer's presence, take the monopoly that still grinds upon the people by virtue of the Mills bill as you have changed it back, in connection with your interviews as they were first reported, and it is so plain that a wayfaring man may run as he reads.

Now, I do not expect you to correct it. A correction of your bill would break up the sugar trust and lose you its effective support this fall. You have agreed upon it in caucus. I simply wanted to call attention to it, and from you to appeal to the people who pay the tax on sugar every year of a dollar and fifty cents, man, woman, and child, throughout the country, by virtue of these provisions. We will try the case before the great jury next fall. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. REED. I hope the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee will explain to us why he made the change in the bill.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman be kind enough to explain why in the Committee on Ways and Means in former Congresses when a bill reducing the duties on sugar was presented you stood then by this same man whom you say is at the head of the sugar trust?

Mr. CANNON. Do two wrongs make a right?

Mr. MILLS. It is not your time yet. I want to know, when you were in power on the Ways and Means Committee, why it was that you stood by Mr. Havemeyer and by all the other sugar trusts and all the other trusts in this country, and then refused to accord us consideration of the measure in the House? You now parade yourself before the country as super-honest, super-decent, and super-patriotic——

Mr. REED. Super-heated.

Mr. MILLS. And yet you knelt by the side of the leaders of these monopolies and recited your prayers year after year and day after day, never finding fault with them until we got a Democratic majority in this House that came here honestly to reduce taxation on the people; and when we propose to smite some of your idols, you raise the cry of Havemeyer and the sugar trust. Let me tell you, and don't you forget it, we are going to give you an opportunity to vote on these trusts before you get away from here, and every one of you will vote on the side of the trusts, too.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have the privilege of saying, before the committee votes upon this proposition——

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be recognized before the sound of the voice of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] has died away.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Maine, and will recognize the gentleman from Louisiana later.

Mr. GAY. Very well.

Mr. REED. It does seem strange to me that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, whenever asked for an explanation of the features of his bill, finds it necessary to fly into a passion, finds it necessary to go off into a defense of his own virtue. I should suppose that such a defense was necessary, and yet after all he might occasionally omit it and once in a while give us an explanation of the reasons which have governed him and the committee; but from the inception of this tariff bill down to the present time the committee have kept utterly secret the reasons which have influenced them in framing the various provisions of this bill. Time after time in committee, time after time in the House, we have asked them for their reasons, we have asked what induced them to make these changes in the tariff, and what induced them to make changes in their own bill, but they have seen fit always to refuse to answer.

There are persons uncharitable enough to suppose that that may arise from ignorance, but the debate to-day shows that in some cases it arises from other reasons. It would be betraying the secrets of those private interviews which have been had with favored manufacturers by gentlemen on the other side. It would expose the secrets of the political origin and political character of the amendments which they are endeavoring to make to the tariff. Here is a direct charge made against them that after an interview with Mr. Havemeyer they had this sugar schedule changed—changed, it is charged, in the interest of one of those "trusts" which they denounce so much, and the most prominent one before the country to-day. Instead of rising to explain the reasons, the sound reasons, unconnected with personal influence that induced the committee to make this change, the chairman springs to his feet for the purpose of indulging in general declarations as to how good he is and how bad we are.

Why, Mr. Chairman, is this the way—and I appeal to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] upon this point—is this the way to conduct a business transaction? Has business entirely vanished from this proceeding? Are we to be vouchsafed no business reasons for a change made under circumstances so suspicious? Do they desire to go before the country in dead silence upon this bill, or do they desire to go to the country with only some remarks as to the goodness of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means?

Is that the reason why this change was made in the sugar schedule, because the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means thinks he is better than our side? Is that good sound business reasoning? Are intelligent men to be contented with that? It looks as if the kind of intelligent men that adorn the other side of the House were contented with precisely that thing. It looks as if they were not going to vouchsafe to the country any statement of the reasons upon which this bill is founded, and it seems from the whole tenor of the discussion to-day that this bill has been made up in the interest of a few favored people for the purpose of effectuating the success of certain particular Democrats. Now, that is not a business reason, that is not a business way in which to control the affairs of this country, and I believe if it can ever be squarely brought before the people they will stamp it with their most signal disapproval. [Applause on the Republican side and cries of "Vote!" on the Democratic side.]

[Mr. GAY withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. MILLS. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the preparation of this schedule, that it was made, so far as I know, without Mr. Havemeyer's knowledge and without his advice. It was made precisely upon the old line of the Republican tariff of 1883, so far as the classification is concerned; and we have gone back to that. I think our first preparation of the bill was on that line, and we afterward changed it; I believe it was at my suggestion it was changed. It was the representatives from Louisiana who came before us and remonstrated against it. I never had a word from Mr. Havemeyer on this subject—had no counsel with him; do not know what his views were on that subject. If he had any he never told them to me. He may have talked to other gentlemen, and doubtless did. But we went back to this schedule because our friends remonstrated against it and claimed it would inflict great injury upon them and their interests. So far as Mr. Havemeyer's Democracy is concerned, I know nothing about it.

Mr. REED. Did I understand the gentleman to say "our friends?"

Mr. MILLS. I speak of you all as "friends;" I often do that; it is entirely parliamentary. But I will withdraw it if you so desire. [Laughter.]

Now, I want to finish what I was about to say. All I know of Mr. Havemeyer's politics is that I have heard he contributed a large sum to the election of General Garfield.

Mr. CANNON. I have heard he contributed a large sum to the election of Cleveland and has promised to contribute a large sum to his re-election.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] kindly tell to whom the second promise he mentions was made?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] stated what he heard. In reply to that I have stated what I have heard. My hearing is as good as his.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that our friends on the other side have just voted to place a duty of 68 per cent. on sugar, and seem to stand by their schedule on that subject, I desire the Clerk to read an extract from the Democratic platform which is pertinent to this question.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is repugnant to the creed of Democracy that by such taxation the cost of the necessaries of life should be unjustifiably increased to all our people. Judged by Democratic principles, the interests of the people are betrayed when, by unnecessary taxation, trusts and combinations are permitted to exist which, while unduly enriching the few that combine, rob the body of our citizens by depriving them of the benefits of natural competition.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I ask attention to the paragraph just read, because our friends on the other side during the whole debate on this subject have seemed to be oversensitive upon the matter of "trusts." Hence, I have caused to be read the proposition in their platform on this subject, in order to show how much difference it makes whether this matter of "trusts" touches them or somebody else.

When we protested against placing lumber on the free-list, because a great industry in Maine and other Northern States, obliged to compete with the lumber product of Canada, would thereby be destroyed, gentlemen cried out frantically against the lumber trust. They were asked to tell us where such a trust existed, or to produce some evidence that it existed at all, but failed to do so, and at last their claims of the existence of a lumber trust dwindled down to the statement of a supposed trust by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

And no proposition has been more definitely made and persistently repeated and reiterated than that these trusts were created and supported by the tariff upon the articles involved in the different trusts. It was in vain that we pointed them to the Standard Oil trust, where there is no duty to operate, that great monopoly which is said to have demoralized the Democracy of one State at least and to have been efficient in producing political results not in conformity with the free will of the people. It was in vain that we held up the fact that trusts existed in other countries than our own and without the influence of a tariff. Always when we sought to protect any industry marked for destruction in the Mills bill a trust was imagined and paraded as a scare-crow to frighten gentlemen into the free-trade ranks.

But here is an industry where a real, indisputable trust exists. A trust that within a few months has arbitrarily raised the price of sugar 1 cent per pound, levying this tax upon every one of 60,000,000 people, to all of whom that article of food is a necessity, levying it not for revenue purposes, not to encourage increased production and competition and a consequent reduction of prices, but to decrease production and fill the pockets of the members of that trust, then the abhorrence of trusts on the part of our Democratic friends disappears, and they stand here and vote for a duty of 68 per cent. on this necessary article of food, and this a specific duty which no undervaluation can reduce.

What has become of the loudly-protested anxiety of gentlemen on the other side for the dear people whom they pretend so much to love? For the consumer for whom they express so much desire to furnish cheap food?

Why, Mr. Chairman, if there is a duty upon any article that oppresses the people it is the duty upon sugar. All the people use it. As I have before had occasion to say, it is the largest food charge in nearly every family in the land, and yet to protect one-tenth of the quantity of sugar necessary to supply the demands of our own people, and without any reasonable hope of increasing the product, this bill provides that we shall pay a tariff of 68 per cent. upon ten times as much sugar as we produce. This is simply outrageous when compared with the way in which the Mills bill deals with great Northern industries that are sufficient in capacity to meet the wants of our people, and which by competition have caused a reduction of prices of more than 30 per cent. in the last twenty years.

In the course of the debate this morning the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILKINSON] criticised me because in comparing the duty upon sugar with the duty upon some products of my own State I had raised, as he said, a sectional question.

Why, gentlemen, you raise the sectional question yourselves in the bill which you have submitted to this House—make a distinction between the sections of the country in treating one section to free trade and low duties and the other to high duties. I simply stated the fact. That fact came out most clearly in the discussion of the amendment of my colleague from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] this afternoon. When he proposed to reduce the duty on sugar to 41 per cent.—a duty equal to the average duty upon all articles in the dutiable list—how readily our friends on the other side voted that proposition down and insisted on 68 per cent.

If you look at the schedule you will find that while the duties on Northern productions are to-day not more than an average of 27 per cent., the duty on Southern productions, including the high duties upon sugar and rice, is more than 75 per cent. Still, when we ask for something like a fair equalization of duties, you say we are raising a sectional question.

Ah, gentlemen, you like to put the State of Maine on the free-list. It seems good to you to put the industries, great and small, of many of the Northern Republican States there, or reduce them to the lowest limit, but when we propose to give you even a homeopathic dose of your own medicine it seems to freeze the very marrow in your bones. [Laughter and applause.]

The question recurred on Mr. CANNON'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes 85.

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Chairman, I am paired with Mr. HEARD. Were he present, I would vote "ay."

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I am paired with Mr. RICHARDSON. Were he present, I would vote "ay."

Mr. GEAR demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MILLS and CANNON were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 84.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, a little study of this sugar schedule is instructive. The average rate at which sugars are put in this bill, from raw to refined, is 65.64 per cent. The great bulk of the sugar imported is below No. 13 Dutch standard of color, ninety-five degrees polariscope test. The amount of that grade imported the past year was 1,112,543,601 pounds, and that grade is put in this bill at 67.10 per cent. The anvils made in my city are put at a rate equivalent to 23.69 per cent.; chains, 35 per cent.; oil-cloths, 25 per cent.; crockery an average of 40 per cent. While I would protect every American industry that needs protection, I think that protection should bear at least some semblance of equality. From the time the ore is dug from the mine until the chain is polished and ready for shipment it takes quite as much labor and requires quite as much capital to produce the chain as it does to produce sugar.

Rice is put (cleaned) at 100.47 per cent., while rubber goods are put at 15 per cent. I need not enlarge. You cut down the protection to the American workman, but you leave the sugar and rice he consumes at a rate proportionately far too high.

Much has been said to-day about the sugar trust. A word as to that. It is perhaps the most thoroughly organized and iron-clad affair in this or any country. I have here a copy of the deed signed by the parties to the trust. It is dated August 16, 1887, and is signed by the representatives of sixteen refineries. The shares are not to exceed $50,000,000 of value in all. It provides that the ownership of each refinery shall, if not already so, become an incorporation. Then the individual holders of these shares are to exchange them for trust certificates at a rate to be ascertained by an appraisement of the value of each refinery.

These certificates of the trust are to be issued by a central board of trustees named in the deed. This has been done. The holders of the stock of each refinery have surrendered their shares, and have received in lieu thereof their pro rata of trust certificates. This is a very neat operation. Their property has gone beyond their control, and they can not withdraw if they would. The trustees holding the stock vote it at the stockholders' elections, and can elect any board of directors they please to, and the stockholder must stand by helpless and see his property managed by a board of directors he may know nothing about. The net profits of each refinery are paid in to this central board of trustees, who from time to time divide them among the individual refineries. It will be seen that it is a perfect machine, and the testimony taken before the committee I have the honor of being a member of shows that it has been worked with all the regularity and remorselessness of a machine. The fact, however, which was abundantly proven, and which is of immediate interest to the whole country, is that since the formation of this trust sugars have been advanced to the consumer at least one cent per pound.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. CANNON. We have not passed from the sugar schedule yet.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. No amendment has been offered.

Mr. WEBER. I move, after line 359, to insert:

And provided further, That no drawback of duty shall be allowed or paid on any sugar exported from the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is the last charge upon the sugar trust of this country. The gentlemen of the other side are here afforded the last opportunity of purging themselves of the suspicion, which will grow into a certainty if they refuse this proposition, that their proposed legislation is in the interest of the sugar combine.

In explanation of this amendment I beg to say that I found this provision in its exact language in the original bill, and as it does not appear in the amended bill, I conclude that its omission is an oversight or a clerical error. Therefore I desire to offer it now.

The explanation of the gentleman from Louisiana as to the suspicious change from the original good intent is that it was on the request of the Louisiana delegation that the rates and color line were changed. I hope the gentlemen on the other side will give us a reason for this, the other change. They have not so far given us any reason for the change from the original bill to the amended bill. By skillful cross-examination we have discovered that after the first bill came into the House Mr. Havemeyer appeared on the scene, and that forthwith the changed bill came into this House. I charge that the amended bill is in the interest of the sugar trust of this country.

I hope this amendment will do away with the other end of the line which permits frauds on the revenues of the Government. I maintained a few moments ago, and I hope demonstrated it, that it is impossible for sugar to be exported on a drawback equal in amount only to the duty paid. The facts and figures are against it. As the importation of fraudulent sugars increases the exportation of refined sugars swells accordingly.

Now, I desire to occupy no further time of the committee, but simply ask a question to which I would like to have a response from gentlemen on the other side of the House—why they have changed fronts so materially in this regard?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Chairman, my colleague from New York [Mr. WEBER] has just made a direct charge against this side of the House in regard to the sugar trust and Mr. Havemeyer. Two distinguished leaders on that side, gentlemen recognized as leaders, and whose ability and long experience on this floor entitle them to be classified as such, have undertaken to present their views but have clearly forgotten facts bearing on the question they sought to discuss in connection with Mr. Havemeyer and his direct interest in the sugar refineries of this country.

I wish to say to the members of this House, and through them to the people of the United States, that the Democratic party in the city of New York, of which I am an humble member, through the instrumentality of Tammany Hall, the oldest political organization in this country, have taken strong ground against that sugar trust. They have called public attention to it and to other trusts as well; and have employed counsel to appear before the attorney-general of the State of New York and present the case there as one in violation of the criminal laws of that State; and the attorney-general of the State of New York, a Democrat, has within the last two weeks taken the necessary legal steps to dissolve the sugar trust as well as the sugar companies which have united and joined in this enterprise.

Now, so much for the attitude of the Democrats with reference to trusts. I speak, I repeat, for the oldest Democratic organization in America. We have stood there, Mr. Chairman, like a wall of iron against the encroachments of trusts and will continue to stand there until we abolish and destroy them; and gentlemen on that side of the House can come to their rescue when the time offers for them to do so. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MILLS. I ask for a vote.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. I want to ask my colleague a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEBER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. I desire now that the amendment which I sent up some time ago may be read.

The amendment of Mr. CANNON was read, as follows:

Strike out lines 329 to 351 inclusive, and insert the following:

"All sugars not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color shall pay duty on their polariscopic test as follows, namely:

"All sugars not above No. 16 Dutch standard in color, all tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, testing by the polariscope not above seventy-five degrees, shall pay a duty of 1.15 cents per pound, and for every additional degree or fraction of a degree shown by the polariscopic test they shall pay thirty-two thousandths of a cent per pound additional.

"All sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color shall be classified by the Dutch standard of color, and pay duty as follows, namely:

"All sugars above No. 16 and not above No. 18 Dutch standard, 1.70 cents per pound.

"All sugar above No. 16 and not above No. 20 Dutch standard, 1.90 cents per pound.

"All sugars above No. 20 Dutch standard, 2.30 cents per pound."

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to debate this question, but if I can have order I merely want to say a few words by way of explanation of the amendment, and what it will accomplish if adopted. It does not change the committee's bill on all sugars that are imported into this country below No. 13 Dutch standard, but it does change the bill with reference to the provision relating to sugars above No. 13 by lowering the rate of that class of sugars one-half a cent a pound; so that if adopted, there being no sugars imported into this country above No. 13, it will give to the people of the country the sugar, which we force through the refineries, cheaper by just one-half a cent a pound, and will give the refiners less protection by this half a cent a pound, and you leave the refiners with a profit of four and three-tenths mills per pound. It will break in on the trust, and largely break it up.

And now I want to call the attention of my venerable friend from Tammany Hall [laughter], who says that they are trying to break up the trusts in New York—I refer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA]—that they are going to break up these trusts by prosecuting them under the criminal laws. I always understood, Mr. Chairman, that it was better to lock the stable door before the horse was stolen than to try to catch and punish the thief after the horse was gone. My provision will take the foundation from under your Havemeyers and the other Tammany people who are in this trust [laughter] and break it up, and then there will not be any need in your trying to bring the criminal laws of the State to bear upon them and send them to the penitentiary.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. I wanted to ask my colleague a question while he was addressing the committee.

Mr. SPINOLA. What is it?

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. I want to ask my colleague if the honorable President of the United States did not himself sign the Elevated Railroad trust of New York. Will the gentleman from Tammany Hall answer that?

Mr. SPINOLA. The "gentleman from Tammany Hall" will take great pleasure in answering the gentleman's question by simply informing him that no such trust has ever existed in New York as the one he mentions.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. Yes, sir; the Elevated trust.

Mr. SPINOLA. There is no such trust known as the Elevated Railroad trust.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. The President signed it and allowed this trust to get a foothold there in that city.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEBER. I offer the amendment I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after line 359 the following:

"Provided, All drawbacks on sugar shall be paid in accordance with the polariscopic test, as herein provided."

Mr. WEBER. I desire only to say that this is the last assault on the sugar trust. It affords an opportunity to the gentlemen on the other side to purge themselves of the suspicion, which should they vote this down will become a certainty, that they are acting as is most desired by the sugar trust. This simply provides that sugar going out of the country shall be tested precisely the same as sugar coming into the country, because substantially all the sugar coming into this country comes in under No. 13 and in accordance with the polariscopic test.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, rose.

Mr. WEBER. If the gentleman is going to answer, I will reserve my time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not care about the gentleman's time. I have plenty of time of my own. I have nothing to say about the identification of the Democratic party with trusts. There will be abundant time for the discussion of that matter hereafter on the stump. But the question of a drawback is a very important question as to a great many of the articles on which it is given. There are some forty or fifty articles on which when exported drawbacks are allowed; allowed as to the whole amount of duty in certain cases, as to 90 per cent. in certain cases, and as to 99 per cent. duty in certain other cases. I hold the list in my hand. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WEBER] might indicate a much more conspicuous devotion to the interest of the tax-payer and consumer of America if he would draught an article which would abolish all the drawback rates and put the tax-payer of America upon the same footing with the consumer abroad under this advantage.

But it was, in the judgment of those who have gone before us, a wise thing as to certain articles to allow a drawback on those imports which are afterward exported upon which there was an import duty when imported. I do not see any reason why an exception should be made in sugar. I thought at one time that there might be such an exception, but I studied the whole question in its relation to all the industries and it seemed that a step of that sort as to this article, leaving out all others, was one that we were not prepared to take. This is a question that does not relate to the sugar industry alone, but to all others.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Oh, certainly.

Mr. BAYNE. As I understand it, the sugar that goes out gets a larger drawback than the duty paid when it came in under this system; and as I understand it, that principle does not apply to any other drawback.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman has shown in this long and protracted debate, in which he has taken quite a conspicuous part, a very great familiarity with all these matters; and he is no doubt aware that this is fixed by the executive department of the Government; that it is fixed upon the basis of the waste of the sugar in the process of refining, whether accurate or not I do not know, but it has been fixed by the various Secretaries of the Treasury under former administrations and reduced under the present Administration. It was fixed for the purpose of giving to the sugar exporter who has been the sugar importer the duty which he paid. It was larger per pound because a pound of refined sugar was richer in saccharine matter than a pound of raw sugar which had been imported, and it was to provide for waste that the additional amount was given. Whether it was accurate or not is a question with which I am unfamiliar. It is purely an administrative question and has been decided by this Administration to be inaccurate heretofore, because it has reduced the amount of the drawback.

Mr. CANNON. Right here allow me to state that I inquired at the Treasury Department touching this matter and was informed, not only by the Treasury agents, but by the Assistant Secretary, who had this matter in charge, that sugar refiners refused absolutely to state the cost of refining or the amount of waste.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That, however, is a question of administration. It is not a matter of statute. The question I desire to submit is a mere business suggestion in answer to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEBER], and not in response to the political speech made by the gentleman from New York, that the question of drawback was one of much larger scope than its mere relation to sugar, and that the precedent that would be established by repealing the drawback on sugar was one that ought not to be taken until Congress is ready to go further in that matter.

Mr. CANNON. I had no desire or intention to make a political speech.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I did not charge you with it. I said the gentleman from New York. The gentleman from Illinois never makes political speeches on the tariff. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. I want to say that the amendment of the gentleman from New York would accomplish, as I understand it——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is suggested that my statement was too broad; that I should have said the gentleman from Illinois only makes political speeches in answer to Judge KELLEY and his Republican colleagues. I accept the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Now, when the gentleman has got through with his political speech, will he allow me to ask a business question, whether he does not think that this amendment, which provides for finding the saccharine strength, where the sugar is exported, in each cargo of sugar, should prevail?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Under existing law the officers of the Treasury Department have authority to use the polariscope to test the saccharine strength of sugar. That is the law to-day.

Mr. CANNON. How would it do to make it mandatory?

Mr. MILLS. But it can be of no service to you on this, because the Secretary of the Treasury has to make an estimate and they have been doing it under all the administrations. The estimate is made, not by the Secretary, but by the officers under him, to find out as nearly as they can what amount of sugar pays duty on coming in, and then after it is refined, what the wastage is; and they deduct that and make the rebate accordingly. It is a matter of estimate by the experts of the Treasury Department, and the polariscope has nothing to do with it. The polariscope is used when the sugar comes in to test its saccharine strength.

Mr. BAYNE. I am told there is no loss of saccharine strength by refining.

Mr. MILLS. That is a question for the Treasury experts.

Mr. BAYNE. But they pay a drawback of about two and a half.

Mr. MILLS. Well, I can inform my friend that under former administrations they were paying too much drawback; but they could not help it. It was a question of estimate, and when the Treasury Department found that they were paying back more than was proper they lowered the rebate. I know that this administration has lowered it.

Mr. McMILLIN. The first reduction under this administration was from 2.82 to 2.60; and then, if my memory serves me correctly, it was reduced to 2.40, until now it is below what is actually paid by the refiners. As to this second reduction, however, I may be in error. That is the present status of the question, and the rebate is paid under the act of 1883.

Mr. MILLS. I hope our friends on the other side will now let us dispose of this sugar schedule.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] that the reduction of drawbacks on exported sugar under this Administration has been, I think, from 2.82 to 2.60 per pound, where it now rests.

Mr. McMILLIN. It is 2.60 on the highest grade.

Mr. WEBER. The only reduction made since the law of 1883 went into effect has been on the highest grade.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman does not deny that the present Administration has reduced the amount of rebate paid.

Mr. WEBER. I do not deny it, and when I was accused of interjecting politics into this sugar question it seemed to me that the interjection of politics was on the other side by the gentleman from West Virginia, and others, who called attention to the reductions made under this Administration.

Mr. McMILLIN. I may not be strictly accurate as to the figures, but the fact remains that there has been a reduction made under the present Administration.

Mr. WEBER. The new tariff went into effect in 1883. The readjustment of duties necessitated a reduction of drawback rates. In 1884 the amount of drawbacks paid on sugars exported reached about $1,579,000, a figure which it had several times before reached. That was under a Republican Administration. In 1885, however, it suspiciously jumped up to six millions five or six hundred thousand dollars, and it took the Democratic Administration sixteen months before they came to the conclusion that there was something wrong about it, and then reduced the rates on the highest grade from 2.82 to 2.60 per pound.

Mr. McADOO. The trouble was that there were too many Republicans still in office. They were not turned out rapidly enough. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. How much does the gentleman say was exported last year?

Mr. WEBER. I am not speaking about the amount of pounds. I am speaking of the drawbacks in dollars. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] and I differed as to amounts awhile ago, arising from the fact that he referred to the value of the sugars while I referred to the drawbacks.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. WEBER, and it was rejected—ayes 52, noes 79.

The Clerk read as follows:

All tobacco in leaf, unmanufactured and not stemmed, 35 cents per pound.

Mr. MILLS. Some gentlemen have asked that the paragraph just read be passed over informally; and I accordingly make that request.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is what I was about to ask.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the paragraph just read by the Clerk will be passed over for the present, with leave to recur to it hereafter. The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Potato or corn starch, rice starch, and other starch, 1 cent per pound.

Mr. NUTTING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph just read. The manufacture of starch in the United States is an important industry. I do not believe there is any good reason for reducing the tariff on starch; and there are several good reasons why it should not be reduced. The present duty upon corn starch is 2 cents a pound; this bill, as now presented to us, proposes to reduce that duty to 1 cent a pound. There can be but two reasons given by the majority of the committee in favor of this reduction: First, that it will help to reduce the surplus revenue; second, that it will give consumers cheaper starch; and, third, possibly assist in giving us the markets of the world. We will examine these grounds and see what foundation there is for them or any of them.

Mr. Chairman, in the last year starch manufactured in the United States amounted in value to about $15,000,000. The capital invested in the United States in this business is about $10,000,000, and four or five States are interested in it. The amount of money paid during the last year to laborers in this branch of industry was about $2,000,000. The number of acres of land which it takes to raise the corn that is made into starch in the United States is 480,000—very nearly half a million acres. If you reduce the duty upon starch 1 cent a pound it will be necessary to reduce the wages of the men in order that the manufacturing establishments in the United States may keep in operation. You are not going to get the markets of the world, because Canada and some thirteen other countries which manufacture starch have a duty upon the article which is more than the duty we place upon it in the United States. So that by this reduction of duty you not only strike a blow at the starch industry of the United States, but you really assist those outside this country who are engaged in the manufacture.

This industry is carried on in at least five States, New York, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa. There is plant enough now in existence and in process of construction in this country to supply the wants of the entire population of the United States.

You must remember, also, that the immense outlay of capital in this business has been ventured upon the faith that the Government would not change the rate of duty.

It can not be said that the price of corn starch has been kept up by the tariff, because we find that in 1865 the export price of starch was 9.8 cents per pound; and in 1875, ten years afterward, the export price was 5.7 cents per pound, a reduction of nearly one-half. In 1885, ten years later, the export price was 4 cents a pound (I am taking the average); and in 1887, the last year, the average export price was less than 3 cents a pound. So that during all this time, while we had a tariff of 2 cents a pound on starch, the price to the consumer steadily decreased. In my home city, Oswego, we have probably the largest establishment for making corn starch in the world. The output from this one establishment last year was nearly or quite 20,000,000 pounds. Think of it, 20,000,000 pounds, or nearly one thousand car-loads.

The average amount of money which the American family pays for starch during the course of a year is less than 25 cents, and there is no burden on the people by the duty on starch. The amount received upon importations of starch into this country is less than $7,000. So that, by reducing this duty, you are not going to do anything considerable in the way of a reduction of the surplus. Nor would you reduce the price of starch. I believe the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means only claim that by this reduction upon starch the surplus will be reduced to the extent of about $3,000.

The farmer is interested in this question. It is a fact which every man on this floor, before he votes on this question, should know, that last year we exported but a little more than 40,000,000 bushels of corn; and there should go beside that this other fact, that last year there were used in the manufacture of starch in the United States almost 13,000,000 bushels of corn.

In this one industry almost one-third as much corn is used as we sold in the "markets of the world."

There can be but little profit in corn starch at from 2½ to 4 cents per pound. You should not strike this industry. Let it alone. It gives nearly fifteen thousand farmers steady employment to raise the corn necessary to keep the twenty-four corn-starch factories in this country running. These fifteen thousand farmers, because of these starch factories, have a steady home market each year for 13,000,000 bushels of corn. Not only this, but these fifteen thousand farmers have families. Not less than forty thousand people are interested in raising the corn used in making starch, if you count four or five to each farmer's family. Then, too, there are four or five thousand laborers who find steady employment in these factories at good wages. There are nearly six hundred people employed in the one factory in my city, where there is more corn starch made probably than in any other one factory in the world.

The present duty of 2 cents is not prohibitory, as the following figures will show:

Pounds of starch imported into this country in—
1884	1,629,221
1885	614,879
1886	414,421
1887	311,856

Reduce the tariff to 1 cent a pound as this bill proposes and you put the factories that make corn starch in this country in competition with cheap foreign labor; not cheap foreign labor in the manufacture of corn starch, but cheap foreign labor in the manufacture of potato starch. You have potatoes on the free-list now; that strikes at our farmers. Now you propose to reduce the tariff on starch so that foreign nations can make their potatoes into starch and send it here and sell it cheaper than corn starch can be made. This will ruin the manufacture of corn starch in this country. The farmer will lose his market for 13,000,000 bushels of corn. He will lose his home market. This will destroy the opportunity of four thousand laborers who now find remunerative labor in this business; this will cause the ten millions of capital invested in corn-starch manufacture in this country to be destroyed. You do not open the markets of the world by this blow at starch-making, but you open your own markets to the world.

I have shown this tariff on starch is not added to the cost of starch to the consumer, for starch has steadily decreased in cost to the consumer until it is now less than 4 cents per pound on an average, when twenty years ago it was more than twice that in cost to the consumer. Competition between manufacturers in this country has reduced the price. Let the majority of the Ways and Means Committee show one petition asking for a reduction of tariff on corn starch. There has been no request to that end.

This reduction will not reduce the surplus, for you will find that the 1 cent per pound tariff which this bill leaves will bring more revenue than the 2 cents has brought. The importations will increase enough to more than make up the difference.

No, Mr. Chairman, let this industry alone. Let the farmer's interest in it alone. Let the laborer's interest in it alone. Do not destroy the capital, but be wise enough to protect and foster all these in leaving the tariff at 2 cents per pound.

If you should succeed and make law of this provision as to starch, and destroy starch-making in this country, then you would place the people of this country in the hands of foreign starch-makers, and up would go the price.

No, Mr. Chairman, let the American people be supplied by our own starch-makers.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, this item of the pending tariff bill is one which affords our friends on both sides of the House an opportunity to attest the sincerity of the protestations they have made, that they seek to promote the interests of the farmer. This article of potato starch is one in which the farming interests in certain sections of our country are directly concerned to a very important degree. In Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, and New York, where the largest portion of our potato starch is manufactured, the starch factories furnish the principal home market for the farmer's potatoes. In a large portion of the agricultural regions of those States the starch factories form one of the essential sources of reliance for the farmer.

In the northern part of my State—the most fertile region of Maine—the potato-starch industry is a most important factor with regard to the interests of the farmer. During some years past the starch factories of this country have probably consumed annually something like 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 bushels of potatoes; and the production of starch has been 25,000,000 or 30,000,000 pounds. The starch factories are located in the immediate vicinity of the potato fields. The farmer digs his potatoes and sells them almost at his very door. During a number of years past the farmers in Aroostook County, Maine, where this industry is very largely carried on, have been enabled to sell their potatoes without assortment, large and small, just as taken from the field, at prices varying from 25 to 30 cents a bushel, to the starch factories. Without these factories those farmers would have no market for that class of their potato product that is not adapted for table use.

By reducing the duty 50 per cent., as proposed in this bill, you will simply permit the potatoes raised in the British provinces to come across the line and compete ruinously with the product of the farmers of my State and of the other States bordering on Canada which are interested in this business.

In that portion of my own district to which I have alluded there are some forty of these starch factories scattered through the potato region, producing thousands of tons of starch annually and providing the farmers with a reliable cash market at home for hundreds of thousands of bushels of potatoes.

In a recent interview on the subject, Mr. Alba Holmes, one of the leading starch manufacturers of Aroostook County, Maine, stated emphatically that the removal of the duty on starch would close every factory in that county. The reduction of the duty to 1 cent per pound would probably be quite as disastrous. Mr. Holmes said:

The average price of starch for some time past has been 4 cents per pound. Owing to the prices we pay for potatoes and labor, there is only a very small margin for profit. In fact we could not continue the business and sell at a less price. We find formidable competitors in Germany and Holland, who, owing to their starvation labor prices and the low prices paid for potatoes, are enabled to export large quantities of starch, pay a duty of 2 cents per pound, and sell for 4 cents and make a profit. Take off the duty and we could not, nor would we try to compete with them. I shall close my factories that moment the duty is taken off.

Take the matter of dextrine or burnt starch. It was formerly manufactured in Providence, R. I., and in New York, the two factories using about 1,400 tons of starch annually. At that time it was protected by a fair duty and the business flourished. The duty was unjustly reduced to 1 cent per pound. We say unjustly, because it takes 1½ pounds of starch to make a pound of dextrine, and at the present rate of duty on starch it should now be 3 cents instead of one. The result was what might have been expected, the American manufacturers of dextrine were driven to the wall, and to-day there is not a pound manufactured in the United States.

Hon. Thomas H. Phair, State senator from the same county, and the owner of seven starch factories, declares that without the protective tariff not a pound of starch could be made in Aroostook until the farmers should be ready to furnish potatoes for 10 cents a bushel. He says:

Last year Canadian factories paid from 10 to 13 cents a bushel for their potatoes, while the factories on the American side paid from 25 to 30 cents. Take off the duty and our farmers must sell their potatoes for 2 or 3 cents a bushel less than the province farmers, on account of difference of freight, or not sell any.

A few days ago, while in Boston, I met a Prince Edward's Island man who had several tons of starch to sell, and he sold it for 4½ cents, less the duty of 2 cents and 2½ per cent. commission—that is, he sold for 2½ cents, less the 2½ per cent. commission, and paid the freight, $2.50 a ton. At the prices paid for potatoes last year by our factories the cost of starch here was about 4½ cents a pound. While the Prince Edward man paid $2.50 a ton for transportation we have to pay $7.50.

Not only must the free-trade policy, if adopted by the people, shut up every starch factory in Aroostook, but it must absolutely stop shipments of potatoes, unless our farmers are ready and willing to produce them for less price than the province farmers now realize.

Hon. C. F. A. Johnson, a pioneer in this industry, and one of the most highly-respected citizens of his section, stated before the Committee on Ways and Means a few years ago, when this interest was similarly threatened, that the interests of more than ten thousand farmers were involved. He said:

Protection to the starch-maker is protection of the utmost importance to the farmer. It really means to him home comforts, the education of his children, and the support in his community of religious and charitable institutions, with all that those advantages imply.

If any gentleman of this committee has ever had the good fortune to be a planter and hoer and digger of potatoes he will readily assent to the proposition that 25 cents per bushel is as low as he or any other man ought to do it. At this price, which is the usual one paid by starch-makers, starch costs from 3½ to 4½ cents per pound, to which must be added from one-half to five-eighths of a cent per pound for transportation, storage, and commission. This brings up the cost when it is sold to 4½ to 4⅞ cents per pound. This variation in cost is explained chiefly by variation in quality of potatoes in different years. I have known years when they yielded but 6 pounds per bushel.

There is in the communities in which these mills are located in my own State (Maine) a large amount of capital invested; the business is one involving large risks; my own firm lost in this business in 1881 over $12,000.

The present tariff of 2 cents per pound is as small as we can possibly work under. A reduction would demolish the industry in the United States. The farmers of the neighboring maritime provinces (contentedly or otherwise) produce potatoes at much less price than ours can, and the Canadian starch-makers have a very material advantage over us in the matter of transportation.

We can not take a pound of starch to their country without paying their government a duty of 2 cents. Why should not American citizens have the advantage of their own markets?

Last year the starch factories in the province of New Brunswick paid from 10 to 13 cents a bushel for their potatoes right across the St. John River at the very time when the farmers of my State were receiving 25 and 30 cents for every bushel they could lay down at the starch factory. If you agree to this proposed reduction of one-half of the present duty, making it but 1 cent per pound, the result is to be the destruction of this industry on the American side of the line. You are going to take away from the farmers of New England, New York, and the other States interested this chief market for the sale of one of their important products; and you are going to do this, very strangely, as it seems to me, directly in the face of the fact that the Canadian tariff to-day puts a duty of 2 cents upon every pound of starch that goes from the United States to the British provinces.

Our present duty on starch is in no sense a burden upon the American people. The additional cost that is imparted to a yard of cloth by reason of the starch used in its manufacture is infinitesimal, and this potato starch is used almost entirely for the purpose of starching yarns and fabrics of cotton cloth and cloth for prints. Yet by this legislation cutting down the duty one-half you propose to say to the farmers of Maine, of New York, New Hampshire, Vermont, and elsewhere, who who have been engaged in raising potatoes upon land better adapted for that than for other purposes, "The American Congress has decreed that you shall sell no more of your potatoes at the prices they now bring, but you must raise and sell them to compete with the low prices of the Canadian farmers."

Everybody knows that in Canada labor is cheaper, land is cheaper, and that the people live in a less comfortable way than we are willing that our American farmers should live; so that the competition involved in the proposed reduction of duty, so far as the potato industry is concerned, would be to our farmers simply destructive.

I can not see why we are called upon to show to Canada a liberality which Canada refuses to show to us. I can not see why we are called upon to allow the products of the starch factories of Canada to come over into the United States at one-half the duty which the Canadian Government exacts from the American manufacturer if he tries to sell starch in the British provinces. There is no logic in this; there is no patriotism in it; there is no common sense in it; there is no justice in it to our farmers. On the contrary, so far as my section of the country is concerned, it is one of the most direct and serious blows that this Mills bill proposes to strike at the agricultural interests.

Mr. Chairman, this reduction of the tariff on potato-starch and the failure to put the rate on dextrine and similar starch products at a rate that will protect the American producer form part of what seems a systematic assault upon all the leading industries of my State, as evidence of which I have compiled from the figures published by the Ways and Means Committee the following comparative statement:

THE DEMOCRATIC ASSAULT UPON MAINE'S INDUSTRIES—HOW THE MILLS BILL STRIKES AT NEW ENGLAND LUMBERING, MANUFACTURING, AND FARMING INTERESTS FOR THE BENEFIT OF EUROPE AND CANADA—FACTS THAT SPEAK LOUDER THAN WORDS.

The following table shows exactly how the Democratic Mills tariff-reduction bill proposes to strike down the protective duties that under Republican laws have stimulated American industries, increased the wages of American labor, furnished a profitable home market for our farmers, and given to American workingmen the most comfortable and happy homes in the world. Although a few items cited below have been dropped out of this bill since it was reported, the following list represents the changes of the existing tariff proposed by the Mills bill as it was indorsed by the Democratic national convention at St. Louis and the Democratic State convention of Maine:

	Protective duties under the Republican tariff.	Proposed rates under the Democratic Mills tariff.
Timber:
Hewn and sawed and timber used for spars and in building wharves.	20 per cent. ad valorem.	Free-list.
Squared or sided	1 cent per cubic foot	Do.
Wood, unmanufactured	20 per cent. ad valorem.	Do.
Sawed boards, planks, and deals, and all other articles of sawed lumber.	$1 and $2 per 1,000 feet	Do.
Hubs, for wheels, posts, last-blocks, wagon-blocks, car-blocks, gun-blocks, heading-blocks, and all like blocks or sticks, rough, hewn, or sawed only.	20 per cent. ad valorem.	Do.
Staves of wood	10 per cent. ad valorem	Do.
Pickets and palings	20 per cent. ad valorem	Do.
Laths	15 cents per 1,000	Do.
Shingles	35 cents per 1,000	Do.
Clapboards, pine or spruce	$1.50 to $2 per 1,000	Do.
Fish-glue, or isinglass	25 per cent. ad valorem	Do.
Soap, hard and soft	20 per cent. ad valorem	Do.
Hemlock extract, for tanning.	do	Do.
Barytes	10 per cent. ad valorem	Do.
All earths or clays, unwrought or unmanufactured.	$1.50 per ton	Do.
China, clay, or kaolin	$3 per ton	Do.
Brick	20 per cent. ad valorem	Do.
Vegetables, fresh or in brine (cucumbers, pickles, cabbages, turnips, carrots, beets, tomatoes, squashes, pumpkins, etc.)	10 per cent. ad valorem	Do.
Meats, game, and poultry	do	Do.
Milk, fresh	do	Do.
Egg yolks	do	Do.
Beans, pease, and split pease.	10 and 20 per cent. ad valorem.	Do.
Pulp, for paper-makers' use	10 per cent. ad valorem.	Do.
Bristles	15 cents per pound	Do.
Bulbs and bulbous roots, not medicinal.	20 per cent. ad valorem.	Do.
Feathers of all kinds	25 per cent. ad valorem.	Do.
Grease	10 per cent. ad valorem.	Do.
Lime	do	Do.
Garden seeds	20 per cent. ad valorem.	Do.
Marble of all kinds	65 cents per cubic foot	Do.
Plaster of Paris, ground or calcined.	20 per cent. ad valorem.	Do.
Granite, freestone, sandstone, and all building or monumental stone unmanufactured.	$1 per ton	Do.
Tallow	1 cent per pound	Do.
Wools: Clothing wools of various grades.	12 and 10 cents per pound	Do.
Slate, and manufactures of slate.	30 per cent. ad valorem.	20 per cent. ad valorem

	Protective duties under the Republican tariff.	Proposed rates under the Democratic Mills tariff.
Anvils, anchors, or parts thereof; mill-irons and mill-cranks of wrought-iron, and wrought-iron for ships, and forgings of iron and steel for vessels, steam-engines, and locomotives, or parts thereof, weighing each 25 pounds or more.	2 cents per pound	1½ cents per pound.
Saws	40 per cent. ad valorem.	30 per cent. ad valorem
Cabinet and house furniture, finished.	35 per cent. ad valorem.	Do.
Lumber:
Boards, planks, deals, and other sawed lumber of hemlock, white-wood, sycamore, and basswood:
Planed or finished on one side.	$1.50 per 1,000 feet	50 cents per 1,000 feet.
Planed or finished on two sides.	$2 per 1,000 feet	$1 per 1,000 feet.
Planed on two sides, tongued and grooved.	$2.50 per 1,000 feet	$1.50 per 1,000 feet.
All other articles of sawed lumber not elsewhere specified:
Planed or finished on one side.	$2.50 per 1,000 feet	50 cents per 1,000 feet.
Planed or finished on two sides.	$3 per 1,000 feet	$1 per 1,000 feet.
Planed one side, tongued and grooved.	do	Do.
Planed on two sides, tongued and grooved.	$3.50 per 1,000 feet	$1.50 per 1,000 feet.
All other manufactures of wood.	35 per cent. ad valorem.	30 per cent. ad valorem.
Potato starch	2 cents per pound	1 cent per pound.
Oil-cloths for floors	40 per cent. ad valorem.	25 per cent. ad valorem.
Woolen rags, shoddy, etc	10 cents per pound	Free-list.
Printing paper, unsized, for books and newspapers.	15 per cent. ad valorem.	12 per cent. ad valorem.
Sized or glued for printing	20 per cent. ad valorem.	15 per cent. ad valorem.
Paper boxes	35 per cent. ad valorem.	25 per cent. ad valorem.
Brushes of all kinds	30 per cent. ad valorem.	20 per cent. ad valorem.
Card clothing for factories	25 to 45 cents per square foot.	15 to 25 cents per square foot.
Carriages and parts of	35 per cent. ad valorem.	30 per cent. ad valorem.
Friction matches	do	25 per cent. ad valorem.
Inks and ink powders	30 per cent. ad valorem.	20 per cent. ad valorem.
Marble, sawed, dressed, and tiles.	$1.10 per cubic foot	65 cents per cubic foot.
Marble manufactures	50 per cent. ad valorem.	30 per cent. ad valorem.

COTTON AND WOOLEN MANUFACTURES.

Cotton goods.—Under the existing tariff all cotton manufactures are protected by a specific duty equivalent to about 40 per cent. on the average—the common grades less, and the fine grades more.

The Mills bill abolishes all specific duties and substitutes a sweeping ad valorem duty of 40 per cent. for all kinds of goods. As the ad valorem duties invite fraudulent undervaluations, which practically reduce duties 8 to 10 per cent., the practical effect of such a change in the tariff would be to reduce the protection on fine goods so as to prevent their manufacture in this country.

Woolen goods.—The present tariff imposes a duty of about 35 cents per pound (as an equivalent for the duty on wool, of which the wool-grower receives the benefit), and 35 per cent. ad valorem on coarse and 40 per cent. ad valorem on fine goods. As the pound duty is intended to be made a little more than the average duty on the wool, to guard against errors, that is also a slight protection to those engaged in woolen manufacturing.

The Mills bill abolishes the pound duty (because of free wool) and imposes an ad valorem duty of 35 per cent., and 40 per cent. on imported woolens. The farmer loses the advantage of the duty on wool, and the manufacturer is left with nothing but the ad valorem duty on imported woolens, the effect of which must be to increase importations and thus injure the home manufacturers.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, and had come to no resolution thereon.

WILLIAM H. TABBARRAH.

Mr. MOFFITT. I ask, by unanimous consent, to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 948) for the relief of William H. Tabbarrah, and that the same be now put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to correct the record of William H. Tabbarrah, late a private in Company F, Ninety-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, so that the same shall show him to have been discharged for gunshot wound of right thigh received in action, instead of the record now made.

The amendment reported by the committee was to strike out "private" and in lieu thereof to insert "sergeant."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Let the report of the committee be read.

The report of the committee (by Mr. CAREY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 948) for the relief of William H. Tabbarrah, beg leave to report:

The records of the War Department show that William H. Tabbarrah, late sergeant of Company F, Ninety-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, was discharged February 27, 1863, at convalescent camp, Alexandria, Va., on surgeon's certificate of disability, by reason of tuberculosis contracted after enlistment. (See record hereto annexed.)

The evidence before the committee shows that the discharge of the said Tabbarrah for the cause stated was erroneous; that he was not disabled by reason of tuberculosis at the time of his discharge, but was disabled by reason of wounds received in the service, and that the cause assigned for his discharge should have been on account of gunshot wound. (See affidavits hereto annexed.)

The committee recommend that the bill pass with the following amendment: Strike out, in line 4 of the bill, where the same occurs, the word "private" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sergeant."

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, April 20, 1888.

SIR: In reply to your request of the 15th ultimo for information upon House bill 948, Fiftieth Congress, first session, to provide for correction of the record of William H. Tabbarrah, late of Company F, Ninety-sixth New York Volunteers, so as to show him discharged for wound, I have the honor to inclose a report of the 18th instant from the Adjutant-General, which, it is believed, furnishes the information requested.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. R. W. TOWNSHEND,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 18, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to return House bill 948, Fiftieth Congress, first session, authorizing the Secretary of War to correct the record of William H. Tabbarrah, late a private in Company F, Ninety-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, to show him to have been discharged by reason of gunshot wound of right thigh, received in action, instead of the record now made, transmitted by the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, and, in compliance with instructions, to report as follows:

The records of this office show that Sergeant William H. Tabbarrah, Company F, Ninety-sixth New York Volunteers, was enrolled October 25, 1861, mustered in November 15, 1861, and present for duty to April 30, 1862. On roll for June, 1862, he is reported absent in hospital at Annapolis, Md., wounded at the battle of Fair Oaks, May 31, 1862. On June 3, 1862, he was admitted to the general hospital at Annapolis, Md., with gunshot wound, location not stated, and was treated until December 18, 1862, when he was returned to duty and sent to his regiment. While en route to his regiment he was examined by the medical board at Convalescent Camp, near Alexandria, Va., February 14, 1863, and discharged February 27, 1863, at said camp on surgeon's certificate of disability by reason of tuberculosis contracted since enlistment.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. C. DRUM,
Adjutant-General.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

To the Adjutant-General of the United States Army, etc.:

CLINTON COUNTY, New York, ss.:

William H. Tabbarah, being duly sworn, says that he resides at Plattsburgh, N. Y., and was a sergeant in Company F, Ninety-sixth New York Volunteers, in the late war, and now draws a pension for gunshot wound of right thigh, by pension certificate No. 13583, which wound was received at the battle of Fair Oaks, May 31, 1862.

Deponent further states that he has made application for a bounty by reason of being discharged for wounds; and the same has been denied upon the ground that the record shows that deponent was discharged for difficulty of the lungs, when, in fact, deponent has never had difficulty of the lungs at all, and was discharged solely on account of said wound and for no other cause whatever, to defendant's knowledge; and deponent respectfully asks that upon the evidence on file upon his application for pension, and in other records contained, and that herewith submitted, said records be corrected and made to show that he was discharged for gunshot wound, as he in fact was.

WILLIAM H. TABBARAH.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 15th day of January, 1883.

F. F. HATHAWAY,
Notary Public.

STATE OF NEW YORK Clinton County, ss:

James M. Fulton, being duly sworn, says that his residence and post-office is Beekmantown, Clinton County, New York, and has resided there and been a practicing physician and surgeon in said county for forty-three years last past; that his age is now sixty-nine years. Deponent further says that he is and has been for about twenty-seven years last past well acquainted with William H. Tabbarrah, and knew him well, both before his enlistment in the Ninety-sixth Regiment of New York Volunteers and after his discharge and return home from said service, and since said Tabbarrah's discharge deponent has been his family physician until said Tabbarrah removed from Beekmantown aforesaid to Plattsburgh, upon his appointment as keeper of the light-house upon Cumberland Head, in said town, upon the west shore of Lake Champlain, which position said Tabbarrah still holds. Deponent further says that shortly after said William H. Tabbarrah's discharge, in the spring of 1863, deponent saw him and knows that said Tabbarrah was badly wounded in his right thigh, and deponent aided in dressing said wound and in searching for the ball, and deponent knows that said wound has made said Tabbarrah a cripple ever since.

Deponent further says that in all his attendance upon said Tabbarrah deponent has not known him to have any difficulty of the lungs nor disease of the lungs of any kind, more than perhaps a cold or some little ailment of that sort, and deponent knows that when said Tabbarrah returned from the war he had no lung trouble whatever. Deponent further says that he has no interest in said Tabbarrah's matters, either pension, bounty, or otherwise; and further saith not.

J. M. FULTON, M. D.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 16th day of January, 1883, and I certify that said witness is a physician in good standing in his profession, and entitled to full credit.

JAMES J. BROWN,
Justice of the Peace.

STATE OF NEW YORK, Clinton County, ss:

Romeo Hyde, of Beekmantown, in said county, being duly sworn, says that his age is thirty-nine years; that he is well acquainted with William H. Tabbarrah, who was formerly a sergeant in Company F of the Ninety-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, of which deponent was also a member in the late war, and deponent knew him well while in said regiment. Deponent further says that he saw said Tabbarrah within a very few days after the battle of Fair Oaks, in May, 1862. Deponent saw him one of the first days in June at Whitehouse Landing upon a stretcher badly wounded, and deponent knows that at that time and all through said service, so far as deponent knew at the time and since, said Tabbarrah has had no difficulty of the lungs, but his trouble has always been since the war his said wound.

Deponent further says that he is himself now a regular practicing physician in said town of Beekmantown, and has been for about fourteen years last past, and has often seen said Tabbarrah in those years, as said Tabbarrah married his wife from a family residing in the same village with deponent, and deponent has never known or heard that said Tabbarrah had any lung difficulty, but has no doubt whatever but what his discharge from the service was wholly on account of said gunshot wound, from which he ever since has been and still is badly crippled and disabled; and further deponent has no interest whatever in said matter.

ROMEO HYDE.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 16th day of January, 1883, and I certify that said witness is a physician in good and regular standing in his profession, and entitled to full credit.

JAMES J. BROWN,
Justice of the Peace.

Mr. MOFFITT's motion was agreed to, and the bill was taken up and the amendment of the committee agreed to; and then the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MOFFITT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIGHT OF WAY BILL.

Mr. PEEL. I ask by unanimous consent that the House take a recess at 5 o'clock to-morrow evening until 8 o'clock; the evening session to be devoted to the consideration of bills granting right of way through Indian reservations, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which there is no objection.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

EVANSVILLE MARINE HOSPITAL.

Mr. HOVEY. I ask, by unanimous consent, to take up the bill (H. R. 1321) for the erection of a marine hospital at Evansville, Ind.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BLAND. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 64.

Mr. BLAND demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. HOVEY. Not another bill shall pass by consent.

Mr. BLAND. I move the House take a recess until 5 o'clock, and on that motion I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 6, noes 59.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House do now adjourn, and on that motion I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 28.

Mr. BLAND demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. BLAND. I move the House take a recess until 6 o'clock.

The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the Speaker pro tempore declared the House adjourned until to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. CLARDY: A bill (H. R. 10761) correcting the rank of Gustav Dachsel, and granting a pension to his widow in accordance with that rank—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CROUSE: A bill (H. R. 10762) for the relief of William Q. Lawrence—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DARLINGTON: A bill (H. R. 10763) granting a pension to George W. Wilson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FINLEY: A bill (H. R. 10764) granting a pension to L. S. Casey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10765) for the relief of W. H. Cowherd—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GEAR: A bill (H. R. 10766) granting right of way to the Cedar Rapids, Iowa Falls and Northwestern Railway Company—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOUK: A bill (H. R. 10767) granting a pension to William J. Cooper—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10768) granting a pension to James M. Duggan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUNTER: A bill (H. R. 10769) granting a pension to John M. Krunk—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCREARY: A bill (H. R. 10770) for the relief of Simeon H. King's executrix—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10771) granting a pension to John Stewart—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10772) granting a pension to Eliza A. Carson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 10773) for the benefit of the Danville, Lancaster and Nicholasville Turnpike Road Company—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MORSE: A bill (H. R. 10774) for the relief Honora O'Daley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PIDCOCK: A bill (H. R. 10775) granting a pension to Ann Vigo—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McRAE (by request): A bill (H. R. 10776) for the relief of Elisha Casey—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: A bill (H. R. 10777) for the relief of Cæsar Snell—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10778) for the relief of Nelson Cowan—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. E. J. TURNER: A bill (H. R. 10779) granting a pension to William M. Brown—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. J. R. WHITING: A bill (H. R. 10780) for the relief of Benjamine E. Snyder—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10781) for the relief of John Donahue—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: A bill (H. R. 10782) granting a pension to William H. Hood—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. C. L. ANDERSON: Petition of John F. Green, of Yazoo County, and of Martha W. Lindley, of Lauderdale County, Mississippi, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BIGGS: Resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of San Diego, Cal., and of the Board of Trade of Los Angeles, Cal., for the passage of the bill to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. DUNN: Petition of James E. Wilmans, of Riley Kinman, and of James S. Smith, of Jackson County, Arkansas, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GEAR: Petition of 130 citizens of Jefferson County, Iowa, for amendments to the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HOOKER: Petition of citizens of Port Gibson, Miss., for abolishing boxes in post-offices—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HOUK: Petition of Harriet Ballard, of Alfred McConnell, and of Joseph Line, administrator of Wiley Line, deceased, of Tennessee, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LAWLER: Petition of John George Ryan, of Chicago, Ill., for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McCLAMMY: Petition of J. W. Winslow and 26 others, citizens of the Third district of North Carolina, for prohibition in the District of Columbia—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. McRAE: Petition of F. M. Halthoff, heir of Francis Halthoff, of Ashley County, Arkansas, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. NEAL: Petition of John N. Berrong, of John L. Moss, of C. A. Humphreys, of Susan Lowry, and of Elisha Kimbrough, of Tennessee, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. REED: Resolutions of the General Conference of the Congregational Churches of Maine, for repeal of internal-revenue laws, and prohibiting exportation and importation of liquors—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of citizens of Navana, Tex., in favor of the schedule of duties adopted by the wool-growers and manufacturers—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: Petition of Cassar Snell and of Nelson Cowan, of Murfreesborough, Tenn., for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SAWYER: Petition for repeal of law preventing the payment of arrears of pensions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STONE, of Missouri: Petition of W. A. Rooth and 42 others, citizens of St. Clair County, Missouri, in favor of certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. G. M. THOMAS: Petition of John Darnell for relief—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAM WHITING: Petition of Rev. P. F. Barnard and 25 others citizens of the Eleventh district of Massachusetts, for prohibition in the District of Columbia—to the Select Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: Petition of William H. Hood, for a special-act pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The following petition for the more effectual protection of agriculture, by means of certain import duties, was received and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

By Mr. GUENTHER: Of citizens of Waupaca County, Wisconsin.

The following petitions, praying for the enactment of a law providing temporary aid for common schools, to be disbursed on the basis of illiteracy, were severally referred to the Committee on Education:

By Mr. CUTCHEON: Of 127 citizens of Manistee and Osceola Counties, and of 149 citizens of Mason and Wexford Counties, Michigan.

By Mr. E. B. TAYLOR: Of 185 citizens of Ashtabula and Trumbull Counties, Ohio.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 10, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of George F. Calvert, of Port Orange, Fla., alleging fraud on the part of United States officials in the contested-homestead case of A. Force vs. E. H. Jones, and praying for investigation thereof; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Orange County, North Carolina, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the interstate-commerce act; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. DAVIS presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Winona, Minn., praying for the passage of the House bill authorizing the Winona and Southwestern Railroad to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at Winona, Minn.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SABIN presented a memorial of the St. Paul (Minn.) Chamber of Commerce, remonstrating against the construction of bridges over the Detroit River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Redwood, Minn., praying for legislation protecting wool and woolen-manufacturing interests; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PAYNE presented two petitions, signed by 95 ex-Union soldiers and sailors, citizens of Ohio, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB presented the memorial of John Cowdon in regard to the improvement of the Mississippi River and tributaries since 1830, and favoring the adoption of the Lake Borgne outlet improvement system; which was referred to the Committee on Improvement of the Mississippi River.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of 63 ex-Union soldiers and sailors, citizens of Westerville, Ohio, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of H. P. Wheeler and 124 other citizens of Hillsdale County, Michigan, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were indefinitely postponed:

A bill (S. 3165) granting an increase of pension to Isaac M. Fletcher;
A bill (S. 3164) granting an increase of pension to Henry Potter; and
A bill (S. 3014) granting a pension to Joseph Zerbach.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 6193) for the relief of Edson Saxberry;
A bill (H. R. 9910) increasing the pension of William J. Headly;
A bill (H. R. 621) granting an increase of pension to William M. Whaley;
A bill (H. R. 7093) granting an increase of pension to John A. Rolf;
A bill (S. 3166) granting a pension to William F. Pike;
A bill (S. 3197) granting a pension to Abbie L. Ham;
A bill (S. 3198) granting a pension to Mary Murphy;
A bill (S. 3150) granting a pension to William Schaffer;
A bill (S. 3230) granting a pension to Martha J. Cole; and
A bill (S. 3189) granting a pension to William T. Hutton.

Mr. BLODGETT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3171) granting a pension to Andrew Hopper, submitted an adverse report theron, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 3138) granting a pension to George Wylie;
A bill (S. 3102) granting a pension to James Smith; and
A bill (S. 2704) granting a pension to James Hope Arthur.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3221) granting a pension to Isaac N. Hawkins, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3137) granting a pension to Ruth Ames;
A bill (H. R. 10334) to grant a pension to Elizabeth O'Laughlin, the helpless and invalid daughter of Dennis O'Laughlin, late a member of Company I, Ninth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry;
A bill (S. 3157) granting a pension to Joseph S. Wilson; and
A bill (S. 3158) granting a pension to Nancy L. Huffman.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following petitions, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the committee were discharged from their further consideration:

The petition of Alfred E. Gathercole, praying to be allowed a pension; and

The petition of Matilda Gillespie, as guardian of the minor children of John Burchill, praying that they be allowed a pension.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 3063) for the relief of Levinia Robinson;
A bill (S. 3161) granting a pension to Henry Ann Stuart;
A bill (S. 6) granting a pension to Mrs. Emeline P. Trask;
A bill (S. 3070) for the relief of John Anthony Orleman and Mary Albina Wilhelmina Orleman;
A bill (S. 3160) granting a pension to Nelson Beebe, of Oregon;
A bill (S. 951) for the relief of Elvira E. Baxter;
A bill (S. 1309) granting a pension to Hiram Bateman;
A bill (S. 3043) granting a pension to Samuel G. Whitley;
A bill (S. 3041) granting a pension to George Slack;
A bill (S. 3024) granting a pension to Lewis H. Linville;
A bill (S. 3049) granting a pension to Christian Wanzel; and
A bill (S. 3061) for the relief of Emma McCollum.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 9595) granting a pension to David A. Yeaw;
A bill (H. R. 8523) granting a pension to Susan F. Scott;
A bill (H. R. 7624) for the relief of Coburn D. Outten; and
A bill (H. R. 8953) granting a pension to Eliza Mathews.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1766) granting a pension to Stephen Butler, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 602) for the relief of James Millinger, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4069) granting an increase of pension to Elnathan Meade, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

HANNAH BABB HUTCHINS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1540) granting a pension to Hannah Babb Hutchins, which was, in line 6, after the word "pension," to strike out "during life;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hannah Babb Hutchins, a volunteer nurse in the war of the rebellion, and pay her a pension of $25 per month, in lieu of the one now received by her.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

EMILY J. STANNARD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2657) granting an increase of pension to Emily J. Stannard, which was, in line 5, after the words "rate of," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emily J. Stannard, widow of the late George J. Stannard, brevet major-general of volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $75 per month, from and after the passage of this act, instead of the pension she is now receiving.

Mr. TURPIE. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives, and ask for a conference thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. BLAIR, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. TURPIE were appointed.

RETURN OF A BILL.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill (S. 1427) granting an increase of pension to Elnathan Meade.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PADDOCK introduced a bill (S. 3296) granting a pension to Mrs. A. J. Horton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 3297) for the relief of Sterling H. Tucker and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PASCO introduced a bill (S. 3298) for the relief of Salvador Costa; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TURPIE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3299) to authorize and empower the Secretary of the Navy to contract for certain guns and ammunition therefor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3300) in relation to registry-letter envelopes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3301) granting a pension to Richard J. Nichol; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 3302) for the relief of Louisa Kearney; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 3303) amendatory of "An act relating to postal crimes and amendatory of the statutes therein mentioned," approved June 18, 1888; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. VEST. I propose that this bill be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post Roads, but I want to call the attention of that committee, and especially of my friend from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], who reported the bill to which this is amendatory, to a singular state of case that has arisen in regard to one of the provisions of the bill which we have already passed.

On June 18, 1888, we passed an act amendatory of the act in regard to postal crimes, and one of the provisions of that bill is as follows:

And all matter otherwise mailable by law upon the envelope or outside cover or wrapper of which, or postal card, upon which indecent, lewd, lascivious, obscene, libelous, scurrilous, or threatening delineations, epithets, terms, or language, or reflecting injuriously upon the character or conduct of another, may be written or printed, are hereby declared to be non-mailable matter, and shall not be conveyed in the mails, nor delivered from any post-office nor by any letter-carrier.

The object of that amendment, which was at the instance of the Postmaster-General and which I had the honor to offer, was to do away with a species of blackmailing which has been used throughout the country. I say "throughout the country," but especially in two cities. I hold in my hand a specimen of one of these envelopes which is used in the collection of debts and which comes from Chicago. It has upon it in very large letters "Collecting bad debts," and in addition it has upon it these words:

If it is necessary to send another notice it will come in an envelope like this.

The one from Kansas City, which I also hold in my hand, is from another collection agency and has the same words upon it, "Bad Debt," in large letters. In another portion it says:

If no attention is paid to the inclosed notice, this envelope will come next.

As a matter of course a business man to whom one of these envelopes may be sent in the open mail would find himself advertised by means of this envelope in the community where he did business as a defaulter in the payment of his honest debts; in other words, that his debts were bad debts; and the clause of the statute which I have read was enacted for the purpose of doing away with this species of blackmailing, if nothing else.

Now in order to avoid that, with an ingenuity worthy of a much better cause, the persons engaged in this business have caused envelopes to be made, transparent envelopes, and on the inside the letter matter put in these envelopes are found the same words contained on the outside of the present envelopes, and that is done for the purpose of evading the law which we passed some three weeks ago, which punished the placing of this matter on the outside of an envelope.

The bill which I have offered is intended to meet the case as made now by these same parties, and to punish them for using the mails in this way; in other words, to make this matter punishable when it is contained not upon the outside envelope as the law now is, but upon any portion of it.

I hope my friend from Delaware will report the bill as soon as possible.

The bill was read the second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 99) providing for the printing of the portion of the annual report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics on commerce and navigation for the year ending June 30, 1887, entitled "Annual report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics in regard to imported merchandise entered for consumption in the United States, with amounts of duty and rates of duty collected;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 948) for the relief of William H. Tabarrah; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the resolution of the Senate agreeing to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 899) for the relief of Mary M. Briggs.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the first amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 196) declaring the true intent and meaning of the act approved May 9, 1888; that it had agreed to the second amendment of the Senate to the resolution with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, and that it also requested the concurrence of the Senate in an amendment to the title of the resolution.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. EVARTS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BATE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. PALMER, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files the papers accompanying the bill (S. 1445) for the relief of Emma H. Fish, adversely reported.

Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files the papers accompanying the bill (S. 1075) for the relief of Elwin A. Scutt, adversely reported.

PREVENTION OF COMPETITION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit a resolution for which I ask present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be directed to inquire into and report, in connection with any bill raising or reducing revenue that may be referred to it, such measures as it may deem expedient to set aside, control, restrain, or prohibit all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations, made with a view, or which tend to prevent free and full competition in the production, manufacture, or sale of articles of domestic growth or production, or of the sale of articles imported into the United States, or which, against public policy, are designed or tend to foster monopoly or to artificially advance the cost to the consumer of necessary articles of human life, with such penalties and provisions, and as to corporations, with such forfeitures, as will tend to preserve freedom of trade and production, the natural competition of increasing production, the lowering of prices by such competition, and the full benefit designed by and hitherto conferred by the policy of the Government to protect and encourage American industries by levying duties on imported goods.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not hear the first part of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again reported.

The Chief Clerk read the first clause of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

THE FISHERIES TREATY.

Mr. DOLPH. I observe that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has given notice that to-morrow morning, after the morning business is disposed of, he will address the Senate on the treaty between the United States and Great Britain. I give notice that at the conclusion of the Senator's remarks to-morrow, if there is time, and if not, then on Thursday, after the morning business, I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to submit some remarks upon the treaty myself.

MINOR CHILDREN OF LEVI M. HUNTER.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the bill (S. 2932) granting a pension to the minor children of Levi M. Hunter be recommitted to the Committed on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

THE INTERSTATE-COMMERCE LAW.

Mr. CULLOM. I neglected yesterday, after the passage of the bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, to move that the bill as passed by the Senate be printed. I now make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. CULLOM. While on the floor I desire to give notice that tomorrow, or as soon thereafter as an opportunity presents, I shall call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 1426) supplementary to the act of July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," and also of the act of July 2, 1864, and other acts amendatory of said first-named act.

THE FISHERIES TREATY.

Mr. STEWART. If there be no further morning business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 12) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will remember that this time, by special order, was assigned for the consideration of the fisheries treaty. I gave way to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] the other day for the consideration of the river and harbor bill. He said it would not take half an hour to complete it, but it took the whole day.

Mr. STEWART. Under the circumstances I will not ask the Senator to give way now.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed now to the consideration of the fisheries treaty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the fisheries treaty in open executive session.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is now in open executive session. The Secretary will report the treaty by its title.

The SECRETARY. Treaty (Ex. M.) between the United States and Great Britain, concerning the interpretation of the convention of October 20, 1818, signed at Washington February 15, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the reading of the Journal of the last open executive session will be dispensed with. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will allow me a word before he proceeds. I gave notice last evening that this morning, at the close of the routine business, I would move to take up the Senate bill touching the arrears due to those who worked over eight hours a day under the eight-hour law. In accordance with the custom of the Senate, I gave way to the Senator from Massachusetts, as he desires now to proceed. I am informed that notice has been given by two Senators that they wish to speak to-morrow upon the treaty in the same way, and therefore to-morrow will likely be occupied. I hope to be able to ask the attention of the Senate to this bill at the close of the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts to-day.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I make no apology for entering early upon this discussion. This is the oldest question in our foreign relations. The question of the rights of her fishermen has mingled with the history of Massachusetts from the beginning, as their skill and courage have been from the beginning a chief part of her glory and pride. One of the half dozen most famous passages in English prose is that where, more than a hundred years ago, the greatest of English orators, in his last appeal to save England from the madness of her tyranny, paid his eloquent homage to these husbandmen of the sea. It will never become stale or commonplace to American ears. It is often quoted, but we may well repeat it, since the wit of man can not mend it.

Mr. Edmund Burke said:

> As to the wealth which the colonies have drawn from the sea by their fisheries, you had all that matter fully opened at your bar. You surely thought these acquisitions of value, for they seemed even to excite your envy; and yet the spirit by which that enterprising employment has been exercised ought rather, in my opinion, to have raised your esteem and admiration. And pray, sir, what in the world is equal to it? Pass by the other parts and look at the manner in which the people of New England have of late carried on the whale fisheries. While we follow them among the tumbling mountains of ice and behold them penetrating into the frozen recesses of Hudson's Bay and Davis Straits, whilst we are looking for them beneath the Arctic Circle, we hear that they have pierced into the opposite region of polar cold; that they are at the antipodes and engaged under the frozen circle of the south. Falkland Island, which seemed too remote and romantic an object for the grasp of national ambition, is but a stage and resting place in the progress of their victorious industry. Nor is the equinoctial heat more discouraging to them than the accumulated winter of both the poles. We know that whilst some of them draw the line and strike the harpoon on the coast of Africa, others run the longitude and pursue their gigantic game along the coast of Brazil. No sea but what is vexed by their fisheries; no climate that is not witness to their toils. Neither the perseverance of Holland nor the activity of France nor the dexterous and firm sagacity of English enterprise ever carried this most perilous mode of hard industry to the extent to which it has been pushed by this recent people—a people who are still, as it were, but in the gristle, and not yet hardened into the bone of manhood. When I contemplate these things, when I know that the colonies in general owe little or nothing to any care of ours, and that they are not squeezed into this happy form by the constraints of watchful and suspicious government, but that, through a wise and salutary neglect, a generous nature has been suffered to take her own way to perfection: when I reflect upon the effects, when I see how profitable they have been to us, I feel all the pride of power sink, and all presumption in the wisdom of human contrivances melt and die away within me. My rigor relents. I pardon something to the spirit of liberty.

The war of the Revolution, of course, interrupted for a time the fisheries of the American colonies. But the fishermen were not idle. They manned the little navy whose exploits have never yet received from history its due meed of praise. They furnished the ships' companies of Manly and Tucker and Biddle and Abraham Whipple. They helped Paul Jones to strike terror into St. George's Channel. In 1776, the very first year of the Revolutionary war, American privateers captured three hundred and forty-two British vessels. The fisheries came up again after the war. Mr. Jefferson, the first Secretary of State, commended them to the favor of the nation in an elaborate and admirable report. He says that before the war four thousand men and 28,000 tons of shipping were annually employed by Massachusetts in the cod fishery alone, and four thousand men and 24,000 tons of shipping in the whale fishery alone. He shows how the energy of the New England fishermen, aided by their local advantage, had before the war driven France and Spain and Portugal from the northern fisheries, and their rivalry was pressing hard on England herself. After the Revolution, when our fisheries began to revive, England endeavored to allure our fishermen into her dominion by a high system of bounties and an absolute prohibition of foreign fish in her markets. She issued an invitation, re-enforced by high bounties to our fishermen, under the general description of "foreigners who had been employed in the whale fishery," to pass over with their families and vessels to the British dominions, either in America or in Europe.

France took the alarm. "She saw," as Mr. Jefferson says, "the danger of letting four or five thousand seamen, of the best in the world, be transferred to the marine strength of another nation and carry over with them an art which they possessed almost exclusively." Lafayette, the illustrious citizen both of France and America, wrote a letter to dissuade our fishermen from accepting the British proposal, and promised that France would do better for them. The French ministry gave a counter-invitation and offered a bounty of fifty livres, near $10, a ton on every fishing vessel they would equip.

I have not time to narrate the detail of the contest between England and France for the transfer of our fishermen. We had to contend against bounties in France and England and prohibitory duties in England, for the life of a calling which Mr. Jefferson declares was "too poor a business to be left to itself, even with the nation most advantageously situated." All Senators are familiar with the policy of bounties and duties, at times separate, at times combined, with which we maintained and cherished our fishing industries.

I have seen with deep regret that the President of the United States, or some person upon whose advice he has acted, seems to think that this object, which the far-sighted policy of Great Britain and France thought so desirable for them, of transferring foreign fishermen from their own country to ours, is undesirable. He has hastened to put himself on record by a letter to the collector of Boston, signed with his own name, as intending to use all the powers vested in him by law, even under the most strained construction, to prevent the employment under the American flag of fishermen of foreign origin. I do not think many precedents can be found of instructions given by the Departments to their subordinates under the signature of the President. I am sure no example can be found in our history, and I think none is likely to occur again, of an Executive straining his powers and departing from the propriety of his station to prevent an accession of skilled seamen to America like that which England and France so eagerly strove to gain at the close of the last century. They look at the thing very differently across the border. When Vice-Admiral Wellesley was in command of the North American fleet, he considered it his duty to call the special attention of the secretary of the admiralty to their danger, from the fact that colonial fishermen in considerable numbers man American vessels. Sir John A. Macdonald declared that—

> The Canadian Government view with very serious concern the effect upon our maritime population of such dependence upon American employers. It creates sympathy with foreign sentiments and institutions, and affords opportunities for instilling into the minds of our people ideas and expectations altogether inimical to British connection.

These men, Mr. President, come here to abide. They are not peons or coolies. They are not the property of anybody. They are in the way of nobody. They are not imported to bring down or to keep down the wages of other laborers. On the contrary, they enable the calling in which they find employment to be more widely extended, and to afford occupation for many others, who might not get it without them. The President's shaft is aimed at the wrong mark. Among the best and most valued citizens on the Massachusetts coast, in Gloucester, in Marblehead, in Provincetown, are to be found many of these brave and skillful mariners, whom our policy in regard to our fisheries has attracted from the British provinces to take their lot under the American flag.

There are three sources of information later than the United States census of 1880 from which we can discover the number and the nationality of our fishermen. Massachusetts took a census in 1885 in which these numbers appear in the schedule of population and also in a special report on her fisheries. The United States Fishery Commission have gathered the statistics for 1886.

The Massachusetts fishery report gives 14,676 fishermen engaged in the fishing vessels of Massachusetts. Of these, 11,743 were residents of Massachusetts; 2,933 were non-residents of Massachusetts; and of these non-residents 998 were Americans. Of the whole 14,676 there were 12,741 either having their homes in Massachusetts or American residents in other States.

On the other hand the table of population shows a total of 7,980 fishermen, of whom 5,433 are native or naturalized Americans. Of the aliens 138 are Irishmen. But 1,158 are natives of England or her dependencies other than Ireland.

Professor Baird estimates the number of persons employed in our fisheries in 1880 as 131,426. Of these 101,684 were Americans. The value of the fisheries of the sea, the great rivers, and great lakes was over $43,000,000. The fisheries of New England engaged 37,043 men. The South Atlantic States engaged 52,418 men; the Middle States, 14,981 men; the Pacific States and Territories, 16,803. (See Appendix D.)

I insert the table (A) at the close of my remarks. I insert also (B) a letter from the Commissioner of Fisheries with his estimate for 1886, and (C) a table from the census of 1880. From these it will seem probable that the truth is somewhere between the Massachusetts population and fisheries census. The proportion of American fishermen to foreigners, as it appears in each of them, is sufficient for my purpose. It is safe to say that a large proportion of those not as yet naturalized will be naturalized. They have little attachment left for the British flag. President Cleveland need be under no apprehension. They are, as Sir John A. Macdonald has found out, "in full sympathy with American sentiments and institutions," and have "ideas and expectations altogether inimical to British connection."

As we look back upon the war of 1812, there are some things which the people of New England may well wish had been otherwise. But if there were anything of disloyalty there, it all evaporated in words. A few disloyal phrases of a convention at Hartford, a little grumbling of a governor, what are they to the blaze of resplendent glory that rises from the deeds of her seamen? The men who censure the reluctance of the Federalists of that day to resent the provocation we had received from England do not always make sufficient allowance for the equal insult we were receiving from France. The party who opposed the war with England were eager enough to take arms against France. They were filled with a morbid horror of the power of Napoleon. But it was a horror into which no element of cowardice entered. They thought that in overcoming England we would overcome the last barrier against his universal empire, and that in attacking England we ranged ourselves on the side of universal tyranny against the last hope of constitutional liberty.

We can now see that they were wrong. The American people were inspired by a surer instinct than that of the Federal leaders. The final judgment of history must be that the war of 1812 was a righteous and glorious war. We were compelled to it by the impudent British pretension to search American vessels on the high seas, and take from them every man whom a midshipman should suspect, or pretend to suspect, of being a British subject. We had scarcely a friend anywhere. The haughty nations of Europe sat at their gates, scowling at the little Republic, as the five Norman champions in Scott's immortal story sat at the doors of their tents on the field of Ashby de la Zouche. The little country, not thirty years old, hurled her mortal defiance at the proudest and strongest of them all, as the young Saxon knight struck the shield of Brian de Bois Guilbert with the sharp end of his spear. We began the war after England had crushed the navy of every other power that had contended with her by sea—Holland, Spain, Denmark, France. England never had a naval war in which she was met, ship to ship, with a superiority in discipline, in gunnery, in seamanship, and in success as by us in the war of 1812. This is fully admitted by Maj. Gen. Sir Howard Douglas in his treatise on naval gunnery, the standard English authority, published with the approbation of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty. This book was originally published in 1820, five years after the war ended. I have here the fifth edition, the last before the substitution of steam-vessels and iron-clads for the old wooden ships. He says:

> The fleets of Europe had been swept from the face of the ocean by the gallant achievements of the British marine.

He goes on to say:

> We entered in 1812, with too great confidence, into a war with a marine much more expert than our European enemies.

He then proceeds to draw his instruction for the conduct of naval engagements almost wholly from the sea fights with the Americans in the war of 1812. Look at his index:

> Action, Naval: Between the Chesapeake and the Shannon; between the Avon and the Wasp; between the Frolic and the Wasp; between the Guerriere and the Constitution; between the Hornet and the Peacock; between the Java and the Constitution; between the Macedonia and the United States; between the Phœbe and the Essex; between the President and the Belvidere.

Here are nine naval engagements, the only ones selected by the English author for the instruction of his countrymen. All of them were combats between British and American ships. In all but two of them the Americans were victorious. In one of these, two British ships attacked the American in a neutral port, when she was disabled, and at anchor, one of her top-masts having been carried away in a storm.

It is true we made peace without a formal relinquishment by Great Britain of the obnoxious pretension. But it is also true that it was never heard of again.

The nation issued from the war—

said John Quincy Adams—

> with all its rights and liberties unimpaired, preserved as well from the artifices of diplomacy as from the force of preponderating power upon their element, the seas.

The Duke of Wellington has given a testimony still more authoritative and decisive. I have not seen it cited by American historians. After the downfall of Napoleon the duke was urged by the Cabinet to take command in America. He replies in a letter to Lord Liverpool of November 9, 1814. He says:

> I do not promise to myself much success there. If we can not obtain a naval supremacy on the lakes, I shall go only to sign a peace which might as well be signed now. You have no right, from the state of the war, to demand any concession of territory from America.

In her contributions, sacrifices, and achievements in this war, Massachusetts may well challenge comparison with any other American State. She raised fourteen thousand men in 1814. She paid $2,000,000 for bounties. One of her fishing towns, Marblehead, had more than eight hundred men in Dartmoor prison when the war ended. She furnished during those three years more men than any other State. The New England States, which opposed the war, sent more men into the field than the Southern States, which brought on the contest.

> You recollect how sailors' rights were won,
> Yard locked in yard, hot gun lip kissing gun.

No man ever attributed want of patriotism to John Quincy Adams. Hear what he says of the fishermen:

> Where were they during the war? They were upon the ocean and upon the lakes, fighting the battles of their country. Turn back to the records of your Revolution; ask Samuel Tucker, himself one of the number, a living example of the character common to them all, what were the fishermen of New England in the tug of war for independence. Appeal to the heroes of all our naval wars; ask the vanquishers of Algiers and Tripoli; ask the redeemers of your citizens from the chains of servitude, and of your nation from the humiliation of annual tribute to the barbarians of Africa; call on the champions of our last struggles with Britain; ask Hull and Bainbridge; ask Stewart, Porter, and MacDonough what proportion of New England fishermen were the companions of their victories and sealed the proudest of our triumphs with their blood.

We all know how much of the supply of American seamen, to whom all this was due, came from the American merchant marine. But these fisheries were the cradle of Navy and merchant service alike. I could call a hundred witnesses. Let me cite but one.

Admiral Luce, in his excellent address before the United States Naval Institute at Annapolis in 1874, says:

> I will yield to no one in my high appreciation of a true American seaman. When found, as he still may be in our service, though in a deplorably small minority, he was one to be proud of and to respect; prompt and fearless, fertile in resources, patient, even cheerful under adversity, of wonderful endurance, intelligent and self-reliant, and withal of unflinching, uncompromising fidelity to his flag. Take him all in all, I maintain that your "true Yankee sailor" has not his equal in the world. * * * It is related on good authority that when the Constitution returned from Holland, after transporting the specie required to pay the last installment of our national debt to that country in 1812, the term of service of her crew had expired, and a few days after her arrival they were discharged. Commodore Hull immediately manned his ship by drawing on the fishermen of the New England coast, and the merchant seamen of Salem, Newburyport, Boston, and vicinity. The response was prompt, and it is alleged that when the Constitution soon after captured the Guerriere, of her four hundred and fifty seamen, only sixty had ever served on board of a man-of-war.

Whatever changes may be made by new methods of intercourse in the relations of nations with each other, it is still true, and will still be true, as when Mr. Webster said it in 1824, that—

> High rank among the nations results more than from anything else from that military power which we can cause to be water-borne, and from that extent of commerce which we are able to maintain throughout the world.

It will also still be true, that if America is to have ships of war, or is ever again to take her former rank in peaceful ocean commerce, she must look to her hardy and adventurous fishermen for a large share of the supply of her seamen.

No Senator who has to deal with this immense interest will venture rashly to disregard the authority of the present head of our Navy. I have lately received this letter from Admiral Porter:

> OFFICE OF THE ADMIRAL, Washington, D. C., May 4, 1888.
>
> MY DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of May 4 asking my opinion of the value of our fisheries as a nursery for seamen for the present Navy, which is to be built of iron and propelled by steam.
>
> I beg leave to say that all our fisheries at the present moment are more valuable as nurseries for naval seamen than they ever were before, for our commercial marine has been almost obliterated from the ocean.
>
> In our last war with Great Britain our Navy was largely recruited from Massachusetts fishermen, who made the finest men-of-war's men in the world, which was illustrated by their skill in seamanship and gunnery, which gave us such great success over our opponents.
>
> They not only furnished seamen to the Navy, but manned that immense fleet of privateers that swarmed the ocean, paralyzed the British commerce, and caused a large section of the British people, led by that great political writer, William Cobbett, to demand of the Government that peace should be secured on any terms.
>
> Notwithstanding the overwhelming naval power of Great Britain during the war, with heavy squadrons in every sea, we were indebted to the New England seamen and the brave officers who led them for a success unparalleled in history.
>
> If we had a war to-morrow we must depend almost altogether upon the fishermen of New England to man our naval vessels.
>
> To show the importance of having trained seamen in time of war, I will mention the fact that the regiment of Marblehead fishermen under John Glover were employed to carry Washington's forces across the Delaware when he surprised and captured the Hessians. Without the aid of the fishermen it is doubtful if Washington would have undertaken the perilous enterprise, for the fishermen were the only ones who considered the project feasible.

The ships that will hereafter be built for the Navy will require as good and hardy sailors as have ever been required before, and it is to be regretted that we can not obtain the services of the fishermen in time of peace. Their present calling is more lucrative than any employment they can obtain in the Navy, and there are no sufficient inducements held out to them to enlist in the Government service.

In time of war with a maritime power the occupation of these fishermen would be gone, and they would flock to enlist in the Navy, as they did in the civil war, when the Confederate privateers made their appearance off our coast. The vessels of our Navy may be said at the present time to be manned almost entirely by foreigners who have entered the service not from devotion to the flag. In case war should be suddenly declared against us our ships abroad would be obliged to return home, discharge their crews, and ship American seamen. In a late inspection of the United States ship Trenton the board of inspection reported to me as follows: "The crew is a fair one, considering their want of knowledge of the English language"—a pretty severe commentary on the class of seamen we enlist in the Navy. It is very desirable that we should adopt some system by which we could obtain enough bona fide American seamen to leaven the crowd of foreigners now on board a United States vessel of war. The crews of our ships of war are generally made up of men from all parts of the world, largely from the Scandinavian race, who do not care what flag they serve under. There are the descendants of the Huns, Goths, and other barbarians who once overran Europe. They enlist in our Navy softened in character, but still free lances as of old. They serve for money, with no sentiment for flag or nationality, and possibly if it came to an action with a ship of their own or a neighboring nation, they would haul down the American flag and hoist that of their own country.

The same qualities required for the seamen of fifty years ago are required for the seamen of vessels of war to-day. The better the seaman the more easily he will learn the improvements in gunnery and seamanship, and the best seamen in the world are those who come from the New England fisheries. They are the strongest, hardiest class of men I know of. They are exposed to all weathers and bear the severest tempests. They are seamen all over, and I will merely add that in 1812 the old Constitution, whose career is familiar to every American, was manned almost altogether by Massachusetts fishermen.

As to any extra science being required to man our present and projected ships of war, I would remark that the management of a ship is easier than it used to be, but we require the same good seamanship we had in days gone by. With a steam-capstan and steam-winch twenty men can get a large vessel under way. An officer on deck, a man at the wheel, and one at the lead, with the above number on deck for general purposes, and the ship can go to sea with the rest of the crew in their hammocks. But when the machinery is disabled and the ship must rely on her ponderous yards and sails, we want every man to understand English and be a seaman from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot. The modern guns, it is true, are larger than of old, the machinery to work them is a little more intricate, but a week's good drilling would teach native-born seamen all that is essential, and a ship of war at the end of that period would be ready for inspection by the board of inspection. When the board of inspection finish their examination of a ship, she must go to sea ready to meet any enemy of equal force, so that what happened previous to 1812, when the Chesapeake was disgraced by the British ship Leopard, can never again occur as long as the board of inspection exists.

If we can in a week drill a mongrel crew so that every man knows his various stations on shipboard, how much easier would it be for us to do the same thing with a crew of New England fishermen, hardy and active in their persons and intelligent beyond any set of foreign seamen.

The question of protection to the New England fisheries and their seamen does not admit of argument, and in my zeal on the subject I may have gone out of my way to prove to you that which you know already.

I inclose you some statistics which, if you have not already got them, will give you the status of our fisheries throughout the United States.

If there is anything bearing on this subject you would like me to hunt up, please let me know, and I will endeavor to obtain it.

The statistics I inclose show at a glance the immense money value of our fisheries and their importance to the country. If it had not been for the fisheries, New England would never have been settled, for on the first landing on those stormy shores it is likely the emigrants would have been forced to go elsewhere but for the quantities of fish, a most fortunate circumstance for the Union, to which New England has added so many true and loyal States.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

DAVID D. PORTER, Admiral.

Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR,
United States Senate.

The statistics which were inclosed with the above letter will be found in the appendix to these remarks (D).

Nearly every important maritime power of ancient or modern times has owed the foundation of its commercial prosperity and its naval strength to its fisheries. When these flourished, its strength increased. When these went to decay, the power of the nation had departed. Professor Huxley tells us that Sidon signifies "a fishing place." Tyre was settled by a colony of fishermen from Sidon. The power of Carthage was built up by the fisheries. Venice was founded by fugitives from the north, who betook themselves to the avocation of fishermen. Genoa, the birthplace of Columbus, laid the foundation of her strength by usurping the fisheries of the Bosphorus. The first wharf in London was built for the accommodation of fishermen. Amsterdam was originally a village of herring catchers. It was an ancient proverb—

Amsterdam is founded on herring bones, and Dutchmen's bodies are full of pickled herrings.

The naval greatness of England came from the same source. The ancient rule of the church which forbade the eating of meat on Friday is said to have been due to a politic purpose to encourage fisheries. In 1563 the British Parliament, to encourage the building up of a naval marine, passed an act extending this prohibition to two more days of the week. The act declares that—

As well for the maintenance of shipping, the increase of fishermen and marines, and the repairing of port towns, as for the sparing of the flesh victual of the realm, it shall not be lawful to eat meat on Wednesdays and Saturdays unless under a forfeiture of £3 for each offense,

Edmund Winslow, the governor of Plymouth, has recorded that when King James asked the envoy of the pilgrims who went over from Leyden to England to tell him of the place they had fixed upon "what profits might arise in that region," the answer was "fishing."

The fishermen are the only portion of a nation that maintain unimpaired their fighting quality during a long peace. Armies become enervated on a peace establishment. But the daily life of the fisherman is a constant discipline in fearlessness, endurance, and activity. Our fishermen are all we have left on the sea as a resource for a sudden occasion.

If anything further were wanting to show the importance of this occupation to national defense and to national wealth it would be found in British and Canadian testimony. Our free-trade friends talk about the duties on fish. They tell us of the hardship of a tax on so cheap and wholesome a food. Mr. President, we pay $600,000 a year for West Point and Annapolis. Canada exported from the produce of her fisheries in 1887 a value of $6,843,388. Of this we took nearly a million and a half. Every dollar of that was a payment to our great rival, to our only possible enemy, towards the support of a naval school to which Annapolis or Greenwich is quite unimportant.

The desire of Canada and Great Britain to contract within the least possible limits the fishing ground to which America shall have access, and to possess themselves without obstruction of the calling which brings to the great American market its supply of fish for food and fish-oils, has a vastly larger purpose than a mere struggle for a profitable industry, important as that may be.

England possesses to-day the great steam fleet of the world. She has, subject to the authority of her Queen, or under her political or commercial control, three hundred and fifty millions of people, a third of the population of the world. She controls the commercial dealings of the inhabitants of 12,495,000 square miles of territory, an area four times as great as that of the Roman empire. She has taken possession of all the great routes of commerce. She steps from island to continent, and from continent to island, from fortress to naval station, and from naval station to fortress. Let me repeat a few sentences which I uttered here last year:

England has not only laid her hands on these enormous countries and the men who inhabit them, but the way she has got control of the great highways, the great roads of commerce, is more wonderful still.

There are four great roads by which the commerce of the world must travel from nation to nation. There are two old roads and two new roads. The old roads are down through the South Atlantic. One turns eastward by the Cape of Good Hope into the Indian Ocean. One turns westward to the Pacific around Cape Horn. The two meet at least at Cathay or farthest Ind, girdling the globe with their mighty and beneficent chain. At every station, at every step, on both, is the power of England planted.

Half way down the coast of the eastern hemisphere, where Africa juts out into the Atlantic, are the English West African settlements and her colonies of Sierra Leone and the Gold Coast. Just below the equator is Ascension Island, an English colony. Five degrees of latitude further we come to St. Helena, an English fortress, where the great foe of England died a prisoner and an exile. The cape itself, a cape of "good hope" to no commerce but hers, with its excellent harbors of Cape Town and Natal, is one of her most prosperous colonies. Thence, by successive steps, Mauritius, Seychelles, Chagos, Maldive, Ceylon, all British possessions, India is reached. Every other power must pay tribute to her in peace, and must run the gauntlet of her fortresses and naval stations in war.

Would you go westward through the Straits of Magellan or past the stormy Cape Horn? Powers in closest friendship with her hold the continent from the southern line of Brazil, while her own Falkland Islands command and menace the entrance to the strait and the passage round the Cape.

But England has not contented herself with the ancient ways. Her commerce is guarded by a far different statesmanship from that which denies appropriations to build a navy, or to pay for carrying mails on its own vessels, or defend its coasts; far different from that which bullies Mexico and cringes before Canada. She already occupies the highways of the future. Commerce hereafter is to seek direct paths though continents must be severed. Here again are two roads, eastward and westward. One through the Mediterranean Sea already cuts Asia and Africa in twain and passes out through the Red Sea to the Indian Ocean. The other, not yet open, is to divide our own continent at Nicaragua or Panama, or to cross it at Tehuantepec.

Whoever shall follow either pathway, except Tehuantepec, must do so at the mercy of England. She holds Gibraltar, the impregnable gateway of the Mediterranean. Half way from Gibraltar to Egypt is her mighty naval station of Malta, which commands both shores of the Mediterranean. Hugging the Asiatic coast is Cypress, her new possession, whose purchase was almost the last act of Lord Beaconsfield. Suez itself she has taken from the improvident hands of France, while at the narrow entrance and exit of the Red Sea she holds Aden and Perim, and beyond, on the way to India, the Island of Socotra. She commands the great eastern pathway of commerce from Europe to India and China almost as absolutely as the river Thames.

Turning to the westward route, our position on the Gulf of Mexico will secure to our three Southern ports convenient access to the canal wherever it may be. But all other commerce must pass the line of sentinels which the foresight of England has already armed and stationed at the entrance to the Gulf. The Bermudas, the Bahamas, the Leeward and Windward Islands, Jamaica, and Trinidad form a complete blockade, while British Honduras lies close to the eastern mouth of the proposed canal of Nicaragua.

Of the forty chief West Indian Islands European powers own all but one, the seat of the black Republic of Hayti and St. Domingo. England herself owns thirteen beside the Bahamas and the Bermudas.

If we ever have a contest with her for a canal at Nicaragua or Panama, her island of Jamaica stands guard at the entrance of the Caribbean Sea and the Bay of Honduras.

She is now adding to all this the land route across Canada. She is adding this last and strongest link to the chain which is to bind China and Japan to her chariot, girdling the globe anew in the northern latitude where the degrees of longitude and the circles become smaller. She is building a strong fortification at Esquimalt, where Vancouver Island, which the weakness of President Polk surrendered to her, thrusts itself into our territory, while the guns of Halifax threaten us on the east.

At the same time Canada, aided by British wealth, is developing her railroad system with wonderful liberality and wisdom, so that the blood of commerce, even that which comes from our own veins, may feed her mighty arteries.

Here are a few of the enterprises she is just undertaking or accomplishing, either as a government or by corporations under her control. Remember that all this is in addition to her great interoceanic system of communication which the Senator from Maine so well described the other day.

First. An important line of railroad constructed last year, called the Duluth, South Shore and Atlantic, extending from the Gogebic iron range of Lake Superior to the Sault Ste. Marie, has, according to recent advices, been purchased by the Canadian Pacific Railway. It will no doubt become an important feeder to that railway.

Second. A Canadian company has recently completed a bridge across the Sault Ste. Marie.

Third. The Canadian government within the last thirty days has definitely decided upon and arrangements are made for building a ship-canal between Lake Superior and Lake Michigan, on the Canadian side of the strait, and in opposition to the canal at that point on the American side, built and owned by the Government of the United States.

Fourth. A well-defined project exists for building a combined ship canal and ship-railway from Georgian Bay, leading down from Lake Huron to Lake Ontario, near Toronto. The total distance is about 100 miles, of which 40 miles will be a dredged canal at lake level and 60 miles by a ship-railway. The object of this route is to avoid the tortuous and expensive navigation through the St. Clair flats, Lake Erie, and the Welland Canal. It will shorten the distance from the Sault Ste. Marie to Toronto 220 miles.

Fifth. The Canadian Government is engaged in improving the St. Lawrence system from Lake Erie to Montreal, the total cost of which completed will be about $50,000,000. Below Montreal it has deepened the St. Lawrence River to 25 feet depth, and is continuing the improvement with the intention of deepening it to 27½ and then to 30 feet. It has expended on this work probably over $3,000,000.

Sixth. The Dominion Government has subsidized, or rather guaranteed, 5 per cent. interest on the cost of construction of the Chignecto ship-railway to be built across the isthmus between Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The cost of this work is estimated to be over $4,000,000. There is no doubt that with the successful completion and operation of this ship-railway, the Georgian Bay ship-railway will be at once commenced under the auspices and with the assistance of the Dominion Government.

Let me have permission to read here a few sentences from an able pamphlet by Mr. Bourinot, the accomplished clerk of the Canadian House of Commons. They contain also the weighty opinion of the Marquis of Lansdowne, late governor-general.

In any plan of imperial defense Canada must henceforth perform an important part. On her Atlantic and Pacific coasts are the finest harbors of the world and enormous deposits of bituminous coal available for steam purposes. Halifax is a strongly fortified port with a large dock-yard; and at Louisburg—now desolate, but once a famous fortress of the French—could well be established another important station for a naval squadron. Both at these places and in British Columbia can be formed those coaling stations which, as Captain Colomb has pointed out, are essential as strategical positions. The present governor-general of Canada, in a recent speech, referred to the important works that fare now in course of construction on the Pacific coast for purposes of defense. "You have here Esquimalt," he said, "a naval station likely to become one of the greatest and most important strongholds of the empire. You have a coal supply sufficient for all the navies of the world. You have a line of railway which is ready to bring that coal up to the harbor of Esquimalt. You will shortly have a graving-dock capable of accommodating all but one or two of Her Majesty's largest ships. You have in short all the conditions requisite for what I believe is spoken of as a place d'armes; but until now that place d'armes has been inaccessible except by sea. We shall henceforth be able to bring supplies, stores, and material of war by an alternative route, direct, expeditious, and lying for more than half its way over British territory."

An astute statesman, the Marquis of Lansdowne, fully appreciates the imperial importance of the Canadian Pacific Railway as a means of keeping open the communications between England and her dependencies in the east, and of strengthening the defenses of the empire at large. Possessing, as she does, the great steam-fleet of the world, and the power of increasing it to still larger proportions, she can always maintain a steady and secure communication with China, Japan, Australia, and even with India, and all other countries in which she has important interests at stake. From her depots at Halifax, or other places on the Atlantic coast of the Dominion, she can in four days reach the shores of the Pacific and supply a fleet ordered to protect her interests in the east, should they ever be threatened by Russia or any other power. The fishermen and sailors of the Dominion must prove an element of great strength in the maintenance of the line of communication with England and those countries with which she is politically or commercially identified. They can man the vessels necessary to protects our ports, and otherwise assist in the naval defenses of the empire. A thousand stalwart fishermen from Nova Scotia would aid materially in the defense of British Columbia or any other section of Canada.

Looking, then, at the maritime industries of Canada, from an imperial as well as a purely commercial standpoint, we can not fail to see how intimately connected they are with the security of the empire. We all know that no country can be truly great that has not a seaboard and does not follow maritime pursuits. Spain sank low in the scale of nations as her maritime power declined with the loss of her great colonies. The prosperity of Italy has increased with the growth of her commerce and shipping, and she need no longer lament the palmy days of Genoa and Venice. We all know why St. Petersburg was built on a marsh, and the history of this century is replete with the evidence of the desire of Russia to establish herself within the Golden Horn. France has fed her navy from the hardy Bretons and Normans who have served a rude apprenticeship on the banks Newfoundland. Canada, as yet with a populatipn of about five million souls, already possesses a marine greater than that of Russia, Germany, Italy, or France. Prosperous as may be hereafter her commerce in manufactures or in agricultural products, it is on her rich fisheries must always rest in a large measure her maritime greatness.

To maintain the communications with the East through Canada, to keep open this imperial highway at both extremities, the sixty thousand fishermen of the Dominion must form an almost indispensable element of greatest strength. They will issue out from Halifax at one extremity of the great continental line, and from Vancouvers Island at the other, forming, in time of war, a perpetual menace to our commerce and to our coasts.

This is no controversy as to the profit of a few thousand men in their business. They could doubtless find profitable employment elsewhere. It is a struggle on the part of Great Britain and Canada to increase their naval strength and diminish ours; to increase the numbers of a naval school whose graduates will be a constant threat to our commerce in time of war, both on the Atlantic and the Pacific.

Now, Mr. President, it was to adjust the relations between these two nations in regard to this great interest, so vital to the strength and so important to the welfare of both, that the Administration solicited the negotiation which has resulted in the present treaty. It has but one avowed object. That is to promote the convenience and define the rights of American fishermen and protect them against unfriendly interference as they pursue their calling. Yet, is it not a little remarkable that there is not to be found throughout the length and breadth of the land, so far as I can hear, a single fisherman who does not deem its provisions an outrage? So far as the expressions of their opinions come to me and to my colleague in our correspondence; so far as we hear from public meetings from the towns where the men interested in the fisheries dwell; so far as we can learn from our colleagues who represent those districts in the other House; so far as the associations of fishermen have taken action; so far as we get the utterance of the press or the conclusions of men who have had to deal officially or under important responsibility with the matter heretofore, there is one concurrent expression of concern, alarm, disapproval, indignation.

Here is the action of the city council of Gloucester, now the chief fishing port of the country. There is no distinction of party in that city on this question. (See Appendix E.)

Here are the preamble and resolutions of the Gloucester Mariners' Association, signed by 144 masters of vessels. You can see something of the political feeling of some of these men from the names they give their vessels. Here is the schooner Senator Morgan, and the schooner Senator Saulsbury, side by side, with the schooner John G. Whittier and the schooner George F. Edmunds. (See Appendix F.)

The New York Board of Trade and Transportation express the views of business men of that city in opposition to negotiation on this subject. (See Appendix G.)

The Secretary of State thinks—

There is not a just and reasonable complaint on the part of our American fishermen for which this treaty does not provide a remedy and promise a safeguard in the future.

How does it happen that no single American fisherman has found it out? Why, Mr. Bayard, when he wrote that letter to his Boston supporters, must have singularly forgotten that he had adjourned the question of remedy for every one of the complaints which he had over and over again in his diplomatic correspondence declared to be just and reasonable to a remote and uncertain future. Here, Mr. President, is the resolution of the Gloucester Board of Trade. (See Appendix H.)

Here are the resolutions of the American Fishery Union. (See Appendix I.)

I leave to Senators from other States to make known the sentiments of their own constituents.

I have seen somewhere the charge that the opposition to this treaty had its origin in the prejudice of party. Never was a calumny more unfounded. The earliest and most earnest voices of remonstrance have come from those eminent Democrats who have had occasion to study this question in times past. Mr. Charles Levi Woodbury, who bears a name that has been a synonym for pure and undiluted Democracy for generations; Mr. Richard S. Spofford, the last Democratic candidate for Congress in the Gloucester district; Mr. Trescott, counsel for the United States at Halifax, in 1878, the most accomplished American writer on our diplomatic history—the American feeling of these men broke away from their Democracy—or rather, they found no inconsistency between patriotism and Democracy as they had learned it.

Mr. President, the whole Democratic party had fully committed itself to another and very different policy of dealing with this subject. It will be remembered that the President, in his message of December, 1885, made this recommendation:

In the interest of good neighborhood and of the commercial intercourse of adjacent communities, the question of the North American fisheries is one of much importance. Following out the information given by me when the extensory arrangement above described was negotiated, I recommend that the Congress provide for the appointment of a commission in which the Governments of the United States and Great Britain shall be respectively represented, charged with the consideration and settlement, upon a just, equitable, and honorable basis, of the entire question of the fishing rights of the two Governments and their respective citizens on the coast of the United States and British North America.

April 18, 1886, the Senate passed this resolution as a response to the President's recommendation:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate the appointment of a commission in which the Governments of the United States and Great Britain shall be represented, charged with the consideration and settlement of the fishing rights of the two Governments on the coasts of the United States and British North America, ought not to be provided for by Congress.

This was adopted by a vote of 38 to 10, every Republican Senator who voted or was present being in the affirmative and the following Democrats: BROWN, BUTLER, FAIR, GORMAN, HARRIS, MCPHERSON, MAXEY, MORGAN, PAYNE.

But this is not all. The President recalled the subject to the attention of Congress in his next annual message, in which he declared that the recommendation of his last message had been "met by an adverse vote in the Senate." Congress thereupon passed the statute of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act authorizing the President of the United States to protect and defend the rights of American fishing vessels," etc. This passed the Senate by an unanimous vote on the yeas and nays, save one. The Democratic House proposed a still more stringent measure of redress, desiring to cut off intercourse with Canada by land as well as by sea. The report of their Committee on Foreign Affairs, as well as the letter of Secretary Manning, which is appended to it, denounces the conduct of Canada as "inhuman," "in violation of treaty obligation," and "uncivilized." The debate showed that Democratic Senators vied with Republican Senators in their expressions of indignation. The Senator from Delaware interposed in the speech of the Senator from Maine a reminder that the Secretary of State had gone as far as that Senator himself in expressions of indignation at the outrages inflicted on our shipping. The declarations of the Secretary of State in his correspondence with our minister at St. James, and the British minister here, the able letters of Mr. Phelps, the doctrines laid down by Mr. Wharton, the present Solicitor of the State Department, in his Digest of International Law; the admirable letter of Secretary Manning to the House of Representatives; the utterances of Democratic Senators, notably the Senator from Alabama, on this floor, are all in contradiction of the principles and the policy of this treaty. If, for this first time in nearly seventy years, party lines have been drawn in our foreign relations, it is done now, at the bidding of the Administration by a total and instant change of front on the part of its supporters.

These votes and this action are a censure in advance of the whole policy of the present negotiation. They announce the policy of the Democratic party in tones that can not be mistaken. A series of insults to the American flag, a policy of persistent unfriendliness, the refusal of the common international hospitalities had been inaugurated for the purpose of compelling a change in our domestic legislation. It was that for which Congress, without distinction of party and with the nearly unanimous approval of the people without distinction of party, placed in the hands of the President a simple, direct, peaceful, but ample and most effectual means of redress. The Administration in this negotiation has disregarded the authorized expression of the will of the American people, if there can be such authorized expression. We placed in the hands of the President a simple means for a simple purpose. Instead of using that means, the whole American complaint is postponed to a remote and most uncertain future. Neither apology nor compensation, neither indemnity for the past nor security for time to come is proposed. Instead, we have this most extraordinary treaty.

Before calling attention to its terms I wish to make one other observation. That is, that the Administration seems to have consulted nobody. I can not learn that in the progress of this negotiation any representative of the interests to be affected has been admitted to its confidence. When the Washington treaty of 1871 was in progress the Senate was kept in session far into May. Its members on both sides were constantly consulted and kept advised either by the commissioners or the President. When the Ashburton treaty was negotiated, Massachusetts and Maine, the States chiefly interested in the boundaries in dispute, were invited to appoint commissioners, who were constantly in attendance. During this whole negotiation, as during that which preceded the Halifax award and that which preceded the Geneva award, the leading statesmen of Canada were constantly consulted by the representatives of Great Britain. Arbitrators proposed by us were rejected in deference to Canada's objection. One of the British commissioners is understood to have repaired to Canada during the discussion, which was intermitted for that purpose. Yet neither my colleague nor myself, neither of the distinguished Senators from Maine, no representative of a fishing district in the other House, no member of this body, the constitutional adviser of the President and the constitutional depositary with him of the treaty-making power, is admitted or consulted in this important matter until the concessions to Canada are all made and the President and Secretary come before the public with their declaration that we have got all by this treaty that we are justly and equitably entitled to demand.

Great Britain and Canada were represented on their part by trained diplomatists. The British minister at Washington, like his predecessors, makes diplomacy the business of his life, and, as is well known, occupies a very high place in that profession. The Canadian representative, Sir Charles Tupper, has made the fishery interests of Canada the study of a lifetime. Our commission, on the other hand, worthy and able as are the gentlemen who composed it, was improvised for the occasion. Neither of them probably had any considerable knowledge of the matter in question until his official relation to it began. I do not complain of this. It is unfortunately the habit of the United States in the conduct of our foreign intercourse. But it rendered the refusal of the Administration to avail itself of the usual means of information and advice specially unhappy in its results.

Mr. PAYNE. If the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me, I should like to ask him, what is his opinion of President Angell, who was upon the commission?

Mr. HOAR. I do not think it is quite proper for the Senator to ask my opinion as to President Angell, but I am very happy to state it. I do not think, however, it is right to ask my opinion. The Senator might ask my opinion of some gentleman whom I do not respect. I respect President Angell very highly, but I am not aware that President Angell—to use the graphic expression of another person—ever saw a mackerel until it came from the gridiron. A gentleman of Michigan——

Mr. PAYNE. He was born in New England.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose he was——

Mr. PAYNE. A native of Rhode Island.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose he is a native of Rhode Island; there are natives of Rhode Island by the hundreds and thousands who have no knowledge of the laws and rights of fisheries. Why did he not consult with gentlemen from Rhode Island who represent that interest? Why did he not consult some representative of the fishing interests in the other House? Why did he not consult some leading representative of the fishing interests in this body?

Mr. PAYNE. Associated with the commission on our part was one of the leading lawyers in the country, Mr. Putnam.

Mr. HOAR. An eminent lawyer, my personal friend, whom I highly value and esteem; but it shows the utter boy's play and utter ignorance of the importance of the rights that are at stake when one of the Senators of the United States, a Democratic member of the Committee on Foreign Relations of this body, when the criticisms are made that when the fishing rights have been surrendered without consulting the men who knew anything about them, gets up and asks me what is my opinion of President Angell.

Mr. PAYNE. I think, if the Senator will permit me, that he has made a very uncharitable and irrational charge upon this commission.

Mr. HOAR. I am making no charge upon the commission.

Mr. PAYNE. Excuse me until I finish my statement. I think it is very uncharitable to make the remark that the commission knew nothing about the question; that President Angell knew nothing about the matter. The idea that a man born in New England, educated in New England, brought up in New England, knows nothing about this matter is very singular.

Mr. HOAR. What I stated was that I was not aware that President Angell ever saw a mackerel until it came from the gridiron.

Mr. PAYNE. I know Mr. Angell to be pre-eminent in science, one of the most distinguished men in the United States, the head of the University of the State of Michigan.

Mr. HOAR. President Angell is all that and a great deal more, but I have never heard that either of the three American commissioners, the Secretary of State, the honored head of the University of Michigan, or the honored leader of the Portland bar had had occasion to inform himself thoroughly in regard to the practical rights and interests of the vocation of the American fishermen.

Mr. PAYNE. One moment more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield further?

Mr. HOAR. I am willing to yield for a correction of a statement.

Mr. PAYNE. I wish to correct the statement the Senator made, that neither one of the gentlemen associated with the Secretary of State had any knowledge of the fisheries question. He overlooked the very prominent fact that Mr. Putnam, who is certainly one of the most eminent lawyers in New England, had been the attorney in the Dominion courts of these very fishermen in defending their rights; and to say that he knew nothing about the mackerel question is unfair.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Putnam, it is true, had been employed to defend some criminal cases in the Dominion courts. He was a very competent person. I wonder what would have been thought of Mr. Putnam when he was acting as attorney in defending those cases if he had undertaken to try them without consulting his clients, to get some of his clients' knowledge of the law and the facts.

Mr. PAYNE. I take it that somebody in New England——

Mr. HOAR. I do not yield any further. I take it that when these three men were undertaking to deal with the trained diplomatists of Great Britain and with Sir Charles Tupper, the old minister of fisheries in the Dominion, who had made this subject the study of his lifetime, it was a very indiscreet thing indeed, however eminent in science or in law or in Delaware politics they were, not to avail themselves of the advice, of the assistance, and the suggestions of the representatives of the fishing interests in this body and in the other House.

Mr. GRAY. I do not want to interrupt the Senator if he objects to an interruption; but will the Senator from Massachusetts undertake to say that the negotiators on the American side of this treaty, Mr. Putnam and Mr. Angell, to say nothing of the Secretary of State, were inferior in equipment for the duties that were imposed upon them to Mr. Chamberlain or Sir Lionel Sackville West; that there was anything in the occupations, history, or previous studies of those gentlemen that made them at all inferior in equipment for negotiation to either of the gentlemen whom I have named, one of them certainly not a practical diplomatist, and the other not so eminent that any fair American lawyer should fear to come in competition with him?

Mr. HOAR. I think that the training of a New England lawyer in a commercial city, and the training of a man as professor in a university in the West, and the training of an able and honorable United States Senator from Delaware, however honorable those positions and functions in life may be, did not fit them to cope on terms of equality, either in diplomacy or in special knowledge, with the men whom Great Britain sent on the other side, and I think that the result of that diplomatic attempt on the part of those gentlemen will abundantly satisfy the Senate of that fact.

Mr. GRAY. What special training had Mr. Chamberlain, or what special training had Sir Lionel Sackville West, which rendered them superior to the American negotiators?

Mr. HOAR. I suppose it had been the business of Mr. West to study the question for the last ten years.

Mr. GRAY. And what better selection could have been made in this country, where we have no trained school of diplomatists, than was made?

Mr. HOAR. I would suggest that Mr. WILLIAM P. FRYE, of Maine; Mr. W. H. Trescott; General WILLIAM COGSWELL, of Salem, Mass.; Mr. Fitz J. Babson, of Gloucester, or Mr. Charles Levi Woodbury would have saved us from the disgrace and humiliation of this treaty.

One other matter I ought to advert to. The Committee on Foreign Relations very properly calls attention to the refusal by the President, under the advice of the Secretary of State, to communicate to the Senate confidentially the course of the negotiations and discussions, and the various propositions and arguments arising in the negotiation. The committee deems the refusal contrary to the constitutional relation between the President and the Senate, and the reverse of the continuous practice in such matters from the beginning of the Government until this time. The Secretary of State alleges as the reason for the refusal—

That the negotiation is intrusted to the discretion of the Executive, and that it could not hopefully be entered on without the guaranty of mutual confidence between the agents.

He implies that his refusal is due to some confidential obligation to the British side of the conference. But Sir Charles Tupper, on the other hand, in his speech of May 10, expresses his—great surprise that the protocols as published did not give all the proposals made, and the counter-proposals and the replies on both sides.

So it is clear, Mr. President, that this concealment from the Senate of what took place there as preliminary to the treaty is solely of Mr. Bayard's own seeking, and is contrary to the expectation and to the desire of the British commissioners. The suggestion of the confidential character of this communication, and that it is essential in order that such proceedings might be hopefully entered upon, finds no support in the understanding of the other side. Something took place there which Sir Charles Tupper desired and expected to make known to Canada, and which the Administration desires and expects to conceal, not only from the American people, but from the Senate, to whom the Constitution commits the duty of advising in regard to the transaction.

Now, Mr. President, what was the present occasion for a revision of our international relations with Canada? We had, it is true, long-standing differences, growing out of conflicting claims under the treaty of 1818 and in regard to our rights before that treaty. But these claims were not the subject of the present disturbance. The wrongs with which this treaty does not deal are the wrongs which had so excited public indignation. The recent and present subject of American complaint is the attempt on the part of Canada to compel a change in our customs laws, a purely domestic concern, for her benefit, by vexatious and inhospitable treatment of our vessels, in violation of the plain laws of international courtesy. To that complaint it was the duty of the Administration to have addressed itself. The grievances recently suffered by the American vessels whose names have been furnished us by the President in his communications have, I believe, in no instance grown out of their having fished in the territory disputed under the treaty of 1818. There have been but two American vessels seized for fishing outside the 3-mile line since the treaty of 1818. One was the Washington in 1843, seized in the Bay of Fundy, and decided by the umpire to whom the two nations submitted the case to be within our rights under that treaty. The other was the case of the Argus. The Administration have passed by the American grievance, have got neither indemnity for the past nor security for time to come, have done all that was in their power to do to put future redress out of our reach. They have entered upon a negotiation in regard to matters not instantly pressing, and in dealing with those have yielded nearly all that was of value in the American claim, what clearly belonged to us, and what we had always enjoyed as matter of right, without any adequate or important equivalent.

The law of March 3, 1887, passed with but one dissenting voice in each House, gives the President authority to prohibit the entrance to our ports of the vessels of any foreign power or any port, district, or dependency thereof, or any class of such vessels, when he shall be satisfied that our vessels are unjustly vexed or harassed there. But how must he be hampered and restrained in the exercise of that discretion by his own public utterances, and those of the Secretary of State made since this treaty was proposed, and by the concessions implied in the instrument itself.

We claim that the refusal to fishing vessels of the ordinary rights of hospitality and commercial privileges is a violation of the law and usages of nations as established in modern times, justifying, not war, but a like refusal in our discretion to any vessel from the offending port or district. Now, here we have a treaty stipulating for certain restricted and conditional privileges to our fishing vessels, therefore clearly recognizing the propriety of withholding them in all other cases. How can the President and Secretary ever hereafter put in force the provisions of the statute of March 3, 1887 in retaliation for conduct whose propriety they have themselves so admitted? The rights of common humanity to our vessels in distress have been withheld in many flagrant instances. This is a grievance for which the cessation of the intercourse in respect to which the complaint arises furnishes abundant remedy. The treaty provides for removal of this grievance to a limited extent and on strict conditions. The President can hardly hereafter make the continuance of these grievances a ground of complaint in the cases he has not provided for.

But the important question is the substance of the treaty itself. If I am right—and if I am wrong the ablest statesmen of America in every generation have been wrong—if I am right this is no mere question of the investment of a few hundred thousand dollars and the employment of a few thousand men; these may be transferred to equal profit elsewhere. It is a question of the strength of the right arm of this nation. It is a question of its power to ward off or to return a blow in any future war. It is a question of that naval strength without which our commerce and our coast cities are alike to be at the mercy of any enemy who may attack them. It enters largely into the question whether as a maritime power we are to be equal, not to Great Britain, but even to Canada. It is a question, not of the price of fish, but of the limits and the efficiency of the American naval school.

The pending negotiation has to do with a good many separate questions. They relate to four principal subjects of difference:

The extent of territory in which the United States possess rights of fishery, including shore rights;

The treatment due to our vessels on the coasts and in the ports of the British North American dependencies;

The claim for indemnity for past grievances in the treatment of our fishermen;

The abandonment of our established protective policy for the benefit of British fishermen.

In regard to each of these, the Secretary of State seems to have dealt with the subject, I will not say in total ignorance, but in total disregard of the American position and the American rights. He says, in his letter to gentlemen in Boston, that "the sole and difficult question to which the treaty relates is that of the fishery rights of one nation in the jurisdictional waters of another." This is the statement of the American case from the British point of view. Mr. Bayard's letter and the utterances of a few other supporters of the treaty are the first and only statements of this character ever heard on this side of the Atlantic south of the Canadian border since the continent was settled. We have always held, and there is abundant British authority to support our claim, that we were joint owners of a great ocean fishery which our fathers had helped to conquer and to acquire, and which had been granted to Massachusetts by her charter, a property where the fishery was the principal and the shore right the accessory, and that at the Revolution we made a partition of that property; that we did not gain or acquire that right by the treaty of 1783, but simply retained it and had it acknowledged, and that it rests to-day on the same foundation as our title to our independence, or our title to the soil of the State of Maine. The jurisdiction of shore or adjacent waters had nothing to do with it. If I were to undertake to support this view by marshaling all the American authorities, I must speak a week; I must cite every American historian, every American writer on public law, every American diplomatist who has dealt with the subject from John Adams down to Mr. Wharton, the present accomplished law adviser of the Department of State.

The Continental Congress, as early as 1778, declared the ultimatum on which peace should be made with England—

1. Independence;
2. The recognition of our claim to the fisheries;
3. Free navigation of the Mississippi.

They enforced this by the further agreement that every stipulation respecting the fisheries must receive the assent of every State.

John Adams has left it on record that when he went abroad as our representative in 1778, and again when the treaty of 1783 was negotiated, his knowledge of the fisheries and his sense of their importance were what induced him to take the mission. He calls them—

That great source of wealth, that great nursery of seamen, that great means of power.

He declared that unless our claims were fully recognized the States would carry on the war alone. He said:

His country had ordered him to make no peace without clear acknowledgment of the right to the fishery, and by that declaration he would stand.

His letters to William Cranch, to James Lloyd, to Richard Rush, to William Tudor, and William Thomas set forth the whole grounds of our rights as an original part of our national empire. This right was completely acknowledged by the highest English authorities. When the British Parliament passed the act of March, 1775—

To restrain the trade and commerce of the provinces of Massachusetts Bay and New Hampshire and the colonies of Connecticut and Rhode Island and Providence Plantations; and to prohibit such colonies from carrying on any fishery on the banks of Newfoundland, and other places therein mentioned—sixteen peers, among them Lord Camden and Lord Rockingham, protested. Among their reasons they said:

Because the people of New England, besides the natural claim of mankind to the gifts of Providence on their coast, are specially entitled to the fishery by their charters, which have never been declared forfeited.

In the debate on the articles of peace in the House of Lords, Lord Loughborough, the ablest lawyer of his party, said:

The fishery on the shores retained by Britain is in the next article not ceded, but recognized as a right inherent in the Americans, which though no longer British subjects, they are to continue to enjoy unmolested.

This was denied nowhere in the debate.

John Adams took greater satisfaction in his achievement securing our fisheries in the treaty of 1783 than in any other of the great acts of his life. After the treaty of 1783 he had a seal struck with the figures of the pine tree, the deer, and the fish, emblems of the territory and the fisheries secured in 1783. He had it engraved anew in 1815 with the motto, "Piscemur, venemur, ut olim." I have here an impression taken from the original seal of 1815. This letter from John Quincy Adams tells its story:

QUINCY, September 3, 1836.

MY DEAR SON: On this day, the anniversary of the definitive treaty of peace of 1783, whereby the independence of the United States of America was recognized, and the anniversary of your own marriage, I give you a seal, the impression upon which was a device of my father, to commemorate the successful assertion of two great interests in the negotiation for the peace, the liberty of the fisheries, and the boundary securing the acquisition of the western lands. The deer, the pine tree, and the fish are the emblems representing those interests.

The seal which my father had engraved in 1783 was without the motto. He gave it in his lifetime to your deceased brother John, to whose family it belongs. That which I now give to you I had engraved by his direction at London in 1815, shortly after the conclusion of the treaty of peace at Ghent, on the 24th of December, 1814, at the negotiation of which the same interests, the fisheries, and the boundary had been deeply involved. The motto, Piscemur, venemur, ut olim, is from Horace.

I request you, should the blessing of Heaven preserve the life of your son Charles Francis, and make him worthy of your approbation, to give it at your own time to him as a token of remembrance of my father, who gave it to me, and of yours.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

My son, CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

The negotiations of 1815 and 1818 were under the control of as dauntless and uncompromising a spirit, and one quite as alive to the value of the fisheries and the dishonor of abandoning them as that of John Adams himself. If John Quincy Adams, the senior envoy at Ghent, and the Secretary of State in 1818, had consented to a treaty bearing the construction which is now claimed he never could have gone home to face his father. When the war of 1812 ended, Great Britain set up the preposterous claim that the war had abrogated all treaties, and that with the treaty of 1783 our rights in the fisheries were gone. There was alarm in New England; but it was quieted by the knowledge that John Quincy Adams was one of our representatives. It was well said at that time that, as

John Adams saved the fisheries once, his son would a second time.

When some one expressed a fear that the other commissioners would not stand by his son, the old man wrote in 1814, that—

Bayard, Russell, Clay, or even Gallatin would cede the fee-simple of the United States as soon as they would cede the fisheries.

When England made the claim at Ghent that the war had abrogated the treaty of 1783, and that our fishery rights both at sea and on shore came from that treaty and had fallen with it, our commissioners answered that our right to the fisheries stood on the same foundation as our right to our independence or to our territory, and that this right was not affected by the war, and that they were instructed not to bring the same into discussion. Mr. Adams, in his letters in reply to Jonathan Russell, shows that this claim is not only supported by Vattel, but is established by abundant British authorities. One of the British commissioners has left on record his opinion that the failure by Great Britain to reject this claim in the treaty amounts to an assent to it. Mr. Adams distinctly declares that our right was not the creation of the treaty of 1783.

It was the possessory use of the right at any time theretofore as British subjects, and the acknowledgment by Great Britain of its continuance in the people of the United States after the treaty of separation.

The letter of instruction to our commissioners at Ghent says:

Information has been received that it is probable that a demand will be made to surrender our right to the fisheries. Should it be made, you will, of course, treat it as it deserves. If insisted on your negotiations will cease.

Our commissioners notified those of Great Britain that they were not authorized to discuss these rights. The treaty was concluded without mentioning them. Mr. Adams declared four years after the convention of 1818:

Our doctrine was sound in itself, and maintainable on the most enlarged, humane, and generous principles of international law. * * * Since that the principle asserted by the American plenipotentiaries at Ghent has been still asserted and maintained through the long and arduous negotiation with Great Britain, and has passed the ordeal of minds of no inferior ability. It has terminated in a new and satisfactory arrangement of the great interest connected with it, and in the substantial admission of the principle asserted by the American plenipotentiaries. * * * This principle is yet important to great interests and to the future welfare of the country.

He states in a terse and weighty sentence the whole controversy:

They considered it a British grant; we considered it a British acknowledgment.

Mr. President, it is obvious that if the war of 1812 abrogated our fishery rights a new war will abrogate the treaty of 1846 and give us Vancouver's Island and fifty-four forty.

We were only insisting upon a doctrine many times asserted by eminent British authorities, and by the great continental writers on the law of nations. Vattel says:

Although a nation may appropriate to itself a fishery upon its own coast and within its own jurisdiction, yet if it has once acknowledged the common right of other nations to come and fish there, it can no longer exclude them from it; it has left that fishery in its primitive freedom, at least with respect to those who have been in possession of it.

He cites the herring fishery on the coast of England as being common to them with other nations, because they had not appropriated it to themselves from the beginning.

It is clear, then, Mr. President, that we had and have everything that was assigned to us in the partition of 1783, everything that England then acknowledged to be ours that we did not renounce in 1818.

That treaty leaves the deep-sea and bank fisheries untouched, as not capable of being questioned. It then expressly affirms the right of the United States to take fish on the whole western coast of Newfoundland and on the southern coast as far eastward as the Rameau Islands; also on the coast of Labrador from Mount Joli northward indefinitely; also on the Magdalen Islands; also to dry and cure fish on the unsettled portions of said coast. We had before no right to dry and cure fish in Newfoundland; but we had the right to take fish on the whole shores of the British possessions in North America. We renounced in 1818 the right to take fish on the coast of Nova Scotia and on the eastern shore of Newfoundland and the shore at the mouth of the St. Lawrence westward from Mount Joli, and gained the shore rights on a considerable strip of Newfoundland. There is, as far as I know, no claim anywhere that the right to dry fish on these shores or to take them within 3 marine miles, renounced in 1818, was of any considerable importance. But the treaty of 1818 is censured for two reasons:

First, because in the clause in which the United States "renounce forever any liberty heretofore enjoyed or claimed by the inhabitants thereof to take, dry, or cure fish on or within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of his Britannic Majesty's dominions in America, not included within the above-mentioned limits," the use of the words "bays" has left it open for England to claim that we are excluded from all territory within 3 miles from any body of water included between headlands, whatever may be its size.

Second, that in enumerating certain privileges to be thenceforth enjoyed by our fishermen, it impliedly renounced all others.

A small part of this criticism is well founded. The use of the general term "bays," taken literally and without regard to the subject-matter of the negotiation, would have excluded us from substantially all the shore fisheries, even those conceded to us by the other express language of the treaty. It would shut us out from the whole Gulf of St. Lawrence itself. That is certainly a bay. It is not a "bay" included within the above-mentioned limits; but the above-mentioned limits, nearly all of them, are included within it. If you except Labrador, north of the Straits of Belle Isle, there is not a league of the territory within which our shore rights are reserved which is not within the Gulf of St. Lawrence, which all, I believe, was formerly included in the name Baie des Chaleurs. This is all Mr. Webster and Mr. Everett have conceded. All their criticism on the treaty of 1818 was uttered before the award of 1853. The language of the treaty gave Great Britain a pretext for raising a difficulty. But, as I shall presently show, it is a pretext which she never herself has seriously undertaken to enforce, and which, but for the defenders of this treaty, never would have had a place of dignity in this discussion.

The other criticism upon the treaty of 1818 is absolutely without force. Senators talk as if the negotiators of the treaty of 1818 had, in some way, renounced or abandoned or failed to obtain a provision for suitable hospitalities for our fishermen in Canadian ports, and this has made all the trouble. This is another mistake. Prior to 1818 no American vessel, whether employed in fishing or commerce, had the right to enter a British-American port for any purpose whatever. They could fish on the fishing-grounds where the inhabitants of both countries used to fish. They could go on the shore to dry fish. But they could not enter a harbor, unless it were a place used for fishing. They could buy nothing or sell nothing. They could not refit or ship a crew or go into the interior or go home by land. Now everything stipulated in their behalf in the treaty of 1818 was a clear gain. It favored the fisherman so far above all vessels whatever. It enabled him to get his bearings and shelter and water and fuel. The policy of England, which to all other commerce was as ferocious as that of the cannibal of the south seas, relaxed toward the fishermen almost to the dim and faint courtesy of her savage Highlander.

"Stranger, what dost thou require?"
"Rest, and a guide, and food, and fire."

The treaty of 1818 was a Democratic measure. The commissioners were Albert Gallatin, Jefferson's Secretary of the Treasury, and Richard Rush, the friend, disciple, and eulogist of Calhoun. The President was James Monroe. The Secretary was John Quincy Adams, who had been with Gallatin at Ghent. He was little likely to surrender any right of a New England fisherman. If you had dissected his brave and stout heart you would have found fisheries written on it.

John Quincy Adams sounded a clarion of triumph when the treaty of 1818 was concluded. The great object of his father's life, save independence, the object without which his father believed that independence itself could not be maintained—the great object of his own public service, until those later days when he stood almost alone for the right of petition against a hostile House of Representatives, had been secured.

The British pretension that the war had destroyed our fishing rights had been abandoned. Important privileges had been gained for the fishermen which were allowed to no other persons whatever. Shore rights on part of the continent had been abandoned, but others on the island of Newfoundland had been secured in their stead.

We have gained by the convention of 1818—

he says—

an adjustment of the contest preserving our whole principle. The convention restricts the liberties in some small degree, but it enlarges them propably in a degree not less useful. It has secured the whole coast fishery of every part of the British dominions, except within 3 marine miles of the shores, with the liberty of using all the harbors for shelter, for repairing damages, and for obtaining wood and water. It has secured the whole participation in the Labrador fisheries; the most important part of the whole, and of which it was at Ghent peculiarly the intention of the British Government at all events to deprive us. * * * The convention has also secured to us the right of drying and curing the fish on a part of the island of Newfoundland, which had not been enjoyed under the treaty of 1783; it has narrowed down the pretensions of exclusive territorial jurisdiction with reference to those fisheries to 3 marine miles from the shores. Upon the whole, I consider this interest as secured by the convention of 1818 in a manner as advantageous as it had been by the treaty of 1783.—Adams to Russell, page 241.

You see, therefore, Mr. President, that the second criticism of the treaty of 1818 wholly disappears. Fishermen who brave the perils of the seas to supply food for mankind are the favorites of public law everywhere. It is a strange argument that because in 1818 the diplomacy of America gained for her fishermen an advantage by which they were excepted from Great Britain's tyrannous and barbarous policy of non-intercourse with her colonies, they should have no part in the humane and liberal policies of later times.

The first criticism on the treaty of 1818, if you deal only with the words and phrases of a single clause, has a little more foundation. But it disappears when you look at the whole instrument. The purpose of the clause was to move back the line of the fisheries 3 miles. When they spoke of drying and curing fish "in the bays, creeks, or harbors" they were using differing phrases to describe the little inlets of the shore. The Gulf of St. Lawrence, then all included in common parlance in the name "The Bay of Chaleurs," was not included in the limits where the privilege of drying fish was admitted, but itself included within its own limits all those parts of the coast excepting only that part of Labrador north of the Straits of Belle Isle. The treaty expressly admits us to the Magdalen Islands, to the coast of Labrador east of Mount Joli, and to the south and west coast of Newfoundland. The British pretension would involve the absurdity that we may, under the treaty, take and dry fish on those coasts, but can not do it in the waters which surround them.

Further, the treaty speaks of the unsettled bays, harbors, and creeks, showing that it was a description of a shore line that it was making.

Further, it reserves the right to enter the bays, harbors, etc., where we are excluded from fishing, for purposes of shelter. How absurd to suppose that they were thinking of the Bay of Fundy, of the Bay of Chaleurs, of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, when they spoke of an entry for the purpose of shelter. A ship outside of one of these in a storm would of course keep the open sea.

But the historic evidence is equally decisive. Mr. Rush has left on record his testimony that this clause of renunciation was drawn by him and inserted at the request of the American commissioners, in order that the whole transaction might appear as an assertion of the original American rights as acknowledged in 1783, which could only be lost or limited by express release. The British plenipotentiaries did not desire it. Mr. Rush declares that neither he nor Mr. Gallatin would have signed the treaty if it excluded us from any waters but those within 3 miles of the coast. Mr. Adams had had prepared most carefully a statement of our fisheries for the use of the negotiators of 1815 from competent merchants engaged in the business. He also had a letter from James Lloyd, then Senator from Massachusetts, and one of the most accomplished statesmen of that day. Mr. Lloyd's letter is a most admirable and valuable summary of the history and condition of the fishing interests of Massachusetts, which then included Maine. Whatever may be the case now, these bays were then, as they may be again, the most valuable part of our fishing grounds. Mr. Lloyd says:

The shores, the creeks, the inlets of the Bay of Fundy, the Bay of Chaleurs, and the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the Straits of Belle Isle, and the coast of Labrador appear to have been designed by the God of nature as the great ovarium of fish—the inexhaustible repository of this species of food, not only for the supply of the American but of the European continent. At the proper season, to catch them in endless abundance, little more of effort is needed than to bait the hook and pull the line, and occasionally even this is not necessary. In clear weather, near the shores, myriads are visible, and the strand is at times almost literally paved with them.

He further says—

That on a Sunday the New England fishermen swarmed like flies upon the shore.

He says—

The provincials, in 1807 or 1808, stationed a watchman near the Straits of Canso to count the number of American vessels which passed those straits on this employment, who returned 938 as the number actually ascertained by him to have passed, and doubtless many others, during the night, or in a storm, or thick weather, escaped his observation.

For twenty-five years, as Mr. Rush declares—and he was minister to England for seven—as Mr. Marcy, the Secretary of State, declares, and as Mr. Stevenson, our minister to England, declared in a letter to the English secretary for foreign affairs, without denial, no serious claim was made that we had no right in the great bays more than 6 miles wide. We have exercised that right from that day to this. In 1843, at the instigation of the colonial authorities, Great Britain seized two of our fishing vessels, one, the Washington, for fishing in the Bay of Fundy, the other, the Argus, for fishing on St. Anne's Bank, on the northern coast of Cape Breton. Both vessels were in a large bay more than 6 miles wide; both were more than 3 miles from the shore, and both were in waters whose shores on both sides were in British jurisdiction. It is true, one of the outer headlands of the Bay of Fundy is in Maine, if you treat the coast on the mainland as forming the headland, and not the British island of St. Menan, which lies just off that coast. But the Bay of Fundy borders on Maine but for a few miles, on the most liberal estimate. The ship was far in the bay, 10 miles from Annapolis, where the shores were British on both sides, and had been for more than 60 miles inward from the open sea. These cases were submitted to arbitration in 1853. The British Government in the mean time had ordered that no further seizures should be made in waters more than 3 miles from the shore. The case was referred by the two Governments to arbitration. The umpire decided in favor of the American claim. This is his language:

The question turns, so far as relates to the treaty stipulations, on the meaning given to the word "bays" in the treaty of 1783. By that treaty the Americans had no right to dry and cure fish on the shores and bays of Newfoundland, but they had that right on the shores, coasts, bays, harbors, and creeks of Nova Scotia, and as they must land to cure fish on the shores, bays, and creeks, they were evidently admitted to the shores of the bays, etc. By the treaty of 1818 the same right is granted to cure fish on the coasts, bays, etc., of Newfoundland. But the Americans relinquished that right and the right to fish within 3 miles of the coasts, bays, etc., of Nova Scotia. Taking it for granted that the framers of the treaty intended that the word "bay" or "bays" should have the same meaning in all cases, and no mention being made of headlands, there appears no doubt that the Washington, in fishing 10 miles from the shore, violated no stipulation of the treaty.

It was urged on behalf of the British Government that by "coasts," "bays," etc., is understood an imaginary line drawn along the coast from headland to headland and that the jurisdiction of Her Majesty extends 3 marine miles outside of this line, thus closing all the bays on the coast or shore, and that great body of water called the Bay of Fundy, against Americans and others, making the latter a British bay. This doctrine of the headlands is new and has received a proper limit in the convention between France and Great Britain of 2d August, 1839, in which "it is agreed that the distance of 3 miles, fixed as the general limit for the exclusive right of fishery upon the coasts of the two countries, shall, with respect to bays the mouths of which do not exceed 10 miles in width, be measured from a straight line drawn from headland to headland."

The Bay of Fundy is from 65 to 75 miles wide, and 130 to 140 miles long; it has several bays on its coast; thus the word "bay," as applied to this great body of water, has the same meaning as that applied to the Bay of Biscay, the Bay of Bengal, over which no nation can have the right to assume sovereignty. One of the headlands of the Bay of Fundy is in the United States, and ships bound to Passamaquoddy must sail through a large space of it. The islands of Grand Menan (British) and Little Menan (American) are situated nearly on a line from headland to headland. These islands, as represented in all geographies, are situated in the Atlantic Ocean. The conclusion is, therefore, in my mind, irresistible that the Bay of Fundy is not a British bay, nor a bay within the meaning of the word as used in the treaties of 1783 and 1818.

The owners of the Washington, or their legal representatives are, therefore, entitled to compensation; and are hereby awarded, not the amount of their claim (which is excessive), but the sum of $3,000, due on the 15th of January, 1855.

I am amazed that so good a lawyer as the Senator from Delaware should have worked himself into the belief that this does not decide the whole question. Mr. Bates gives his decision, and puts it exclusively on the ground that bays in 1818 mean the same thing as in 1783, a description of the shore line, and that a vessel "ten miles from shore violates no stipulation of the treaty." This is stated by him as the ground of his decision. It settled not only the Bay of Fundy, but the whole contention between the two Governments. Then he goes on to speak of some special arguments of Great Britain; first, the headland theory. He rejects that as new, and having a proper limit in the convention lately made with France. He adds that the Bay of Fundy has one of its headlands American, and is not a bay within the meaning of the word as used in the treaties of 1783 and 1818. Now, it will be seen that although the fact is mentioned that one of the outer headlands of the Bay of Fundy is in the United States, the decision is not put on that ground, but expressly on the ground that the Bay of Fundy is not a bay within the meaning of the treaty, that "bay, creek, harbor, and coast," where we were to dry fish by the treaty of 1783, meant the shore line, and that the words had the same meaning in 1818, and that a vessel 10 miles from the shore is not within the treaty at all.

The same decision is made in the case of the Argus. No opinion was there given, because the principle of the opinion in the case of the Washington covered it.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me—I do not intend to interject in his speech any portion of the debate we had some time ago on the occasion of my discussion of this point—but I am quite willing, as long as he has recited the whole of the opinion of Mr. Bates, that it should be submitted to the Senate for its judgment as to the ground upon which that decision was made. Notwithstanding the Senator's exegesis and at the risk of his questioning my ability as a lawyer, I yet can not see why a careful reading of that opinion will not justify the conclusion to which I came originally with my study of that question, that the ground upon which that opinion is based is that the Bay of Fundy, so called, is not a bay at all within the meaning of the treaty of 1818, and that the language of the umpire, Mr. Bates, in connecting that opinion with that illative conjunction "therefore," fully justifies the conclusion at which I have arrived.

But if the Senator will pardon me, while I am on my feet I wish to correct what is of course not an intentional mistake in the statement of the case of the Argus. He speaks of the Argus as having been seized in the Bay of St. Anne. I call his attention to the evidence in the case of the captain and crew, that she was seized not within the Bay of St. Anne but upon St. Anne's Bank, which is quite another situation and far outside of the limits of these waters which are properly called the Bay of St. Anne.

Mr. HOAR. I had intended to make that correction myself, but inadvertently as I passed it I said "St. Anne's Bay." It is unimportant however, as affects the principle. St. Anne's Bank is within a line from headland to headland, but it is outside of the body of what I spoke of, which has been named St. Anne's Bay; so that the giving us damages for that was a rejection simply of the British headland theory.

We have it then settled by the history of the original transaction, settled by subsequent practice, settled by a fair construction of the whole language of the treaty, and especially settled by a solemn adjudication binding upon both nations, that the treaty of 1818 only withdrew our fishery rights 3 miles from the shore.

Now, Mr. President, the difficulties of the last three years have nothing to do with the question of the true limits of our fishing-ground. They relate solely to an inhospitable and vexatious abuse of our vessels for the purpose of compelling us to alter our domestic arrangements as to duties on imports.

Now, what an unwise, blundering, timid, un-American diplomacy is that which, when one hundred and fifty American ships cry out to their Government for redress of vexatious treatment in British harbors, for denial of ordinary hospitalities, for oppressive use of legal authority, to turn wholly away from their injury and suffer Great Britain to discuss over again the interpretation of the treaty of 1818 as to fishing limits, and take down from her walls the rusty, disused weapons of seventy years ago and brandish them again in our faces! What statesmanship, what patriotism is it for President and Secretary and Democratic Senators to set themselves with one voice to arguing the British case!

They tell us we ought to negotiate. We have negotiated, and are content with the results. They tell us we ought to arbitrate. We have arbitrated, and have two judgments in our favor. What treaty is likely to be better for us than the treaty of 1818. What arbitration more likely to result in our favor than the arbitrament of 1853? The spirit which caused the attack on our fishing vessels at Fortune Bay the first time we attempted to exercise there our rights after the Halifax award, the spirit which has dealt with these one hundred and fifteen cases of American vessels seeking hospitality, will never be altered until our markets are given up to Canadian fishermen and our own fishermen are driven from their trade. That spirit will find as many opportunities for its exercise under the new treaty as under the old.

Our complaint of Mr. Cleveland is not that he negotiated, but that he refused to negotiate in regard to the American grievance. That he puts off to a more convenient season. He negotiates where we need no negotiation, and leaves our condition worse than he finds it. Our demand for redress, which is a fit subject for negotiation, the gravity of which he has again and again admitted, he wholly ignores or postpones. He has done the things he ought not to have done and has left undone the things he ought to have done.

In the year 1886, according to the information laid before us by the Executive, 700 American fishing vessels, and in 1887, 1,362 American fishing vessels were boarded and called to account by British officials in British-American waters or ports. According to the minority of the Committee on Foreign Relations, nearly 400 vessels have been involved in seizures or other interferences. More than 150 of these have complained to our Government. One hundred and fifteen of them have been the subject of diplomatic complaint to Great Britain on the part of our Executive. These were no light or frivolous complaints. The Secretary of State in his diplomatic correspondence with England, where, if anywhere, the language of caution and moderation is appropriate, denounces the acts of the British authorities as "outrageous," as "brutal," "inhospitable," "inhuman." The President indorses the action of the Secretary and desires to have the evidence taken and preserved in perpetuam rei memoriam, that demand for redress may be enforced against England. Secretary Manning declares that:

> The Dominion of Canada brutally excludes American fishermen from Canadian ports—and says that he—> hopes there never will be such passionate spite displayed by the officers of this Government as has during the last summer been exhibited in the Dominion of Canada toward well-meaning American fishermen.

These are not sentimental grievances. Voyages broken up, vessels condemned on frivolous pretexts, the common decencies of hospitality denied, refusal even to replace the food that had been given to their own perishing seamen; a Canadian she-wolf would have had more gratitude to the man who had succored her young; the American flag hauled down from an American mast head by a Canadian officer. Why, in the old days here would have been matter for a hundred wars.

Mr. Bayard promised the owners of the David J. Adams, in his letter of June 30, 1886, that—

> Reparation for all losses unlawfully caused by foreign authority will be the subject of international presentation and demand.

And now we are quietly told, in the corner of a report, that these claims have not been considered, as some demands are made against us for interfering with seal fisheries in the North Pacific, and both subjects are adjourned to a future time. It is not too much to say that, while this Administration shall exist there will neither be redress nor hope nor expectation of redress for any outrage committed by Great Britain upon an American anywhere.

For the insult to our flag we get no apology from Great Britain. We are informed by the British minister that the Canadian Government regrets it. But we have no diplomatic or international relations with Canada. She is to us but a bureau or department. The act should either be disavowed and punished by Great Britain, or Great Britain must be held responsible.

We get no indemnity for the past. Is there any security for the future?

There is nothing in the instrument very difficult of comprehension. There are nominally sixteen articles in it. There are really but five that are absolute. There is one other that takes effect if we repeal our duty on fish.

First. It provides new limits for our right of fishing near Canadian shores. The first nine articles deal with this one subject.

Second. It provides in two articles for the treatment of American fishing vessels entering Canadian harbors for shelter, repairs, wood, or water.

Third. It gives to "fishing vessels of Canada and Newfoundland on the Atlantic coast of the United States all the privileges reserved and secured by this treaty to United States vessels in the aforesaid waters of Canada and Newfoundland."

Fourth. It agrees that every United States fishing vessel shall conspicuously exhibit its number on each bow.

Fifth. It provides for the trial and punishment of the United States vessels unlawfully fishing or preparing to fish, or otherwise violating the laws of Great Britain, Canada, or Newfoundland "relating to the right of fishery in such waters, bays, creeks, or harbors."

Sixth. It provides that when we admit their fish-oil, whale-oil, seal-oil, and fish of all kinds free of duty, we may enter their ports, etc., to purchase provisions and supplies, to ship crews, and transship cargoes.

As to each of these matters the treaty leaves us worse than it found us.

It does not afford redress of grievances.

It does not provide against the recurrence of causes of complaint in future.

It concedes valuable rights which ought not to be surrendered.

It gains no valuable rights which we do not now possess.

It negotiates in regard to matters which, under the special circumstances, should not be the subject of negotiation.

It fails to negotiate and bring into settlement matters which peremptorily demand settlement.

It gets much less than it is worth for what it proposes to give, and much less than Canada had already shown her willingness to pay.

It leaves us in much worse attitude for future negotiation.

It shows an utter want of appreciation for the national value of our fisheries and the respects in which they are important. It shows an utter insensibility to the national honor, dignity, and character.

The whole tone and temper of the negotiation is feeble, spiritless, ignoble, and timid.

I have already spoken of the failure of the Executive to obtain or even to demand redress of grievances and insults. The President and Secretary had committed themselves; they had in their diplomatic correspondence committed the nation to the assertion that our fishermen and the nation itself had been outraged by these proceedings. Both Houses of Congress had united in an expression to the same effect. This does not rest on American authority alone. Mr. Davies, of Prince Edward Island, I believe an eminent, I know a very able member of the Canadian Parliament, who followed Sir Charles Tupper in the recent debate, and who will not be charged with not taking the side of Canada to the extreme, said in that debate:

They were not satisfied with putting a construction upon the treaty and then carrying out that construction in a firm and reasonable way, but they were determined that the customs laws of this country should be dragged in to harass, to irritate, to worry, and drive to desperation the American fishermen, as it did drive them to desperation.

Now, what occasion was there to reopen the old dispute as to the meaning of the word "bays" in the treaty of 1818? That had nothing to do with the vexations to which our vessels were subjected. We had, as has been seen, two judgments which settled the question in our favor. The matter was substantially at rest. There had been a little Canadian talk on the subject, but Great Britain had given it up. This is thoroughly admitted by both sides in the colloquy lately had in the Parliament of Canada between Sir Charles Tupper and the Hon. Peter Mitchell, lately minister of marine and fisheries, under Sir John Macdonald, and the highest authority in Canada on this subject, unless we except Sir Charles Tupper himself.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I can only say that nobody knows better than my honorable friend that Great Britain induced him to recall his regulations and instructions, after he had issued them, and restricted his jurisdiction to within 3 miles of the shore.

Mr. MITCHELL. And why? Because Great Britain could control the government of this country, and I had to do it; that is why.

* * * * * * *

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There was also a dispatch from Lord Granville. Now, under the pressure of this, as my honorable friend has stated, he changed his instructions in reference to the 10 miles and put in 6 miles, and forbade his officers to interfere with the American fishermen, not as in the first instructions he gave, if they were within 3 miles of the mouth of the bay, but only if they were within 3 miles of the shore, and he says:

"Until further instructed, therefore, you will not interfere with any American fisherman unless found within 3 miles of the shore, or within 3 miles of a line drawn across the mouth of a bay or creek, which, though in parts more than 6 miles wide is less than 6 geographical miles in width at its mouth. In the case of any other bay, as Baie des Chaleurs, for example"—

The very bay he excluded them from was more than 10 miles wide—

"you will not interfere with any United States fishing vessel, or boat, or any American fishermen, unless they are found within 3 miles of the shore."

Mr. MITCHELL. Under positive instructions from England, against my representations and everything else.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think I have satisfied my honorable friend that, as far as Her Majesty's Government were concerned, while they maintained the abstract right under the treaty, they were unwilling to raise the question of bays, and the result is, as my honorable friend knows, that for the last thirty-four years, certainly since 1854—and I will not go further back than 1854—there has been no practical interference with American fishing vessels unless they were within 3 miles of the shore, in bays or elsewhere.

See how completely these gentlemen both admit the practical refusal of Great Britain for the last forty years to countenance this absurd claim. Now, what did you want to open it for?

But in one respect these gentlemen are wrong. They are wrong in stating that Great Britain maintained a different view for the first forty years. I have shown from the evidence of Mr. Rush that this construction of that treaty was never heard of for the first twenty-five years, from 1818 to 1843, when the Washington was seized.

Now, our Administration begin this treaty by nine articles, in which they give up substantially this entire contention. There are, it is true, some trends or bends of the coast from which the preposterous headland theory, which Mr. Bates, the umpire, says was never before heard of, might exclude us. But I do not now recall a single body of water which appears on the map to have the name of a bay, except the Bay of Fundy and St. George's Bay, to which we are hereafter to have admission if the treaty be ratified. Even St. Anne's Bay the treaty shuts against us.

Can the Senator think of any single body of water except the Bay of Fundy and the St. George's Bay, in which we have admission, which bears the name of "bay?"

Mr. GRAY. I can point you out some that have no geographical name.

Mr. HOAR. You do not recall the name?

Mr. GRAY. I think I can point you out some.

Mr. HOAR. It is said that the delimited waters have little value as fishing grounds. A report of the Committee on Foreign Relations made January 19, 1887, is cited, which expresses the opinion that the right to take fish within 3 miles of the shore is of no practical value to American fishermen; that purse-seines can not be safely or profitably used near the shore; that the schools of mackerel are almost always found more than 3 miles from land, either in great bays and gulfs or out at sea. Suppose this all to be true to-day, it does not follow that our rights are of no value. The committee are speaking only of the present use of a right to go within 3 miles of land. They expressly except great bays and gulfs. But the habit of these fish to resort to particular localities, which has changed once, may change again. Mr. Lloyd, in his letter of 1815, says:

The shores, creeks, and outlets of the Bay of Fundy, the Bay of Chaleur, the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and the straits of Belle Isle are the great ovariam of fish. In clear weather, near the shores, myriads are visible, and the strand is almost literally paved with them.

This fish, which have changed their places of resort before, may change again. Artificial propagation, which depends for its importance on the unerring habit of the fish to return to the place where it was hatched, may stock these shores and inlets anew with a supply as abundant as of old. Whatever the committee may have said, or whatever fishermen may have said, as to the present value of these bays and inlets under the conditions now existing, or for a few years past or to come, neither the highest American nor the highest Canadian authorities believe the rights we yield by this treaty to be of small importance. President Arthur, in his message of December, 1883, says:

I suggest that Congress create a commission to consider the general question of our rights in the fisheries, and the means of opening to our citizens, under just and enduring conditions, the richly-stocked fishing waters of British North America.

When the President wrote these words we had everything beyond dispute except what Great Britain claims we renounced by the treaty of 1818.

Now, what thinks Canada? Sir Charles Tupper, in his speech in which he reports the proceedings of the negotiators, says:

There was one subject on which I was glad to find that the American plenipotentiaries and myself were entirely as one. They expressed no wish to acquire the right to fish in the jurisdictional waters of Canada. With that expression of opinion on their part I heartily concurred. I believe, sir, it would have been difficult to obtain any possible treaty that would repay Canada for having her inestimable fishing grounds thrown open again to United States fishermen.

Mr. Davies answers him:

I agree that the inshore fisheries of Canada are the most valuable possession she has to-day.

Note this remarkable assertion. Mr. Bayard writes to Boston that—

The sole and difficult question was of the fishery rights of one country in the jurisdictional waters of another.

Yet Mr. Bayard, according to Sir Charles Tupper, did not express the slightest wish to have that question decided in our favor.

No, Mr. President, the surrender of these ancient fishing rights, which the valor of our fathers won for us and the diplomacy of our fathers secured for us, can not be palliated by the feeble excuse that they are of little worth. Great Britain makes no contention for trifles. These many thousand square miles of fishing ground have been, are, and will hereafter be of vast importance both to our fisheries and to our naval school, as none know better than the astute men who represented Great Britain and Canada.

Note the remarkable assertion of Sir Charles Tupper in this statement, made on his responsibility in the Canadian Parliament, that they were not even asked by the American commissioners to treat with us on the subject which Mr. Bayard declared was the sole and difficult question which existed between the two Governments, and the American rights were all surrendered.

Nor can this surrender be justified on the ground that it renounces any cause of contention or makes it easier for the fisherman to know whether he is within the prohibited limits. The present limit is 3 miles from the shore. That can be judged easily by a practiced eye. The judgment is aided by a thousand landmarks and seamarks. But under the treaty, with the exception of six of the twelve bays that are named, the line of exclusion is 3 miles seaward from an imaginary line drawn across the water where the bay is 10 miles wide. Who can tell, in the night, in the fog, in the storm, when he is 3 miles from an imaginary line drawn 10 miles through the water? Do not you think the fishermen will get over the line sometimes, even innocently, when they are after a school of mackerel? If you get over the line and are caught fishing or preparing to fish, your vessel, appurtenances, cargo, and supplies are gone.

Mr. GRAY. The line of exclusion of which the Senator speaks is to exclude American fishing vessels from fishing within——

Mr. HOAR. Or preparing to fish.

Mr. GRAY. Or preparing to fish. I do not know that the Senator's eloquent phrase in regard to vessels being unable to discern that line at midnight or in a storm is very applicable. I do not know that a vessel can undertake to fish at midnight or in a storm or is very particular about the line where it may be. The line, as I understand it, is to mark the limit of the right of fishing or preparing to fish. I am speaking of the Senator's language about midnight and the storm.

Mr. HOAR. Did the Senator ever hear of a fog?

Mr. GRAY. Oh, yes, and have seen them.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator suppose that anybody would fish in a fog?

Mr. GRAY. But take the case the Senator mentioned.

Mr. HOAR. Take the case of a storm at night and the line then being seen.

Take this stipulation in connection with the provision of the Canadian law, which I shall speak of again, and which now stands, and is hereafter to stand, in spite of this treaty: Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 94, section 10, of fishing by foreign vessels:

If a dispute arises as to whether any seizure has or has not been legally made, or as to whether the person who seized was or was not authorized to seize under this act, oral evidence may be taken, and the burden of proving the illegality of the seizure shall lie upon the owner or claimant.

Now look at section 15:

If, on any information or suit brought to trial under this act, judgment is given for the claimant, and the court or judge certifies that there was probable cause for seizure, the claimant shall not be entitled to costs, and the person who made the seizure shall not be liable to any indictment or suit on account thereof; and if any suit or prosecution is brought against any person on account of any seizure under this act and judgment is given against him, and the court or judge certifies that there was probable cause for the seizure, the plaintiff, besides the thing seized, or its value, shall not recover more than 4 cents damages, and shall not recover any costs, and the defendant shall not be fined more than 20 cents.

The voyage may be broken up; the fisherman may be absolutely innocent; the cargo may be spoiled; the ship may be lost while in charge of the men who seized it; yet if, on this oral testimony, the man who made the seizure, on his complaint, can get a judge to certify that he was misled by somebody else, or by mistake of fact or place, so that he had probable cause, no suit whatever will lie against him; and if the suit be first brought against him by the owner, there shall be no costs, and 4 cents damages. The testimony is to be oral. Senators know something of the evidence in admiralty suits even at their best. I am afraid Captain Quigley, of the Canadian schooner Terror, will find little difficulty in persuading his sailors to think and to testify that every American vessel he shall board hereafter is within the prohibited line.

Edward Everett told me that he was once sitting at midnight on the deck of the Scotia as she passed Cape Race, on a stormy and dark night. He asked Captain Judkins how near he supposed himself to be to Cape Race. The captain answered, "Within 5 or 6 miles." A little while afterwards Mr. Everett asked him how near he could tell his actual position with certainty. The captain answered, "Within 8 or 10 miles."

Another section provides that three-quarters of what the vessel and cargo sell for, which is fishing or preparing to fish within the limits, may be distributed among the sailors. Oral evidence may be taken. The sailors on board the Canadian vessel which makes the seizure are bribed, if I may use so gross a term, by three-quarters of the value of the thing seized, and the burden of proof is put upon the owner of the vessel which has been seized, and that is a thing which does not seem to have entered Mr. Bayard's head.

Now, Mr. President, everybody is familiar with the evidence which is got in admiralty causes from sailors——

Mr. GRAY. I only want to say, if the Senator from Massachusetts will indulge me—and I do not wish to interrupt him unnecessarily—that the provision of the Canadian law which places the burden of proof upon the vessel seized to disprove her contravention of that provision, harsh as it seems, and undoubtedly is, is the counterpart of the laws of the United States in regard to customs seizures, and the laws of the United States are quite as rigorous, and they place in so many words the burden of proof upon the vessel seized to disprove the contravention of customs regulations or laws. But however that may be, I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the clause in the treaty which, for the first time in our diplomacy, undertakes by treaty stipulation to limit the scope of the municipal law of another country in its effects and operations upon our fishermen.

Mr. HOAR. We differ altogether in our point of view. I utterly deny that the customs laws throughout this country contain any provisions which are like that; but the Senator from Delaware, if he will give me his attention for one moment, I think will see the very great difference between the two cases.

We have the right to impose on vessels that import merchandise into this country the obligation of showing that when they come in they are in compliance with our law. They are within our jurisdiction, and, reasonable or unreasonable, they have no cause of complaint. But here is the fisherman of the United States exercising his right on the high seas, or his right where he is as much within the exercise of his own property as the Canadian is in his own dwelling. And now to say that a little Canadian vessel may seize an American who is in the exercise of his own public right, secured to him by the law of nations and by special treaty, a right which he got for Great Britain in the first place, and that she shall hold over his head the obligation to have his vessel confiscated—and there is another provision of that law which provides that if the judge says there is probable cause for the seizure there shall be only 4 cents damages and 20 cents costs for the recovery—to say that that should be done when a Canadian court, on the evidence of a lot of sailors who are to have three-quarters of the thing in dispute as a bribe, shall certify that there was probable cause for seizure! I can not believe that, upon reflection, my honorable and patriotic friend from Delaware will stand here and advocate or justify such a condition of things.

Mr. GRAY. I did not attempt, if the Senator will allow me, to advocate or justify anything. I merely wanted to point out the fact that barbarous as it may seem—and I think a great deal about our custom-laws is barbarous——

Mr. HOAR. This is no customs law.

Mr. GRAY. I know it is not; but it is a law which does undertake to place upon the vessel seized just that barbarous and unnatural rule that the party seized shall have the burden placed upon him to disprove the allegation.

Mr. HOAR. Does not my honorable friend see that we are talking about the condition of an American fisherman, prosecuting his fishing right on the high seas? Suppose a little Canadian fellow comes along and takes a vessel worth $20,000 or $30,000 and says, "You were not on the high seas, but you were a rod over 3 miles from this 10-mile line drawn from headland to headland. I take you into Canada." And there those sailors are to have three-quarters of that sum distributed among them. To claim that the man was a few rods one way or the other from this line, what has that to do with the American customs laws?

Mr. GRAY. Nothing, except that it is a mode of enforcing the law.

Mr. HOAR. A man coming to an American port submits himself to American authority and American jurisdiction and American law.

I would not speak with disrespect of the Canadian courts. I have known personally some of their jurists. There are others who stand in high and deserved repute among the great lights of jurisprudence. But I do not know what local tribunals may be charged with the administration and interpretation of this law. Our Canadian friends will pardon me if I must, in this instance, judge of their jurisprudence by their legislation. The Canadian judge must be expected to interpret their laws in the spirit which inspired them, and to carry out the purpose for which they were confessedly enacted. That purpose was, as Mr. Davies declared in the Parliament of Canada, "that the customs laws of this country shall be dragged in to harass, to irritate, to worry, and drive to desperation the American fishermen, as it did drive them to desperation." That Mr. Davies is high authority will appear from a sketch of his career, which I take from Appleton's Biographical Dictionary and append to these remarks. (See Appendix J.)

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator allow me to read, while I have the book in my hand, five lines from our Revised Statutes, which support the assertion I have made.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRAY. I read from section 909 of the Revised Statutes, which says:

In suits or informations brought, where any seizure is made pursuant to any act providing for or regulating the collection of duties on imports or tonnage, if the property is claimed by any person, the burden of proof shall lie upon such claimant: Provided, That probable cause is shown for such prosecution, to be judged of by the court.

Mr. HOAR. That is, the burden of proving the property.

Mr. GRAY. But putting the burden of proof on the "claimant" the Senator of course knows is quite technical.

Mr. HOAR. I can not understand how a lawyer of such eminence as my honorable friend, of the patriotic purpose and candor which we know he possesses, should in the zeal of his defense of this extraordinary performance satisfy himself that there is any resemblance between a United States statute, which says that where a man claims property the burden of proof shall be on him, and a statute which says that when property in my possession is seized—it may be on the high seas—the burden of proof is put upon me to prove that that seizure was illegal. I can not see, myself, any possible resemblance between the two.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator will pardon me, it is not very relevant, but at the same time it is a question of accuracy. This provision of the Revised Statutes does just that thing, and where there is a seizure made and there is a claimant (which is a technical word for a man who is a defendant in a proceeding in rem), the burden of proof is on him as to everything that is charged, not only as to the ownership of the property, but as to the infraction of the customs laws.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator mean to say that if I could seize a British vessel in the port of New York I could hold on to that vessel?

Mr. GRAY. So far as the charge made was for the infraction of the laws as to customs duties.

Mr. HOAR. I am constrained to say that I do not believe it.

Mr. GRAY. The statute says so. I do not say so.

Mr. HOAR. I do not believe the statute meant any such thing. If it did, there is no possible resemblance between seizing the vessel of another nation when it is in its own right, in its own place, and a vessel going into the port of another country and submitting it——

Mr. GRAY. It is a barbarous rule of evidence, but it is the rule.

Mr. HOAR. There is no possible resemblance between the two cases.

These first nine articles of the treaty, then, instead of surrendering a thing of no value in the interest of peace, surrender what is of great value in the interest of discord. The purpose of Canada to drive our fishermen from the sea and to compel us to open our markets to support theirs, will remain unchanged, or will be stimulated to new efforts by this achievement. A hundred seizures, a hundred vexations, a hundred quarrels will arise where one has arisen before. If dishonor to our flag, if vexation, brutality, inhospitality, outrage, have produced for her this harvest, what motive will she have for other conduct hereafter? She has tried already, to her entire satisfaction, what virtue there is in stones. She will not be likely to resort to words or grass hereafter.

Within the past three weeks the news comes of the American ship Bridgewater, a vessel of 1,557 tons, which put into Shelburne, Nova Scotia, in distress for repairs, having encountered a heavy gale. She had sailed from St. John, New Brunswick, for Liverpool with a cargo of deals. The owners of the cargo, foreseeing a long detention, transferred it to another ship. The owner of the vessel offered it at auction to see if he could sell it, but got no bids. On this the Canadian customs officer seized it as an importation, demanded 25 per cent. duty, and held it for eighty-one days. The Government then decided that the seizure was illegal. The collector then proposed to release the ship on condition that the owner would withdraw his protest, and release the officer who made the seizure and the Government from all claim for damages. This the owner indignantly refused. The ship was then released without condition. The minister of justice gave the opinion that the owner had no claim against the seizing officer, and the Government refused to entertain his demand for redress. The owner lost his charter-party and his voyage, and thinks he was damaged full $20,000.

134 MACON STREET, BROOKLYN, June 5, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I thank you for your valued favor of yesterday's date.

When Mr. Rowell, the minister of customs of Canada, handed me his letter, which you have in print, declining to entertain my claim for compensation, I remarked, after carefully reading it, "It is unfortunate you confess to the violation of law, but deny the redress. The matter will now go to the State Department, it being a governmental rather than a personal matter." Mr. Rowell replied, with a smile, "You will get nothing there. Of all the claims which have been lodged there against the government, we have not been called upon to pay one; we simply heard nothing more about them." At the time I thought both this and his letter were intended to favor me with a compromise, the deputy minister of justice having, a moment before, in the ante-room, put me in a position to make such offer.

I can not see how Mr. Bayard can be indifferent to this. Not to ask for an explanation and remedy for the pecuniary injury would simply be a confession that in treaty laws, in which our Government are a party to, we have no rights which even dependencies are bound to respect. The State Department must have received the papers Friday morning, but as yet I am without acknowledgment.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN H. ALLEN.

Hon. WILLIAM COGSWELL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. GRAY. What is the date of the letter?

Mr. HOAR. June 5, 1888.

Mr. GRAY. What connection has that with the State Department?

Mr. HOAR. The purpose of reading this letter is not to comment on the failure of the State Department to do something about this.

Mr. GRAY. It does not allege it.

Mr. HOAR. No, it does not allege it. It is to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Canadian minister of customs smiled in the face of the injured citizen and told him that they never heard anything more from the American administration about these claims which the American administration over and over again had denounced as outrageous and brutal and inhuman.

When Mr. Seward made a speech from a balcony in 1866 and asked his audience what he should say to the Emperor of France, a voice in the crowd cried out, "Tell him to get out of Mexico!" The Emperor got out of Mexico pretty rapidly when Mr. Seward gave him the intimation. When General Grant asked his countrymen who had suffered from the Alabama to leave their bill for collection with him, England sent her commissioners here with an apology and paid the bill. When Mr. Adams was told by Earl Russell that the law officers of the Crown found no law to prevent the going out of the rams, Mr. Adams quietly answered, "It is superfluous to observe to your lordship that this is war." The rams were stopped in an hour. When Salisbury, the present prime minister, was told by Mr. Evarts that the Fortune Bay affair would be treated as abrogation of the treaty, he reversed the decision and paid the bill. There was Republican diplomacy. The weakest Canadian official laughs in the face of an American complainant when he thinks of Grover Cleveland and Mr. Bayard.

The Senator from Alabama told us the other day how he thought the South would look at this business. He said, if I correctly understood him, that the masters of these fishing vessels were holders and importers of slaves. He said the fishermen were a small per cent. of the population of the country. He said, too, as I understood him, that if the issue were presented to the people of the South whether we should have free fish or a war with England, they would prefer free fish. He now says, in reply to the Senator from Maine, that what he said was this:

I admonished that side of the Chamber, and I respectfully do it again, that if you present to the people of the United States going to war with Great Britain against the question of letting in fish free of duty, you have a dangerous issue before you; that is all.

What an utterance is that! American vessels by the hundred seized, insulted, harassed, vexed, dishonored. The American flag hauled down from an American masthead. American mariners in foreign ports subjected to treatment which our Democratic Secretary declares is "outrageous," "brutal," "inhuman," "inhospitable." All this is done to bully us to put fish on our free-list, that the fishery marine and the naval strength of our rival may grow, and our fishing marine and naval nursery may dwindle and decay. And when the Senate of the United States is considering what to do about it the Senator from Alabama tells us these sailors of ours are few in number, and that "a question between putting fish on the free-list and war with Great Britain is a very dangerous issue." Are we China, that opium is to be forced into our markets at the point of British bayonets or the mouth of British cannon?

The solid South is represented in this body by 34 votes. They are all Democrats save one. His seat is soon to be filled by a Democratic successor. Of that 34, 29 have inserted in the official catalogue of the Senate as their title to honorable remembrance, a statement of distinguished service in an attempt to destroy their country and bring its proud flag in dishonor to the dust. They are fond of telling us that all that is changed now. They say that if the country shall ever be in peril again, if the flag shall be menaced anew, whether it be foreign levy or domestic malice, it shall find no readier or braver defenders than among the men who stood in arms against it. I, for one, have never questioned their sincerity. I do not question it now.

I know, as the people of the North know, that there was courage in the stout hearts which maintained that conflict for those four long years. I do not believe that the men of the noble Southern stock, who displayed, even when in the wrong, the courage, the affection for home and State, the aptness for command, the constancy, the capacity for great affection and generous emotion, the readiness to encounter poverty and death and exile, which won the admiration of mankind, when the flag of the country which has forgiven them and restored them and trusted them is insulted and dishonored, will be quite content to take their tone from the Secretary of State or the Senator from Alabama.

There is no occasion for a note of war. Firmness and strength and calmness and dignity and understanding and maintaining our own just rights are much more likely to keep peace than the supplicating and yielding diplomacy of the present Administration.

But the President expresses his peculiar satisfaction with the ninth article.

Nothing in this treaty shall interrupt or affect the free navigation of the Strait of Canso by the fishing vessels of the United States.

He says:

The uninterrupted navigation of the Strait of Canso is expressly and for the first time affirmed.

The treaty does not say that. It says:

Nothing in this treaty shall interrupt or affect the free navigation by fishing vessels.

If there be any implication, it is that other vessels can not go there, if Canada objects. But this is an ancient way from the open sea to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, where our right is as unquestioned as it is to the Gulf of Mexico. Who ever denied it? Sir Charles Tupper utterly repudiates the President's notion. He says that was nothing new.

We provided simply that nothing in this treaty should interrupt the free navigation of the Straits of Canso, as previously enjoyed by fishing vessels, to which we confined it.

This was put in by the Canadians themselves, because they had delimited Chedabucto Bay. I suppose President Cleveland's next move will be to surrender our right to visit two-thirds of the Mediterranean, and then claim great credit that he has saved the right to go through the Straits of Gibraltar.

But the tenth and eleventh articles, which stipulate what United States fishing vessels may or may not do in the ports, bays, and harbors of Canada and Newfoundland are those on which Mr. Cleveland specially plumes himself.

I will append these articles to my remarks. [See Appendix K.] They provide that our fishing vessels when they enter bays or harbors where they can not go to fish, shall conform to harbor regulations common to them and those of Canada;

That they need not report, enter, or clear when they go in for shelter or repairs, except when they stay more than twenty-four hours or communicate with the shore;

They shall not be liable for compulsory pilotage;

Nor, when they are there for either of the four permitted objects, for harbor or like dues;

When they go in under stress of weather they may transship, reload, or sell their fish, subject to duty, when this is necessary as incident to repairs, and may replenish lost or damaged supplies and provisions;

In case of death or sickness shall have needful facilities;

May have license to buy provisions and supplies for their homeward voyage;

And may be accorded on all occasions such facilities for casual or needful provisions and supplies as are ordinarily granted to trading vessels.

Now, unless I am mistaken, every one of these things is and has been for nearly sixty years granted to Canadian fishing vessels in Massachusetts and Maine in recognition of the obligations of common decency, or international courtesy.

This is the first treaty in our history, unless made with some half-savage chief, or in regard to ports closed to general commerce, where there has been an attempt to stipulate for the civilities of life. It is a treaty which, for the first time, recognizes the doctrine that fishermen are to be dealt with as an inferior and less favored class, to whom may be rightfully and properly denied, with our consent, the courtesies and privileges extended to all other commerce.

The treaty of 1818 limited, it is true, the rights of our fishermen in British North America to shelter, repair, wood and water. But that was an exception in their favor. That was an assertion of the doctrine of international law, that fishermen, who provide food for mankind, are the favorites of that law. Some writers, some treaties, I think, declare that they shall not be disturbed in their occupation even in war. Yet now, because, in the day of our weakness, when every American port in British dominions was hermetically sealed against all our ships, the diplomacy of John Quincy Adams and Albert Gallatin gained for our fishermen privileges denied to all others, the present Administration submits to put them in a situation of marked inferiority to all others. I confess I do not think it quite consistent with a proper self-respect to be negotiating with my neighbor just how far he shall and how far he shall not behave to me like a gentleman.

The objection to these articles is not merely the trifling nature of the concessions they gain, but it is their clear implication that we have no ground of rational complaint if the things they do not concede shall hereafter be denied to us. The vessel of commerce, under the modern law of nations, is welcomed and made at home. It is subjected to no other restriction than that of making proof of its character and friendly purpose, a reasonable contribution to port expenses, and compliance with the customs laws of the country where it finds hospitality. It comes and goes at its pleasure. It is a grossly unfriendly act to deny it hospitality, freedom of intercourse, protection, equal access to the courts if any man do it a wrong, fair, prompt, equal, impartial trial if it be charged with doing a wrong to any man.

I refuse my assent to this treaty, if for no other reason, because it declares and implies that the Massachusetts fisherman, with the full consent of his own Government, is hereafter to be exempt from this humane and beneficent principle. Whatever of the decencies of life are for him or for the flag which floats over him do not come as of right and in honor. They are to be doled out and measured out and begged for, and bargained for, and paid for. I have been told that it is an offense among the dwellers in the mountain regions of the South if the host does not invite the guest to take the whisky bottle into his own hand. "He allowanced me, sir," was the description I once heard of that kind of hospitality. Yet, the American mariner is hereafter to get cold water and shelter on such terms only at the will of petty Canadian officials.

Mr. Bayard says if we will look at complaints which we have heard from our fishermen we shall find that none of them can happen again under this treaty. I am amazed that he can say so. I shall speak of that presently. But one of the causes of complaint is that when our fishermen go in for shelter the Canadian officials do not leave it to their discretion to say when the storm is over, and they can safely depart, but order them off into the storm frequently before it is over. The skipper of the fishing vessel is apt to be tolerably weatherwise. He knows the signs off Labrador, or in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, or in the Bay of Fundy quite as well as a lieutenant on any British cruiser or any petty port official. He is in hurry enough to get back to his fishing; but he is not permitted to be the judge, when he gets in for shelter in a storm, how long the safety of his vessel requires him to stay. This is one of the most frequent causes of trouble, and is left wholly without remedy in the treaty.

I have a letter from the Hon. James Gifford, known personally to me as a highly respectable citizen of Provincetown, Mass., and late collector of that port, in which he says:

> The other matter against which there is indignant protest, namely, the ordering American fishing vessels to sea by officers of Dominion cruisers is in derogation of the dignity, rights, and interests of master, crew, owners, and the country they represent. Captains knowing better than any other persons can know the condition of their vessel, sails, spars, and rigging, and as well able to judge of the weather as are others, esteem themselves the best judges of when to go to sea, and regard this interference by foreign officers as a gross indignity to themselves and to the flag under which they sail. In no other country is this outrage perpetrated upon captains of American vessels. This arbitrary interference with the perogatives, responsibilities, and duties of our masters, is not only keenly felt, but their vessels and crews are thereby exposed to serious peril and disaster. The following incident illustrates this fact:
>
> Capt. Samuel T. Hatch, of this place, master of the schooner Stowell Sherman, in August, 1886, while fishing off the north coast of Prince Edward Island, in company with forty-five other American fishermen, was compelled by a northeast blow to seek shelter in the small, narrow harbor of Cascumpeque. This harbor is also barred by a dangerous shoal across its mouth that takes up vessels, especially those of considerable draught, and particularly when the sea is running high. After lying there twenty-four hours, the commander of the cruiser Howlett entered the harbor and ordered the entire fleet off at once. Although the water had somewhat moderated and the wind had changed, the weather continued too rough to fish, and the easterly gale of the previous days caused the sea still to break on the bar at the entrance to the harbor, thus rendering it very hazardous for vessels to attempt the passage out. The commander of the Howlett was respectfully requested to delay the execution of his order, which he peremptorily refused to do.
>
> Captain Graham, of the schooner A. R. Crittenden, of Gloucester, remonstrated protesting that he was in charge of a valuable vessel and cargo and for which he was responsible; that there was great danger of stranding his vessel should he then try to go out, and, if permitted to remain, he would sail as soon as the weather would safely permit. To this the Dominion officer replied that he did not care how valuable his vessel and cargo were, he should leave the harbor immediately. The entire fleet thereupon hove their cables and hoisted sail, preparatory to getting under way. Schooner Fanny Sperling, being the first to make the trial to leave port, was soon stranded.
>
> The commander of the Howlett, alarmed at the result of his order, went to her assistance, called upon the crews of the other American fishermen for aid, and revoked his order to sail. But for the timely aid thus rendered by the combined crews of the fleet the Fanny Sperling would have become a total wreck—a fate that would probably have been shared by many of her companions had not the insolent order of the Dominion officer been canceled. To subject the safety of the vessels and crews of our fishermen to the caprice and insolence of petty Dominion officers is a grievance that ought not longer to be tolerated by or without a treaty. Yet I do not see in the pending treaty any modification even of this domineering assumption of despotic authority over our fishermen. Hence, if there were no other reason, I should be opposed to its ratification.
>
> Very respectfully,
>
> JAMES GIFFORD.

This is not a solitary instance. In the Secretary of State's list of American vessels seized, retained, or warned off from Canadian ports during 1886 there are sixteen vessels in a single year warned off when in port for shelter. Professor Baird's additional list contains a considerable additional number. (See Appendix L.)

I may as well complete what I have to say here of Mr. Secretary Bayard's singular delusion, that if you take the grievances complained of, one by one, you will find the treaty provides against their recurrence. Here is another most irritating annoyance which has escaped his attention, for which he has secured for us no remedy whatever.

> PROVINCETOWN, MASS., May 21, 1888.
>
> DEAR SIR: Representative R. T. DAVIS, having informed me of your intention to address the Senate on the merits of the fisheries treaty, I venture to call your attention to two matters of importance involved, which I have not seen elsewhere discussed.
>
> One is the seizure and fine of vessels for the landing of one or more of their crews prior to reporting the vessel at the custom-house, and the other is the ordering our fishing vessels to sea, regardless of the judgment of the master as to the unsuitableness of the weather or condition of the vessel.
>
> As to the former, provision is made in the treaty, under article 10, for continuance of this unwarrantable and annoying practice. This article provides that "vessels remaining more than twenty-four hours * * * or communicating with the shore," etc., must report at the custom-house, thereby furnishing a basis for perpetuating the seizures and fines complained of.
>
> Its adoption by the Senate would be an indorsement not only of the mulcting our vessels in the sum of $200, but also of imposing a restriction elsewhere unknown in our commercial relations. The mere landing of a vessel's crew, they taking no goods nor effects from the vessel, is not even in Canada made an offense, except when done by American fishermen; this prohibition to land prior to reporting is not applied to Dominion fishing, coasting, nor merchant vessels, as you will perceive by inclosed affidavit of Capt. John Newman, an intelligent and truthful gentleman. His statement can be verified by any number of American masters who frequented Dominion ports prior to 1885. Crews from foreign countries having been certified by local health officers as exempt from contagious diseases are free to land at any port in the United States where they may happen to enter. I am informed that this is the practice at Liverpool, England, and at all other foreign ports.
>
> Schooners Pearl Nelson, of Provincetown, and Everett Steele, of Gloucester, were seized and fined $200 each, under circumstances that exhibit the wantonness and arbitrary nature of the transactions, as may be seen on pages 52 and 55 of Executive Document No. 19, December 8, 1886. The authorities at Ottawa attempted to justify these seizures by citing the provisions of sections 25 and 180, 46 Victoria, chapter 12, quoted in said Executive Document No. 19.
>
> I think, however, you will agree with me that there is not a sentence or word, even by implication, in either of these citations that makes the landing of a vessel's crew prior to reporting a violation of law. The continuance of seizures, therefore, of our vessels on the pretext indicated ought not to be assented to.
>
> Very respectfully,
>
> JAMES GIFFORD.
>
> Personally appeared before me, James Gifford, a notary public, at the port of Provincetown, in the State of Massachusetts, this 12th day of March, 1887, John Newman, of Shediac, in the Province of New Brunswick, Dominion of Canada, who, being by me duly sworn, deposes and says that he has been master of vessels belonging to ports in said Dominion for ten years last past; that during that period he has frequently reported and entered the vessels under his command at numerous customs-houses in such ports, but that in no instance has he been required by a customs officer therein to make report or entry of his vessel and cargo prior to allowing his crew to land; that it has been his invariable practice for his crews to land at any port in the Dominion of Canada on arrival of his vessel, without question of any customs officer as to whether or not he had previously reported to the customs office; that the last port at which he thus permitted his crew to land was at Richibucto, New Brunswick; that during the period named he never heard from a customs officer, or other person in the aforesaid Dominion, he had violated any revenue law or customs regulation by so doing.
>
> JOHN NEWMAN.
>
> [SEAL.] JAMES GIFFORD,
> Notary Public.

The causes of grievance in these cases may be classified, as follows:

1. Indignity suffered by detention and search and by being warned off.
2. The ordering of vessels out of harbors when Canadian officials deem there is no necessity for shelter.
3. Onerous customs laws and the exaction of fees and dues.
4. Refusal to sell necessary provisions and supplies.
5. Unjust local laws regulating seizures and trials.

These causes are not removed by the treaty. On the contrary the following causes for dissatisfaction on the part of the American fishermen, and opportunities for unreasonable conduct on the part of the Canadian authorities would still exist under the pending treaty.

1. Canadians could search all American vessels within the 3-mile limit; could question the masters on oath; could seize their vessels on a mere pretext, and could put them to the proof of the illegality of the seizure.

2. The Canadians could order away vessels that had taken refuge in their ports whenever they cared to do so.

3. The right to unload and transship is incident only to repairs.

4. The only exemption given from burdensome harbor and customs laws is in case of shelter, or repairs, or the purchase of wood or water in a place not a port of entry.

5. Provisions can be purchased only for the homeward voyage.

6. Only by free fish can Americans purchase commercial privileges.

7. All the injustice of the fishing laws remains. The burden of proof is still on the defendant, and he is denied his remedy for illegal seizures.

Mr. Putnam says in his defense of the treaty that—

The words "preparing to fish," in statute 38 George III, have been the cause of many troubles, and are susceptible of a variety of constructions.

But they are now introduced into the treaty itself, which consents that our vessels may be condemned, the penalty not to exceed the forfeiture of the entire ship and its contents, for preparing to fish.

Mr. GRAY. "Preparing to fish therein."

Mr. HOAR. Yes; "preparing to fish therein." I hope the Senator will not interrupt me at this point. What I say is that the words of the Canadian statute and the words of the treaty are identical, and I am talking about Mr. Bayard's claim, that none of the prior difficulties will be heard of again if this treaty takes effect, and Mr. Putnam says that the words "preparing to fish" have been the cause of many troubles, and are susceptible of a variety of constructions.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator will allow me to suggest to him that even though the Canadian statute undertakes to punish by forfeiture of the vessel the preparing to fish by an American vessel in Canadian waters, whether that fishing for which they are preparing is within the inhibited territory or without it, the treaty confines the right of punishing for preparing to fish within, not preparing to fish without.

Mr. HOAR. I do not so understand it.

Mr. GRAY. That is a very important point.

Mr. HOAR. The word "therein" may as well be claimed to qualify the words "preparing to fish" as to qualify the word "fish." But I do not want to dwell on that. That is not my point.

Mr. GRAY. It only shows that there is an important difference.

Mr. HOAR. I am talking about the question whether this treaty will remove the cause of trouble, and I say that your treaty which introduces this language is just as liable to cause the troubles which my honorable friend now suggests arose under the old Canadian statute.

Mr. GRAY. How can it, may I ask the Senator from Massachusetts, when the old difficulty was that an American fishing vessel that went within the 3-mile limit and was charged with preparing to fish within that limit in waters outside of it was within the purview of the Canadian law, while under this treaty it is expressly stipulated that the only offense for which the vessel can be seized is preparing within any Canadian waters to fish therein?

Mr. HOAR. The treaty does not say so. The treaty says the entire vessel and its contents may be condemned if found fishing or preparing to fish therein, and Canada will claim unquestionably, no matter where you are going to fish, if you are preparing to fish you are violating her law.

Mr. GRAY. That is a very flat contradiction. I only refer to the language of the treaty.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to be at all discourteous to the Senator, but I think the Senator misunderstands the treaty.

Mr. GRAY. That may be.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator and I differ, Canada and the United States may well differ, and if Canada and the United States differ, you have not got rid of your trouble.

These words not only bind our Government to permit their citizens to be searched or punished for no offense, but only when the Canadian authorities shall think they are preparing to commit one; but they flatly contradict Mr. Bayard's allegation that the recurrence of past causes of trouble is prevented for the future.

Mr. Putnam goes on to say that there were four subjects of dispute between 1856 and 1884:

1. Great bays.

2. The headland theory.

3. Whether the provincial officers would drive out our vessels from provincial bays and harbors when, in the judgment of the authorities, they did not in fact need shelter or repairs.

4. The vexatious legislation which denies our citizens remedy in the case of transgression and the like.

I have shown that under the treaty there will be more occasion for trouble than before. The third cause of trouble the treaty does not touch. The fourth I shall show in a moment it helps very slightly.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. Let me call the Senators attention to the language of Article XIV of the treaty? I understood the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to say in his seat that there was no such language in the treaty. In stipulating what acts may be punished by the Canadian law, Article XIV says:

And for preparing in such waters—

That is in Canadian waters—

to unlawfully fish therein, penalties shall be fixed by the court, not to exceed those for unlawfully fishing.

That is the language in Article XIV of this treaty, and I submit to the Senator and to the Senate that it does not seem susceptible of any other construction than that which I have given it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Delaware is right as to the words "and for preparing in such waters to unlawfully fish therein;" but my point must remain, however, that the offense of preparation to fish is still left subject to the question of what is preparation to fish.

I do not find in these two articles or anywhere in the treaty any justification for the President's claim that "it is framed in a spirit of liberal equity and reciprocal benefits," or that "it will be satisfactory to those of our fishermen engaged in the deep-sea fisheries," or that it gives the "privilege on all occasions of purchasing such casual and needful provisions and supplies as are ordinarily granted to trading vessels."

On the contrary, this instrument adopts and recognizes to the fullest extent the pretension that the rights of our fishing vessels are measured by the convention of 1818, unaffected by the subsequent changes in the customs of nations or the commercial arrangements of 1830. It declares and admits in substance that because they were favorites of the law of nations then they are under its ban now; because they were better off than all other men then, the only Americans not outlawed in British ports on this continent, they are to be worse off than all mankind now.

There is nothing in this instrument which permits an American fisherman to go into a Canadian port, harbor, or bay for any purpose not set forth in the treaty of 1818.

Provided, however—

Says that treaty—

that the American fishermen shall be admitted to enter such bays or harbors for the purpose of shelter and repairing damages therein, of purchasing wood, and of obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever.

That treaty, reaffirmed in this one by a hundred implications, opens the only narrow and inhospitable doorway by which the American fisherman can get in. If he has gone in for shelter, under stress of weather or other casualty, he can then and then only—

Unload, reload, transship, or sell his fish, subject to customs regulation, if it be necessary as an incident to repairs, and may replenish outfits, provisions, or supplies damaged or lost by disaster.

It is then only that he can get facilities in case of death or sickness, and then only that he can get supplies for his homeward voyage.

They talk about the matter of compulsory pilotage and harbor dues. Massachusetts and Maine do not require Canadian fishing vessels to take a pilot. Their skippers know the coast as well as any pilot. They have no passengers. Their cargo is their own property. Canada can only maintain the requirement of compulsory pilotage for purposes of vexation and not for purposes of public security. She does not require it of her own fishermen. The dollar-and-a-half harbor due is unimportant except as a vexation. Sir Charles Tupper very frankly says in his speech as to this concession:

The fact is that although there appears to be a considerable concession in that, it does not amount to much.

He had just said substantially the same thing as to pilotage:

That the play was not worth the candle.

He says also in regard to the concessions of Article XI, on which the President lays such stress, that the transshipment concession was a wise and judicious concession to make. He asks what would be thought of Canada if she denied it. He says that—

In making it we were only acting from the dictates of humanity and from a due regard to the credit and reputation of our country all over the world.

He also clearly implies that he deems the President's notion that the privileges of deep-sea fishermen are extended by the last clause of Article XI altogether wrong, and that it applies only to vessels coming in under stress of weather and for the homeward voyage. This is also affirmed by the representatives of the government in the debates in the Canadian senate. Indeed Article XV shows that until fish is made free in the United States her vessels can enter only for the purposes specified in the treaty of 1818.

As the delimitation articles absolutely surrender what was decided in our favor in the cases of the Washington and the Argus, so Article X and Article XIV surrender what was conceded in the Fortune Bay matter to the spirited diplomacy of Mr. Evarts. Article X says our fishermen "shall conform to harbor regulations common to them and the fishing vessels of Canada." Article XIV says: "For any other violation of the laws of Great Britain, Canada, or Newfoundland, relating to the right of fishery in such bays, creeks, or harbors, penalties shall be fixed by the court."

They tried once before to subject us to their Sunday laws and their laws fixing a close season and their laws regulating the size of nets. This was under the treaty of 1871. Mr. Evarts remonstrated. Lord Salisbury asserted their right to compel us to submit to their laws, and said the law officers of the Crown had no doubt about it. Mr. Evarts told them he should treat it as an abrogation of the treaty, and President Hayes sent a message to Congress advising the restoration of the duty on fish. Great Britain instantly yielded and paid $80,000 damages. Now you would throw away all this without the slightest equivalent. Hereafter, under your brilliant diplomacy, Great Britain and Canada and Newfoundland are to make the laws under which we are to exercise our treaty rights.

Mr. GRAY. With the Senator's indulgence, I want to call his attention to a fact that appears in the correspondence, which I can not lay my hands upon now, in regard to the Fortune Bay outrage, so-called, that Great Britain did not yield the principle for which she contended, but consented to pay an indemnity, because, whatever might be her right to impose those laws upon American fishermen, she conceded that they could not be enforced by a mob.

Mr. HOAR. That was a distinction without a difference. Great Britain agreed for a consideration that we might go into her bays to catch fish. We went there to catch fish, and we violated, as she said, her Sunday law, the law about the close season, and the law about the size of the nets. Mr. Evarts remonstrated, and Lord Salisbury replied that he had consulted the law officers of the Crown, and he and they were of opinion that England had granted us the right to fish subject to the right which her dependencies had—the right to make their laws to govern and regulate its exercise.

Thereupon Mr. Evarts spoke with some indignation of the doctrine that they could take away by legislation what they had given us by treaty. Then Lord Salisbury said that while that might not be true of future legislation, at least of the past legislation which existed at the time of the treaty it must be true. Thereupon Mr. Evarts observed that if they had sold us a valuable fishery right without notifying us that it was under mortgage or other lien or incumbrance, it was an unusual transaction. Lord Salisbury replied in substance that he did not desire to hear anything more about the subject. Then Mr. Evarts recommended President Hayes to send a message to Congress inviting the revocation of the treaty and treating the English contention as a rejection of the treaty. Then Sir Edward Thornton came to Mr. Evarts in a day after the thing was done and wanted to know why he did not give notice of this step. Mr. Evarts said he did not consider himself bound to do it, and Sir Edward Thornton then inquired of Mr. Evarts if he was willing further to treat it as an open question, England having said she would not. Mr. Evarts said certainly. Thereupon England came in and paid $80,000 damages, and we have not heard of that English pretension from that day to this.

Mr. GRAY. Upon the ground I have stated.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator thinks that is the ground to be got out of it, all right, that is the story.

I will not dwell upon Article XII, which, literally construed, gives to Canada and Newfoundland the same ownership in common in the waters of our whole Atlantic coast which the valor of our fathers acquired, and which were acknowledged in 1783 and in 1818 in the waters of Canada and Newfoundland so far as they are reserved or secured by this treaty. The British argument is much stronger, in my judgment, for this construction of Article XII than for the claims to which Mr. Bayard and his associates have so tamely submitted.

Nor will I dwell on the thirteenth article, regarded by our fishermen as so obnoxious and degrading. It requires every fishing vessel of the United States, whether she means to go near Canada or not, to wear a number conspicuously exhibited on each bow, a requirement not applied to England's own fishermen, strongly suggestive of tickets of leave and prison regulations.

The fourteenth article is equally remarkable for what it declares Canada shall not do hereafter, and for what it impliedly consents Canada may hereafter continue to do. Nobody, I suppose, expects that until we grant free fish, and free trade to Canadian products, there will be any change in the spirit, temper, policy, or purpose of Canada. What we have to complain of is that Canada has so framed her customs laws and her fishing laws as to subject our vessels to a series of seizures, confiscations, penalties, interruptions, and outrages. This malice she has deliberately enacted into law. Any of twenty officials, some of them of the pettiest order, may seize an American ship and cargo. The burden is put upon the owner of the vessel to show that the seizure was illegal. If the local judge shall certify there was probable cause for the seizure, we get no costs, and only 4 cents damages. This is the existing Canadian law, untouched, unrepealed, unaffected by this treaty.

Extracts from the Canadian statute respecting fishing by foreign vessels are given in the appendix to these remarks (M).

It will be seen that by these laws any petty customs or naval officer or justice of the peace may seize an American ship and cargo, although that ship may be in the exercise of its rights and outside the 3-mile line; may take it to any port in Canada; may put it on trial wherever he please to detain it; may compel it to prove its innocence; shall be exempted from paying either damages or costs, if the court certify there was probable cause for seizure; may convict it or establish probable cause on the evidence of the Canadian sailors, who may receive three-fourths of the sum for which the ship and cargo are sold, if condemned; and that the suit by the owner can only be brought one month after notice left at the last and usual place of abode of the captor, which may be in Great Britain; and can not be brought at all more than three months after the seizure; so that there are only two months in all within which such suit may be brought, even if the owner die, or be sick, or insane, or be at a distance.

You have full knowledge of these things. You have complained of them. You have declared that they were put by Canada on her statute-book to harass your fishermen and drive them to madness. You have denounced them as an outrage. And now, when you make your treaty, you put in it a few of the commonplaces of common right, and leave these outrages to continue. Worse than this. You declare that this treaty contains all that you can reasonably ask. You not only leave this Canadian legislation on her statute-book, but the President and his Secretary indorse it, and estop us, so far as they can, from ever complaining of it again. You have contented yourself with so much. As to the rest, you must forever after hold your peace. This is what you call conciliation.

> Conciliate? It jest means be kicked,
> No metter how they phrase an' tone it;
> It means thet we're to set down licked,
> Thet we're poor shotes an' glad to own it.

They have put into Article XIV a few stipulations for those common decencies of a fair trial, to which all mankind are entitled as of common right. But they accompany even these with the provision that the penalty for unlawfully fishing, however innocent or accidental, however the skipper may have mistaken his position, or however doubtful or conflicting the evidence, may extend to the forfeiture of the vessel and everything on board. The penalty for preparing to fish may be fixed by the court and shall be no greater than for fishing. The judgment of forfeiture (no lesser judgment) shall be reviewed by the governor-general. But if he approve the finding, it is quite doubtful if there be power vested in him to lessen the penalty. The unrepealed Canadian statute still makes the forfeiture for unlawful fishing absolute in all cases. But the second clause of Article XIV provides—

That the proceedings shall be summary and inexpensive as practicable;

The trial shall be at the place of detention (not the place of seizure or near it);

Security for costs shall not be required except when bail is offered. (They will have in their possession the whole ship and cargo);

Reasonable bail shall be accepted;

There shall be proper appeals;

These shall be available to the defense only. (That is, the defendant shall not be twice put in jeopardy).

I should like to ask Senators on the other side if there be one of these provisions, which to deny to a foreign sailor in her ports, without a treaty, in this close of the nineteenth century, would not make Canada a stench in the nostrils of mankind.

There is not one of them that has been denied in a United States court since the country was settled. If the least of these privileges were denied to a British ship-owner in the courts of Boston we should hear from the British foreign office; or rather, we should not wait to hear from the British foreign office; we should remedy the grievance under the prompt and eager stimulant of our own public opinion.

It is quite significant that the British plenipotentiaries did not ask us to put into the treaty any stipulation that we would give them the like justice in our courts. Nobody ever dreamed that it was possible for the United States to refuse to a foreigner in our ports as inexpensive a trial as practicable, a trial in the vicinage, exemption from security for costs when we hold his property, reasonable bail, and proper appeals. Every Senator on the other side of the Chamber would deem it a national insult to ask us for a promise in a treaty to observe the common decencies of judicial proceedings.

Mr. President, as I was saying just now, if we were to treat ten British ships in Boston as they have treated a hundred in Canada, we should hear an expression of anger from Downing street to which that which followed the seizure of Mason and Slidell would be tame. John Bull would not have much to say about postponement to some future time of a demand for redress. How long do you think he would submit to the law which gave 4 cents costs and 20 cents fine as the remedy for the illegal seizure of a vessel and cargo and put the burden of proof on the party whose vessel was taken from him to show that the seizure was illegal?

Hear what Chief-Justice Cockburn in his work on Nationality lays down as the law of nations, recognized in Great Britain:

> In respect of personal rights, the alien, so long as he remains on British soil, is in the same position as the Queen's subjects. The courts of this country are open to him as against foreigners in respect of wrongs for causes of action arising within the jurisdiction, and in respect of breach of contract for causes of action arising, either in this country or abroad, as against the British subjects, in respect of any cause of action wheresoever arising.—Cockburn on Nationality, page 149.

This matter was well summed up almost thirty years ago by a very wise young writer on international law, one Hosea Biglow. I wish he had a single spark of his ancient spirit now:

Ef I turned mad dogs loose, John,
On your front parlor stairs,
Would it jest meet your views, John,
To wait an' sue their heirs?
Ole Uncle S., sez he, "I guess,
I on'y guess," sez he,
"Thet ef Vattel on his toes fell
'Twould kind of rile J. B.,
As well as you and me."

Who made the law thet hurts, John,
Heads I win, ditto tails?
"J. B." was on his shirts, John,
Unless my memory fails.
Ole Uncle S., says he, "I guess,
(I am good at that)," sez he,
"That sauce for goose ain't jest the juice
For ganders with J. B.,
No more then you and me."

When your rights was our wrongs, John,
You didn't stop for fuss,
Britanny's trident prongs, John,
Was good 'nough law for us.
Ole Uncle S., sez he, "I guess,
Though phizic 's good," sez he,
"It doesn't foller that he can swaller
Prescriptions signed J. B.
Put up by you and me."

We own the ocean, tu, John;
You mustn't take it hard
Ef we can't think with you, John,
It 's jest your own back yard.
Ole Uncle S., sez he, "I guess,
Ef that's his claim," sez he,
"The fencin' stuff 'll cost enough
To bust up friend J. B.,
As well as you and me."

I have not time to go into the detail of the Canadian customs laws. They will be found in Senate Document No. 113, pages 348, 401.

The fifteenth article is to take effect when we remove the duty from fish-oil, whale-oil, seal-oil, and fish of all kinds. We are to have in exchange for that concession licenses to enter the Atlantic ports, bays, and harbors of Canada and Newfoundland—

To buy provisions, bait, ice, seines, lines, supplies, and outfits.

To transship catch.

To ship crews.

Mr. President, it is difficult to overstate the absurdity of this provision, even if it were not a humiliation to be called on to make a conditional bargain at all, under the circumstances.

We are to remit the duties on those articles to all British subjects. It is no matter where they are caught. It is enough if British subjects bring them in, and they are the produce of fisheries carried on by the fishermen of Canada, Newfoundland, and Labrador. Our duties on fish brought from Canada and Newfoundland alone in the year ending June 30, 1886, were $297,028.05. All our duties on fish for the same year were $502,287.54; in 1887 they were $611,937.69. This change in our law will of course extend to all mankind, for British subjects will import all our fish that we do not take ourselves, if it applies only to them.

Now, this $600,000 worth of duties we give up for what Canada in the three years after the duty of 1854 was abrogated sold to us, together with the right to fish everywhere in her waters for 50 cents a ton the first year, $1 the second, and $2 the third. The last year our fishermen would not take the licenses. Our fishery tonnage in 1886 was 70,437 tons. At $1 a ton she would have sold to us all these rights and full fishing rights also for $70,000. We now give up the $600,000 merely for the privilege to buy bait and supplies.

But further. The treaty of 1871 gave us the full right to take fish everywhere and to land and dry fish everywhere in Quebec, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, the Magdalen Islands, and all adjacent islands. In return we gave them the right to admit duty free fish-oil and fish (not whale-oil) being the produce of the Dominion of Canada and Prince Edward Island.

Now they are to have the right to bring in the produce of fisheries carried on by them, wheresoever they may be. We get in exchange only the right to buy supplies and bait, transship cargoes, and ship crews.

It is true that we paid under the treaty of 1871 a large sum of money for the privilege. My friend from Maine has spoken of the selection of our commissioner. Mr. Kellogg had been a man of great ability, who had filled conspicuous public stations. It is said, and it may be true, that his mental vigor had become impaired by advanced age, or some other disorder, without the knowledge of those who appointed or recommended him. But there is nothing in the history of the transaction which tends to show that anything the American commissioner did, or failed to do, had or could have had any effect on the result. The mistake was in consenting to the selection of Mr. Delfosse as umpire. He was the representative of Belgium, a power which England erected and which depended on England for its continued existence. His sovereign was the son of the brother of Queen Victoria's mother and of Prince Albert's father, and was himself brother of Carlotta, wife of Maximilian, whom we had lately compelled France to abandon to his fate.

Mr. DAWES. Will my colleague allow me a word?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. DAWES. There was no mistake in consenting to the selection of Mr. Delfosse, for this Government did not consent to it. The provision of the treaty of 1871 was that the two powers should have so many days, mentioned in the treaty, to agree upon an umpire. The British Government neglected, if they did not refuse, to meet the Government of the United States to make that selection. Upon frequent call on the part of the Government of the United States upon the representative of the British Government to fulfill that provision of the treaty of 1871, they utterly neglected it until the time for agreeing upon the umpire had passed, and under the stipulations of the treaty it was left to a foreign power to select Mr. Delfosse.

The statement which I have made here I had from the highest authority. No higher authority at the time existed than that which made the statement, and it was made at the time of the selection of Mr. Kellogg. It was made in my own hearing and in the hearing of my then colleague.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Delfosse's own fortune in public life depended on his sovereign's favor. We had already notified Great Britain that the Belgian minister would probably deem himself disqualified by reason of the peculiar political connection of his government with that of Great Britain. Earl de Grey, chairman of the British commissioners in negotiating the treaty, had notified us, when suggesting the reference of the fishery dispute to some government, "I do not name Belgium, because Great Britain has treaty arrangements with them that might be supposed to incapacitate them."

Our mistake was not in the nomination of Mr. Kellogg. It was in going on with the arbitration when Great Britain refused to propose any other name but that of Delfosse.

But after the money had been paid we endeavored to induce Great Britain to give up the bargain and keep the money. Canada absolutely refused. Sir Charles Tupper said that "after that treaty had been in operation for ten years there was not a single public man in Canada but was ready to do everything possible to maintain and to continue that very treaty." Now, what wretched diplomacy is this, when Canada had shown her eagerness to give us the whole freedom of her sea-fishing waters, clear to the land, and the right to use her shores for drying fish, etc., as provided in the treaty of 1871, when she could receive in exchange nothing but our market for fish and fish-oil (not whale-oil nor seal-oil), being the products of Canada and Prince Edward Island, to make a bargain by which giving them the right to bring in free the produce of fisheries carried on by them anywhere in the world, and add to it whale-oil and seal-oil, and getting nothing in return but these rights to buy bait and supplies, to transship cargoes and crews.

It is true Sir Charles Tupper says it is impossible to overestimate the advantages of enjoying the fisheries that are contained in the jurisdictional waters of Canada. But rich as are those advantages, they are almost worthless without the American market. The slightest reference to the history of these interests, the slightest recollection of the conduct of Canada in the past, the slightest zeal and care for the interest of these American citizens, would have got for us much better terms if we were to adopt the policy of the fifteenth article. As I have already said, Mr. Evarts brought Great Britain instantly to recede from the position colonial government, foreign office, prime minister, cabinet, law officers of the Crown had taken, by proposing to abrogate the treaty.

But, Mr. President, I should fail to do justice to my own conviction if I did not say that I hold it ignominious to undertake to make terms for a change in our tariff laws in the face of the behavior of Canada to our fishermen, which the Administration knows was adopted to coerce us to that very action.

Mr. President, the whole of this treaty recognizes what we strenuously deny—the fitness of maintaining a discrimination against fishermen. It turns their ancient privilege and exceptional honor into a badge of disgrace. It constantly affirms a dominion on the part of Canada over the fishing-grounds which from the beginning have been our joint property. It establishes throughout a relation of control. License, license, license is the stipulation at every step. What we claim as a right they compel us to accept and hold only under their license. Instead of a full, frank, free recognition of general commercial rights, everything we are to have is a privilege, constantly to be the subject of difference and quarrel until the demands of Canada are fully yielded.

You will scarcely find a claim of the American opponents of this treaty that is not supported by the speeches of its friends in the Canadian Parliament. Sir Charles Tupper begins by appealing to that body not to press him unduly to show the great advantage of the treaty to Canada until the Senate has acted. The particulars in which he has specially outwitted Mr. Bayard he keeps for the present in his own breast. But he admits in express terms that the inshore fishery rights of Canada are of great value; that our markets are of greater value still; that Great Britain had in practice abandoned the claim to exclude us from great bays and headlands; that he was not compelled by Great Britain to yield any claim of Canada, but was wholly responsible for the treaty himself; that the provision in regard to the Straits of Canso is nothing new; that the subjecting fishing vessels which did not stay twenty-four hours to report was not enforced against Canadian vessels there or in the United States; that it ought to be abandoned in the interests of good neighborhood; that in the matter of compulsory pilotage the play was not worth the candle; that Canadian fishermen were already exempt from it; that in allowing us to transship cargoes they were only doing what was required by due regard for the credit and reputation of their own country all over the world; that the license to buy casual and needful supplies was a thing demanded in the interests of good neighborhood; that he has left the penalty for unlawfully fishing where he found it.

He further adds that—

The President and the Democratic party from end to end of the United States declare this treaty a fair settlement. * * * We occupy the vantage ground of having these men, out of their own mouths, declare that nothing has been wanting on the part of the Government of Her Majesty to place this question on a fair and equitable basis.

He says they have accomplished this without injuring Canadian interests to any extent whatever; and further, that this admission is worth all their trouble, even if the treaty be rejected.

My friend from Delaware did not like it the other day when I spoke of his arguing the British side of the question; but I do not see how he can help admitting that the British side of the question is stated much more strongly on the other side of this Chamber than it is by Sir Charles Tupper.

In addition to all this, Mr. Davies admits what Sir Charles does not, that the Canadian fisheries laws have been administered with the purpose of vexing, harassing, and irritating fishermen of the United States, and they have accomplished their purpose.

Sir Charles Tupper goes on to declare his confidence that the great Democratic party will remain in the majority, and what he expects from that party, whose prospect of a continued hold of power he contemplates with so much satisfaction, and his especial delight in the Mills bill.

He makes one statement to which I hope and believe even some gentlemen on the other side will not listen without indignation. That there may be no mistake, I will quote it in his own words:

Mr. Bayard told us, the American plenipotentiaries told us, that there was but one way of obtaining what we wished. "You want greater freedom of commercial intercourse. You want relaxation in our tariff arrangements with respect to natural products, in which you are so rich and abundant. There is but one way to obtain it. Let us by common concession be able to meet on common ground and remove this irritating cause of difficulty out of the way, and you will find that the policy of this Government, the policy of the President and of the House of Representatives, the policy of the great Democratic party of the United States, will at once take an onward march in the direction you propose, and will accomplish steadily that which you would desire in the only way by which it can ever be attained." These were not empty words. Those were the sober utterances of distinguished statesmen, who pointed to the avowed policy of the Government of the United States as the best evidence of the sincerity of what they said. What has happened already? Already we have action by the financial exponent of the Administration; I mean Mr. MILLS. The ink is scarcely dry upon this treaty before he, as the representative of the Government and chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, brings forward a measure to do what? Why, to make free articles that Canada sends into the United States, and upon which last year $1,900,000 of duty was paid.—Canadian Commons Debates, April 10, 1888, pages 728, 729.

Mr. President, this is not my charge. This is the British envoy reporting to his principal. These words were not spoken in a corner. They were spoken in the Canadian Parliament. They have long since met the eye of Mr. Bayard and of President Cleveland. Sir Charles Tupper doubtless sent them to the President and the Secretary of State, as he did to the members of the Senate. They have gone uncontradicted to this moment. The Secretary has declined to make known even to us, who share the treaty-making power with the President, the preliminary discussions which led to the treaty, on the ground of the confidence due to the British negotiator, a proceeding at which the British negotiator expresses his surprise. Here we have him, according to Sir Charles Tupper, not as the Senator from Delaware said, "leaving party division at the shore's line," telling England, not what is the policy of the American people without distinction of party, not what is the policy of the President and Senate, who are the treaty-making power under our Constitution, but what is the policy of the President and House of Representatives, and what is the policy of the great Democratic party.

Tell us that we are endeavoring to make a party issue on this treaty, when we adhere to the policy that both Houses unanimously and without distinction of party declared a little more than twelve months ago! For the first time, with but a single exception, has a Secretary made such an utterance. For the first time in American history has an administration sought to curry favor with Great Britain on party grounds. For the first time has an American diplomatist told her what she had to expect from a party. It is the author of that utterance who deprecates "the suggestions of partisanship."

I said there was one exception. I said that such a statement was unknown in our diplomatic intercourse with but a single exception. That exception falls far short of the present example. Mr. Van Buren, when Secretary of State, had given the following instructions to Mr. McLane, the minister to Great Britain, for this Government in the negotiation for the opening of British colonial courts to our commerce:

The opportunities which you have derived from a participation in our public councils, as well as other sources of information, will enable you to speak with confidence (as far as you may deem it proper and useful so to do) of the respective parts taken by those to whom the administration of this Government is now committed, in relation to the course heretofore pursued upon the subject of colonial trade. Their views upon that point have been submitted to the people of the United States; and the counsels by which your conduct is now directed are the result of the judgment expressed by the only earthly tribunal to which the late administration was amenable for its acts. It should be sufficient that the claims set up by them, and which cause the interruption of the trade in question, have been exclusively abandoned by those who first asserted them, and are not revived by their successors. If Great Britain deems it adverse to her interests to allow us to participate in the trade with her colonies, and finds nothing in the extension of it to others to induce her to apply the same rule to us, she will, we hope, be sensible of the propriety of placing her refusal upon those grounds. To set up the acts of the late administration as the cause of forfeiture of privileges which would otherwise be extended to the people of the United States would, under existing circumstances, be unjust in itself, and could not fail to excite their deepest sensibility. * * * You can not press this view of the subject too earnestly upon the consideration of the British minister. It has bearings and relations that reach beyond the immediate question under consideration.

All Mr. Van Buren had done was to call attention to the fact that the former attitude of this country had been taken under another administration; that the part taken by the present administration had been different, and that their views had been submitted to the people; that the old claims had been abandoned and not revived. He suggested no distinction between the opinions of the House of Representatives and the Senate. He made no promise as to the future conduct of a party as to domestic questions in which Great Britain had an interest. His utterances were in his instructions to our own minister, not in diplomatic intercourse with an envoy of Great Britain.

For this his nomination as minister to Great Britain was rejected. Mr. Calhoun, then Vice-President, gave his casting vote for the rejection.

Hear what Delaware had then to say on this matter. Mr. Clayton said:

"He was directed to speak with confidence of the respective parts taken by those to whom the administration of this Government is now committed," to lay before Europe the state of parties in this country, and to degrade and disgrace all the former administrations of our Government, during which this right had been insisted upon, by entirely and unconditionally withdrawing all our claims for justice on that country. He was told, in substance, to press upon England the state of our domestic and party differences at home, and he was admonished that this subject had bearings and relations which reached beyond the immediate question under consideration. * * * Let us say to the British Government this day by our vote that we never consented to the disgrace which has befallen us, and that we prefer to recall the minister who has dishonored us, to all the pretended benefits of this miserable negotiation. On this ground alone I will this day condemn this appointment so far as my vote will go to affect it.

Mr. Webster said:

I think those instructions derogatory in a high degree to the character and honor of the country. I think they show a manifest disposition, in the writer of them, to establish a distinction between his country and his party; to place that party above the country; to make interest at a foreign port for that party, rather than for the country; to persuade the English ministry and the English monarch that they had an interest in maintaining in the United States the ascendency of the party to which the writer belongs. Thinking thus of the purpose and object of these instructions, I can not be of opinion that their author was a proper representative of the United States at that court. Therefore it is that I propose to vote against his nomination.

It is the first time, I believe, in modern diplomacy, it is certainly the first time in our history, in which a minister to a foreign court has sought to make favor for one party at home against the other, or has stooped from being the representative of the whole country to being the representative of a party. And as this is the first instance in our history of any such transaction, so I intend to do all in my power to make it the last. For one, I set my mark of disapprobation upon it; I contribute my voice and my vote to make it a negative example, to be shunned and avoided by all future ministers of the United States.

If, in a deliberate and formal letter of instructions, admonitions and directions are given to a minister and repeated once and again to urge these mere party considerations on the foreign government, to what extent is it probable the writer himself will be disposed towards them in its one thousand opportunities of informal intercourse with the agents of that government?

Mr. GRAY. Do I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to say that Mr. Bayard in a deliberate and formal communication to the British Government introduced any allusion to parties in this country?

Mr. HOAR. I undertake to say what Sir Charles Tupper said in a speech which has been published.

Mr. GRAY. I understood the Senator just now to say that in a deliberate and formal communication Mr. Bayard had done so.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator misunderstood me. I was reading from Mr. Webster.

Mr. GRAY. I am glad to hear the Senator say so.

Mr. HOAR. I am going to repeat what I said. The Senator can not have understood me.

Sir Charles Tupper says that Mr. Bayard told him in substance (I am not now giving the words, which, however, will be printed as they were uttered by Sir Charles Tupper) that if he would make this treaty, the President and the House of Representatives and the great Democratic party would do what Great Britain wanted, and what Canada wanted, in regard to our customs laws in that particular. Then I read from Mr. Webster. That was in one of the informal opportunities of official intercourse which our Secretary of State had with Sir Charles Tupper.

Mr. Webster said that when Mr. Van Buren, as Secretary of State, in a formal letter to our minister in England, had permitted such a thing to be said, it was not only bad in itself, but that we might expect in the thousand and one opportunities of informal intercourse he would go on to do exactly what Sir Charles Tupper says Mr. Bayard has done.

Mr. GRAY. I misunderstood the Senator from Massachusetts, but I wish to say that there is not a particle of evidence which the Senator has produced here showing that Mr. Bayard ever used the language which he has just quoted.

Mr. HOAR. Sir Charles Tupper said it, and it is uncontradicted. Does the Senator believe that the Canadian minister of state, in reporting to that government what took place on that occasion, made a misstatement, or if he did that it would have gone two or three months, fully known to all mankind, without contradiction? I have the debates here, sent me by Sir Charles Tupper himself.

Mr. GRAY. It will be printed, and we shall look at it.

Mr. HOAR. It is all printed, and you can look at it.

But the Senator from Alabama threatens us with foreign war. He says we object to all negotiations and that "we propose to open the door to a new plan of redress which it may be impossible to close until war has filled our land with slaughter." Why, Mr. President, if it were not for my respect for the Senator from Alabama, I should say that this is supremely silly. The whole matter is simple enough. The people of the United States will not be misled. What we propose to say to Great Britain is just this: We do not agree that because we made our fishermen an especially privileged class in 1818, when you would admit no other vessel at all, we are now bound to except them from the advantage of the decencies of hospitable intercourse as they exist in 1888. But if you think otherwise, so be it. You may write the law yourself; but the rule, whatever it is, must apply alike to both parties. If our fishing vessels with their cargoes can only enter your ports for the four purposes mentioned in the convention of 1818, yours shall only enter ours for the same purposes.

Let the same rule apply to both. If the American fishing vessel in distress, or not in distress, can not enter Canadian ports to buy, then the Canadian fishing vessel shall not come into our ports to sell. If we can not unload our cargo of fish there to send it anywhere in the United States to be there sold, you shall not unload your cargo of fish here to send it anywhere in the United States to be there sold. If our ship can not stay twenty-four hours in Halifax your ship shall not stay twenty-four hours in Boston. What is sauce for the cod-fish is sauce for the mackerel. Make your own rule. Write your own law. Take your own medicine. Put up your own prescription. Sir Charles Tupper says Great Britain did not renounce any rights for her fishing vessels in 1818. That is true. But it is also true that she did not get any rights for her fishing vessels in 1818. Her rights depend on our statute of 1830 and President Jackson's proclamation. Our rights beyond the treaty of 1818 stand on the British order in council.

If that order in council can be recalled at her pleasure, our statute and proclamation can be repealed at ours. If her order in council of 1830 did not mean fishing vessels, or can be now so construed or modified as to not mean them, our statute and proclamation did not mean fishing vessels, or may be so construed or modified as not to mean them. The Senator from Alabama misconceives the spirit of the American people if he expects them to submit to other terms than an equal right and an equal privilege for both sides. He undervalues the intelligence of the American people if he thinks he can frighten them with the idea that Great Britain will fight or will engage in a warfare of commercial restrictions in such a quarrel.

But the Senator says Congress, in the statute of March 3, 1887, put upon the President a discretion it shrank from exercising itself. If it meant retaliation it should have said retaliation. Instead of that, it put upon the President the grave responsibility of doing an act of commercial unfriendliness of his own motion. It is no such thing. Whenever he is satisfied that our fishing vessels are deprived of their rights, or are unjustly vexed or harassed in Canadian waters, the statute declares "it shall be the duty of the President, in his discretion, to deny the vessels of the British Dominion or their fish entrance," etc., with proper exceptions of vessels in distress. He is to make proclamation.

The President may, in his discretion, apply such proclamation to any part or to all of the foregoing named subjects, and may revoke, qualify, limit, and renew such proclamation from time to time as he may deem necessary to the full and just execution of the privileges of this act.

The discretion vested in him is only as to the extent he shall go. That was clearly indispensable. If he had excluded fish only, and had no power to go further, Canada might in return exclude some other products of ours which she could get elsewhere as conveniently. We had to arm him with discretion to this extent; and also that he should not be compelled to go further than the exigencies required. But it is expressly made his duty to proceed to exercise his discretion under the act, and to take whatever of the steps therein pointed out are necessary to accomplish its purpose.

No, Mr. President, the attempt to becloud this question will not avail. We had a very simple complaint. It was the use of Canadian fishing laws and customs laws to harass our fishermen in British ports and waters, to compel us to let in their fish to our market free of duty. We gave the President a very simple remedy. It was to apply the same rule to the fishermen of both countries. Congress unanimously thought that was all that was needed, and the President signed the bill. But it seems to have occurred to the Secretary of State that his favorite Democratic doctrine of free trade could get some advantage from this business. He invited the British commissioners to come over here, and led them to expect they were to discuss the matter of adjusting commercial relations by treaty. That was found impracticable.

Sir Charles Tupper has declared the astonishment he felt when he found the representatives of the United States unwilling to take up the subject. He appeals to his own people to decide whether Mr. Bayard's letters and conversation had not fairly led him to that expectation. The Secretary then puts off all the complaints of his American fellow-citizens to a remote future. He permits Great Britain to revive an old exploded pretension, settled by a just interpretation of the treaty of 1818, settled by the history of that treaty, settled by solemn adjudication, settled by long practice, settled by Great Britain's refusal to maintain the absurd pretension of Canada. He leaves the obnoxious Canadian statutes unrepealed, the obnoxious Canadian practices to be resumed at her pleasure. He gets a promise from Canada to observe a few of the common decencies of behavior and of trial, which she confesses she could not refuse with any regard to her own credit, and a promise to let us buy supplies and transship cargoes and crews whenever we admit her to our magnificent market without the fishing rights which she has so gladly and eagerly given for it heretofore.

He admits that Canada has done everything we can reasonably ask, although our vessels are still to be seized by petty officials, the burden still to be put upon our fishermen of proving their innocence, and neither damages or cost are to be recovered for the detention of vessels, the seizure of cargoes, and the breaking up of voyages. He assures Great Britain that the objects and purposes of the great Democratic party, of President and House, are in harmony with hers, and establishes the claim of that party to her future sympathy and support. He induces his Democratic followers to reverse their own policy and to eat the bravest words they ever spoke. This is the cup President Cleveland submits to us. Mr. Bayard expressed in his Boston letter the desire that this matter might be discussed publicly in the Senate. The President in his message advised that we should make public "the exact substance of the proposed adjustment in place of the exaggerated and imaginary statements which would otherwise reach the people." I do not think either then expected to be taken at his word.

No, Mr. President, this treaty is not the road to honor, to safety, or to peace. It is not the road to the respect of Great Britain, or even of Canada. Where it removes one cause of discord it will produce ten. Quiet, firmness, adherence to treaties, submission to the judgments of duly constituted international tribunals, the same rule for both sides, will give us security. We can never have commercial reciprocity till reciprocity of justice and courtesy are first established.

The Americans are not a quarrelsome people. When we remember whose children we are, we have always shown a surprising readiness to yield our just rights for the sake of peace. We have little left to us even of that rash humor which our mother gave us. But we can never live in peace with Canada if we allow her to think that the methods she has taken for the last three years are the ways to gain concessions from us. We can never live in peace with England if we permit her, without prompt and instant protest, to try once more the experiments on our forbearance which preceded the Revolution, which preceded the war of 1812, which accompanied the war of the rebellion. The rejection of this treaty is in the interest of a true, thorough, and lasting peace. We have every motive of kindred, of friendship, and of commercial interest to live in amity with the mother country, and with the young power which is rising on our northern boundary, whose frontier for more than fifty degrees of longitude marches side by side with our own.

We look with no contempt or dislike upon Canada. We are glad to see the spirit of her young nationality stirring in her veins. We behold with admiration the growth of her magnificent railroad system, and the courage and enterprise with which her statesmen are adding these new links to the chain with which England, like a mighty snake, is winding her coils about the globe. Sir Charles Tupper and Sir John Macdonald may well give lessons to both sides of this Chamber. She is not afraid to create or to control the great railroads that are essential to her commercial prosperity. She does not send away her famous engineers, when they place their genius at her command, humbled and baffled from her legislative chamber, to die in sorrow and disappointment. She is not afraid to build a ship-railway or even to create a navy. But when she asks us to abandon our fishermen to her tender mercies, to build up a naval school for her by giving her fishermen our market, she asks what it is neither fitting for us to yield nor for her to receive.

The American, who reads with pride the civic and military history of his country, can feel the same satisfaction when he comes to the chapter which tells of her diplomacy. In the day of our infancy Franklin, and Adams, and Jay encountered the trained diplomatists of England and the continent, not merely as equals but as masters. The direct, open, sincere, straightforward, untiring energy of brave and honest old John Adams, "whose armor was his honest thought, and simple truth his utmost skill," alone made possible the treaty with Holland. The consummate sagacity and personal influence of Franklin gave us the French alliance. The courage of Adams, the wisdom of Franklin, the austere virtue and steadfast firmness of Jay united in 1783 to save for us, alike from the power of our great antagonist and the wiles of jealous and suspicious allies, everything that was essential to greatness and glory by land and by sea. Later, the foresight and fearlessness of Jefferson gained for us the great Louisiana empire. Monroe and his minister of state won for us the Floridas.

At the close of the war of 1812 John Quincy Adams, and Gallatin, and Clay, and the elder Bayard met the representatives of a power that had one-half of the world for her allies and the other half at her feet. England had just overthrown Napoleon on land, and swept the navies of Europe from the face of the sea. Yet we came from the contest of war, and of diplomacy, with every right and liberty unimpaired. our honor without a stain, with added glory to our flag, and the pretension for which England had gone to war with us never to be heard of again.

We had another war within our own recent memory. Our foes were of our own household. Our ancient enemy and our ancient ally sat at their gates, gazing across the Atlantic, to see if they could discover any pretext for throwing their weight into the scale of rebellion. England gave us provocation enough. You remember the sublime patience with which Abraham Lincoln waited until the hour of our strength came. It was the fortune of another Adams to address to Earl Russell one quiet sentence, perhaps the most eloquent that ever came from an American pen—

It is superfluous to observe to your lordship that this is war.

Foreign office and law officer reversed their decisions in an hour and the rams were stopped. You know how the French Emperor, victor of Sebastopol and Solferino, in the height of his military strength, hurried out of Mexico at a word uttered by Mr. Seward. You remember the time when General Grant gave notice that any American citizen who had a claim against Great Britain should bring the evidence to him. That haughty power sent over her commissioners to apologize for her wrong, and was held as a defendant to make compensation. You remember how the diplomacy of the same great administration induced nearly every first-class power in Europe to renounce the old doctrine of perpetual allegiance and let our adopted citizens alone.

Those were days when the American citizen, native and adopted, held up his head in the pride of his citizenship. Those were days when our ten thousand million of wealth was becoming fifty thousand; better still, when slaves were changing into freemen, and freemen into citizens. Those were days when the flag, beautiful as a flower to those who loved it, terrible as a meteor to those who hated it, floated everywhere in peaceful seas, and was honored everywhere in friendly ports. No petty British officer hauled it down from an American masthead. No Canadian minister of justice laughed in the face of an injured American citizen when Grant was in the White House.

I confess that, much meditating on these things, I take little satisfaction when I think of Grover Cleveland. I do not like the policy which everywhere robs American citizenship of its glory. I do not like the methods of fraud and crime which have destroyed popular elections in so many Democratic States. I would have the box where the American freeman casts his ballot sacred as a sacramental vessel. I do not like this conspiracy between the old slave-holder and the English manufacturer, to strike down the wages of the American workman and the comfort of the American workman's home. I do not like your refusal to maintain the American Navy and to fortify and defend the American coast. And I like no better the present treaty. It leaves the American sailor to be bullied and insulted without redress, and abandons the American right to the fisheries, older than the nation itself which the valor of our fathers won for us and the wisdom of our fathers preserved for us.

APPENDIX—A.

Table showing number of persons engaged in the fisheries from Massachusetts and their place of birth.

[Massachusetts State Census of 1885. Taken from population schedules.]

Place of birth of foreign-born.	Foreign-born males.			Total.
	Aliens.	Naturalized voters.	Not voters.*
Ireland	138	186	179	503
Canada (English)	2	1	5	8
Canada (French)	12	4	2	18
England	41	46	1	88
Scotland	16	12	2	30
Nova Scotia	950	210	149	1,309
Prince Edward Island	118	35	7	160
New Brunswick	19	12		31
Germany	44	14	2	60
Sweden	221	53	18	292
Portugal†	167	52	28	247
Western Islands†	409	51	41	501
Other countries	403	165	28	596
Total foreign-born	2,540	841	462	3,843
Total native-born				4,130
Total males				7,973
Total females				7
Total persons				7,980

*Reliable polls only or those having no political condition (not including aliens).

†"Portugal" includes dependencies other than "Western Islands."

B.

Letter from Professor J. W. Collins, Assistant United States Fish Commissioner, transmitting statistics in regard to the fisheries of Massachusetts.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 24, 1888.

SIR: In compliance with the instructions contained in your letter of this date (inclosing a letter from Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR) I have the honor to submit the inclosed table showing by customs districts and by totals the number and nationality of men on vessels employed in the cod, mackerel, halibut, herring, and other food-fish fisheries, from the State of Massachusetts, during the year 1886. This table has been compiled from data obtained under the direction of Mr. R. Edward Earll, my predecessor in charge of the division of fisheries. The facts have been chiefly collected by experts of the Fish Commission, but to some extent have been supplied by the masters and owners of the fishing vessels.

There are not available in this office any statistics of the number of men employed in the boat fisheries of 1886, but these have been approximated from the returns obtained by the census of 1880, since which time there has probably been comparatively little change.

The number of men employed in the whale fishery has been estimated on the basis of the average crews of vessels in 1880. At that time the vessels averaged a fraction over twenty-four men each, and as there were ninety-six vessels employed in the whale fisheries from Massachusetts in 1886, it would give us an approximate number of men engaged in that fishery, the last-mentioned year, of 2,304. It has also been necessary to make an approximation of the number of people employed in the preparation of fishery products in Massachusetts, and I believe it safe to assume that these figures are not very much different from the actual facts at the present time.

These statistics for the vessel fisheries have been gathered with much care, as previously stated, by experts thoroughly familiar with the fisheries, and they are, therefore, believed to be exceptionally accurate and valuable.

I hope the table may meet the requirements of Senator HOAR.

Yours, very respectfully,

J. W. COLLINS,
Assistant United States Fish Commissioner,
In Charge of Division Fisheries.

Hon. MARSHALL MCDONALD,
United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries,
Washington, D. C.

Comparative statement of the statistics of the fisheries of Massachusetts, compiled from the census returns published in the reports of the "Fisheries Industries of the United States" by the United States Fish Commission in 1880, and the "Fisheries of Massachusetts, census of 1885," prepared under the direction of Col. Carroll D. Wright.

1880. UNITED STATES FISH COMMISSION REPORT.			1885. THE FISHERIES OF MASSACHUSETTS.
Capital invested:
Vessels and boats		$6,681,980
Nets and traps		369,870
		7,051,850	Capital invested:
Real estate, buildings, machinery, and cash		7,282,600	Working capital, apparatus, salt, and ice		$8,660,581
Products:			Products:
Food-fish		$4,992.541	Food-fish		$4,566,679
Shell-fish		649,013	Shell-fish		359,257
Whale fishery		2,080,337	Whale fishery		1,270,543
Fertilizer, etc		120,659	Fish products		230,139
Miscellaneous		299,200	Miscellaneous		36,074
Total		8,141,750	Total		6,462,692
Vessels and tonnage:
Food fishery	799	42,118.00
Menhaden fishery	35	1,269.70
Oyster fishery	6	557.54	Vessels and tonnage:
Whale fishery	161	36,786.51	Schooners	736	47,767.28
Seal fishery	1	84.65	Sloops	55	352.22
Squid fishery	5	264.00	Steamers	3	159.03
			Whale fishery	72	19,932.96
Total	1,007	81,080.49	Total	866	68,211.49
Small boats:
In vessel fishery		3,822
In shore fishery		2,927	Small boats:
Total		6,749	Dories, seine-boats, shore-boats, etc		5,308
Persons employed:
Vessel fishermen		8,646
Boat fishermen		4,528	Persons employed:
Whale fishermen		3,991	Resident fishermen		11,743
			Non-resident fishermen		2,933
Total		17,165	Shore hands		759
Shore hands		2,952
Total		20,117	Total		15,435

There has been considerable decrease in the number of vessels and men employed in the whale fishery from New England since 1880, chiefly due to the fact that the vessels have been transferred from New England whaling ports to San Francisco. In 1886 there were only ninety-six vessels employed in the whale fishery from Massachusetts against one hundred and sixty-one in 1880, and the decrease in the number of men would be approximately 1,800. This number subtracted from the 17,165 employed in the fisheries of Massachusetts, according to the census of 1880, would leave 15,765, as against 14,676 reported by the census of Massachusetts in 1885. It seems, therefore, that these statistical statements corroborate each other, and that there was a probable decrease of about one thousand employed in the State between 1880 and 1885.

The hands employed ashore in preparing boneless fish, fish-glue, etc., all of which were included in the report of 1880, are not taken into account in the State census, where they come under the head of "Manufactures."

Table showing by customs districts the numbers and nationality of men on vessels employed in the cod, mackerel, halibut, herring, and other food-fish fisheries from Massachusetts during the year 1886.

Customs districts.	Total number of men on vessels.	Number of American subjects.	Number of British provincials.	Number of other foreigners.	Percentage of American subjects.	Percentage of British provincials.	Percentage of other foreigners.
Newburyport	53	49	4	.....	92	8	.....
Gloucester	5,193	3,365	1,102	726	65	21	14
Salem and Beverly	137	111	26	.....	81	19	.....
Marblehead	255	251	2	2	98	1	1
Boston	756	567	106	83	75	14	11
Plymouth	54	51	3	.....	95	5	.....
Barnstable	2,413	940	604	869	39	25	36
Nantucket	14	14	.....	.....	100	.....	.....
Edgartown	25	25	.....	.....	100	.....	.....
New Bedford	89	64	.....	25	72	.....	28
Total	8,989	5,437	1,847	1,705	60.4	20.5	19.1

NOTE.—In addition to the above there were twenty-five American subjects and one foreigner employed on vessels engaged exclusively in the lobster and menhaden fisheries.

These figures do not include men fishing in boats and vessels under 5 tons burden, nor men fishing on vessels employed in the whale fishery. Approximate figures for these fisheries show 4,528 men in the boat fishery and 2,304 men in the whale fishery.

No account is here taken of curers, packers, fitters, and factory hands, the approximate number of whom is 2,952.

C.

Table showing number of fishermen and oystermen in New England and their place of birth.

[From the United States Census of 1880.]

Number of fishermen and oystermen in Massachusetts	6,103
Number of fishermen and oystermen in Maine	4,244
Number of fishermen and oystermen in New Hampshire	226
Total in Maine, New Hampshire, and Massachusetts	10,573
Number of fishermen and oystermen in Rhode Island	879
Number of fishermen and oystermen in Connecticut	1,260
Total in New England (Vermont excluded)	12,712

DETAIL SHOWING NATIVITY.

States.	United States.	Ireland.	Germany.	Great Britain.	Sweden and Norway.	Canada.	Miscellaneous.
Maine	4,017	12	8	24	1	162	20
Massachusetts	3,529	492	35	129	237	1,271	410
New Hampshire	207	.....	.....	1	4	9	5
Total	7,753	504	43	154	242	1,442	435
Rhode Island	823	18	5	18	3	12	12
Connecticut	1,198	15	8	12	5	2	20
Total	9,774	537	56	184	250	1,456	467

D.

Extract from the report of Professor Spencer F. Baird, Commissioner of Fisheries, for 1884.

After giving a list of his authorities (Census Report for 1880) Professor Baird continues as follows:

"The general results of the investigation, from the statistician's standpoint, may be briefly summarized as follows:

"In 1880 the number of persons employed in the fishery industries of the United States was 131,426, of whom 101,684 were fishermen and the remainder were shoremen. The fishing fleet consisted of 6,605 vessels (with a tonnage of 208,297.82) and 44,804 boats, and the total amount of capital invested was $37,955,349, distributed as follows: Vessels, $9,357,282; boats, $2,465,393; minor apparatus and outfits, $8,145,261; other capital, including shore property, $17,987,413.

"The value of the fisheries of the sea, the great rivers, and the great lakes was placed at $43,046,053, and that of those in minor inland waters at $1,500,000, in all, $44,546,053. These values were estimated upon the basis of the prices of the products received by the producers, and if average wholesale prices had been considered the value would have been much greater. In 1832 the yield of the fisheries was much greater than in 1880, and prices, both at first hand and at wholesale, were higher, so that a fair estimate at wholesale market rates would place their value at the present time rather above than below $100,000,000.

"The fisheries of the New England States are the most important. They engage 37,043 men, 2,066 vessels, 14,787 boats, and yield products to the value of $14,270,363. In this district the principal fishing points in order of importance are: Gloucester, New Bedford, the center of the whale fishery, Eastport, Boston, Provincetown, and Portland.

"Next to New England in importance are the South Atlantic States, employing 52,418 men, 3,014 vessels (the majority of which are small, and engaged in shore and bay fisheries), 13,331 boats, and returning products to the value of $9,602,737.

"Next are the Middle States, employing in the coast fisheries 14,981 men, 1,210 vessels, 8,293 boats, with products to the amount of $8,676,579.

"Next are the Pacific States and Territories with 16,803 men, 56 vessels, 5,547 boats, and products to the amount of $7,434,750. The fisheries of the Great Lakes employ 5,050 men, 62 vessels, and 1,594 boats, with products to the amount of $1,784,050. The Gulf States employ 5,131 men, 197 vessels, and 1,252 boats, yielding products to the value of $545,584."

E.

[Resolutions of the city of Gloucester.]

CITY OF GLOUCESTER.

IN COMMON COUNCIL, February 28, 1888.

Resolved, That the city council of Gloucester earnestly protest against the adoption of the so-called Fishery Treaty, which is now before the United States Senate for ratification, believing that its adoption will be a great injury to the fishing interests of the country.

Resolved, That the Senators and Members of Congress representing the State of Massachusetts be requested to use all their influence to prevent the adoption of this treaty, to the end that the fishing industry of the country may not be sacrificed.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to United States Senators HOAR and DAWES, also to each Massachusetts member of the House of Representatives, and that his honor, Mayor Robinson, be requested to transmit the same at once.

Adopted. Sent up for concurrence.

A. F. STICKNEY, Clerk.

IN BOARD OF ALDERMEN, March 8, 1888.

Adopted in concurrence.

JOHN J. SOMES, Clerk.

Approved March 12, 1888.

DAVID I. ROBINSON, Mayor.

A true copy, attest:

JOHN J. SOMES, City Clerk.

F.

Preamble and resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Gloucester Master Mariners' Association, at Gloucester, Mass., Friday evening, April 13, 1888; Henry B. Thomas, president; William M. Gaffney, secretary.

Whereas in every treaty between Great Britain and the United States since 1783, the rights of American fishermen have been sacrificed: and

Whereas the present treaty now under consideration by the Senate of the United States is a still further surrender of our rights upon the high seas, in the proposed act of delimitation by which the headland theory of Great Britain is established, and jurisdiction is assumed over waters which are the property of all nations; and

Whereas by the terms of this treaty the common offices of humanity, acknowledged, practiced, and obeyed by all civilized nations, have been claimed as concessions and made a matter of bargain and sale; and

Whereas the ambiguous language of this treaty makes many of its provisions uncertain, resting their interpretations solely upon Canadian local law; and

Whereas no indemnity for past wrongs and outrages are provided, and no recognition of the rights conferred on American vessels in Canadian ports, by mutual legislation, is made, but, on the contrary, every such right is denied and the barbarous acts of Canada is justified and allowed; and

Whereas both treaty and protocol are but the initiatory steps towards the complete surrender of the markets of the United States, by which the fisheries of Canada will be developed and enlarged and those of the United States depleted and destroyed: Therefore,

Resolved, That this association, composed of the masters of American fishing-vessels, who know by contact and experience the full significance of Canadian diplomacy, cordially unite with their brethren of other associations in the following declarations:

That in common with the other producing industries of the country, we ask of the General Government neither subsidy nor bounty, but simply equal protection.

That we have neither asked nor sought the intervention of any commission, mixed or otherwise, to define our just rights upon the high seas or in foreign ports, but have appealed to our own Government to maintain the integrity and just interpretation of treaties and legislation, under which our business rights as American citizens are affected.

That we neither use nor desire to use Canadian waters for practical fishing, but simply ask that our commercial rights therein shall be defined by our own Government, and when so defined, maintained.

That the American ocean fisheries are not dependent upon any favor or privilege, to be granted by Canada, but on the contrary the natural resources of our own country and the high seas afford everything necessary for the prosecution of our business.

That we will cheerfully conform to whatever construction our own Government shall place upon existing treaties and legislation, and desire no new treaty that shall dictate our national legislation or destroy the small remnant of protection we now have.

Resolved, That we appeal to the honorable Senate of the United States, which has by a most eminent commission thoroughly investigated the subject of our fishery relations with Canada, and whose report has passed through the legislation of both Houses of Congress, been unanimously approved, to sustain the honor and dignity of the Government of the United States, by maintaining the integrity of their action, and the rights of our citizens, by refusing to approve the treaty, or consent to so complete a surrender of our rights as a nation.

Resolved, That as the entire fishing interest of the United States has not been allowed any representation whatever by the negotiators of this treaty, while the commission of the Senate visited every location and obtained sworn testimony from the operative fishermen of the country, the reason for the difference in results is clearly apparent.

Resolved, That we respectfully ask for prompt and immediate action upon this treaty, by the honorable Senate, in order that our national honor may be vindicated, and the rights of our citizens assured, in every foreign port and upon the high seas.

Capt. Henry B. Thomas, schooner M. H. Thomas; Capt. Joseph Smith, schooner Lizzie M. Center; Capt. George A. Johnson, schooner Augusta H. Johnson; Capt. John Chisholm, schooner Harry G. French; Capt. Nathaniel P. Smith, schooner Margie Smith; Capt. John P. Aiken, schooner Bartie Pierce; Capt. Thomas H. White, schooner Rapid Transit; Capt. William Mailman, schooner Alabama; Capt. Joseph E. Graham, schooner Senator Morgan; Capt. John McInnis, schooner Willie M. Stevens; Capt. John A. McKinnon, schooner Mayflower; Capt. Geo. H. Martin, schooner Ethel Maud; Capt. Pius McDonald, schooner Edith S. Walen; Capt. John Geary, schooner Della F. Tarr; Capt. William B. McDonald, schooner Blue Jacket; Capt. Alexander McEachern, schooner Mascot; Capt. Sylvanus McPhee, schooner Canopus; Capt. Joseph I. Tupper, schooner Jennie Seaverns; Capt. Solomon A. Rowe, schooner Wm. H. Foye; Capt. Geo. W. Dixon, schooner Henry W. Longfellow; Capt. Manuel Silva, schooner J. W. Collins; Capt. William F. Harris, schooner Col. J. H. French; Capt. Edward Morris, schooner Abbie F. Morris; Capt. Colin Chisholm, schooner John W. Campbell; Capt. John Collins, schooner Annie M. Jordan; Capt. Angus McKay, schooner New England; Capt. H. M. Seelye, schooner Argonaut; Capt. John S. McQuin, schooner Druid; Capt. Alexander McNeil, schooner M. A. Baston; Capt. John McKinnon, schooner Starry Flag; Capt. Sidney Smith, schooner Fred. P. Frye; Capt. N. A. McKinney, schooner Shiloh; Capt. Robert Smith, schooner Volunteer; Capt. Joseph L. Swim, schooner Edith Rowe; Capt. Levi N. McLean, schooner Herald of the Morning; Capt. R. I. Cunningham, schooner Enola C.; Capt. Charles Lee, schooner Orient; Capt. James McShara, schooner Alert; Capt. Jesse Lewis, schooner Lizzie W. Hannum; Capt. James Fiers, schooner Zenobia; Capt. Colin McIntosh, schooner Nellie G. Thurston; Capt. James Cromwell, schooner Hattie Evelyn; Capt. James Simpson, schooner Ralph E. Eaton; Capt. James L. Anderson, schooner Wm. H. Jordan; Capt. Joseph M. Bearse, schooner Star of the East; Capt. Robert Porper, schooner Gladstone; Capt. William P. Gray, schooner Leona; Capt. Charles Martin, schooner John S. McQuin; Capt. Charles J. Lawson, schooner Herman Babson; Capt. John Marshall, schooner Landseer; Capt. Sewall W. Smith, schooner Rattler; Capt. B. A. Williams, schooner G. P. Whitman; Capt. Russell D. Terry, schooner Ada R. Terry; Capt M. B. Murray, schooner M. M. Murray; Capt. Frank Veator, schooner Alice; Capt. Daniel McIntyre, schooner Gertie Evelyn; Capt. Harry Gardner, schooner Samuel V. Colby; Capt. William Goold, shooner F. W. Homans; Capt. Jed. Warren, schooner Alice C. Jordan; Capt. William Dempsey, schooner Mattie F. Dyer; Capt. Owen A. Whitten, schooner Carrie W. Babson; Capt. William Herrick, schooner George F. Keene; Capt. John W. McFarland, schooner Emma W. Brown; Capt. William H. Greenleaf, schooner Porter S. Roberts; Capt. John Dowdell, schooner Matthew Keany; Capt. F. B. Vautier, schooner Thetis; Capt. John Campbell, schooner Grace L. Fears; Capt. William H. Collins, schooner Lucy E. Friend; Capt. John A. Griffin, schooner Lizzie Griffin; Capt. William N. Wells, schooner Bessie N. Wells; Capt. Thomas Bohlin, schooner John G. Whittier, Capt. Thomas Jones, schooner Alice S. Hawkes; Capt. William T. Lee, schooner Sarah E. Lee; Capt. Henry F. Brown, schooner Edith Conley; Capt. Amos N. Rackliffe, schooner Frank A. Rackliffe; Capt. Stephen B. Cole, schooner Lelia Norwood; Capt. Nathaniel Greenleaf, schooner Lizeie J. Greenleaf; Capt. O. B. Fitch, schooner Davy Crockett; Capt. Harlan Eaton, schooner Electa A. Eaton; Capt. Wilson Cahoon, schooner Flora Dilloway; Capt. Frank H. Hall, schooner Fannie Bell; Capt. Wm. H. Thomas, schooner Mystic; Capt. Edward Stapleton, schooner Champion; Capt. Daniel McKinnon, schooner Minnesota; Capt. John A. McDonald, schooner W. W. Rice; Capt. Thomas Lewis, schooner Winged Arrow; Capt. Peter McAuley, schooner A. E. Whyland; Capt. Thomas Goodwin, schooner Lottie P. Morton; Capt. Oliver Collins, schooner Robert J. Edwards; Capt. Pius McPhee, schooner David A. Story; Capt. D. S. Nickerson, schooner William H. Wellington; Capt. Hanson Joyce, steamer Novelty; Capt. Edward W. Hall, schooner Martha A. Bradley; Capt. D. E. Collins, schooner Grampus; Capt. William Grant, schooner David Low; Capt. Seth S. Nickerson, schooner Sarah P. Ayer; Capt. John E. Sigsworth, schooner Anne and Mary; Capt. Maurice Whalen, schooner Fannie W. Freeman; Capt. Frank Wright, schooner Magnolia; Capt. Otto Johnson, schooner Loring B. Haskell: Capt. Osborne Maguire; Capt. Albert Heurdickson, schooner Brunhilde; Capt. T. F. Hodgdon, schooner Ralph F. Hodgdon; Capt. James A. McKinnon, schooner Ada M. Hall; Capt. Charles Nute, schooner Fernwood; Capt. John Dago, schooner Concord; Capt. Jerome B. McDonald, scooner Monitor; Capt. Angus Campbell, schooner Augusta E. Herrick; Capt. Andrew McKenzie, schooner Senator Saulsbury; Capt. George M. McClain, schooner Henry Dennis; Capt. Charles Harty, schooner I. J. Merritt, jr.; Capt. Loring B. Nauss, schooner Belle A. Nauss; Capt. Frank Carroll, schooner Warren J. Crosby; Capt. Augustus Hall, schooner Anna B. Cannon; Capt. Alexander Trench, schooner Marion Grimes; Capt. Frank Foster, schooner Frank Foster; Capt. Edward Trevoy, schooner Edward Trevoy; Capt. Joseph Ryan, schooner A. D. Story; Capt. William Maguire, schooner John W. Bray; Capt. Thomas Parris, schooner Governor Butler; Capt. John A. Vibert, schooner Spencer F. Baird; Capt. Cornelius Thorburne, schooner John S. Presson; Capt. Wm. Gibbs, schooner Oceanus; Capt. John Cousens, schooner Barracouta; Capt. L. G. Hodgdon, schooner William H. Cross; Capt. Charles Benson, schooner Eliza R.; Capt. Alex. Haines, schooner Julia Whalen; Capt. Peter Roberts, schooner Vesta; Capt. John Q. Getchell, schooner Vinnie M. Getchell; Capt. John Tavener, schooner Mattie Winship; Capt. Zenas Brown, schooner Morrill Boy; Capt. Thomas Thompson, schooner Edward Everett; Capt. John Coney, schooner Lizzie; Capt. A. J. Burnham, schooner Robin Hood; Capt. Edward Cosgrove, schooner Alert; Capt. Willard G. Pool, schooner George F. Edmunds; Capt. William Kiff, schooner Fleetwing; Capt. B. F. Payson, schooner S. F. Maker; Capt. Charles Burchart, schooner William M. Gaffney; Capt. Edward Groves, schooner Edward P. Boynton; Capt. Colin Chisholm, schooner J. W. Campbell; Capt. Charles Smith, schooner Finance; Capt. John McDonald, schooner Farmer R. Walker; Capt. John McDonnell, schooner Scud.

G.

Resolutions adopted by the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, at the monthly meeting, March 14, 1888.

THE FISHERY TREATY.

Whereas Canada, under a forced interpretation of the treaty of 1818, (which was superceded by those of 1830 and 1871,) has sought by unjust seizures of American fishing vessels to compel the United States to admit salt fish free of duty; and

Whereas the United States Commissioners appointed to negotiate a just and equitable treaty for the settlement of the fisheries question have reported a form of treaty which is unjust and inequitable, inasmuch as it denies to Americans (unless purchased by making fish free of duty) the same rights which we concede to the Canadians, namely, the purchase of supplies, the shipment of merchandise in bond from one country to another, the shelter in port for a longer period than twenty-four hours, and fishing in waters more than 3 miles from shore if within imaginary lines drawn from headland to headland; and

Whereas the justice of all these claims of American fishermen was conceded by our Department of State, as is shown by its correspondence, but they were waived by the American commissioners, apparently with an entire disregard of the rights and interests of American fishermen; and

Whereas Canadian fishermen enjoy advantages in bounties, special exemption from taxation, and lower prices for labor and materials which are not enjoyed by American fishermen, and which would speedily crush our American fishing industry if the protecting barrier of the duty was removed, an illustration of which is seen in the effect of the treaty of Washington, under which the Canadian fishing fleet increased in twelve years from four hundred vessels to eleven hundred, while ours decreased in the same time 30 per cent.:

Resolved, That as long as any industry is thus protected in the United States the duty on fish should be continued, and when removed the persons engaged in this hazardous industry should be granted a bounty which will in some degree encourage them to continue same.

Resolved, That the importance of the sea fisheries to our country can not be measured by the capital employed, for they constitute a nursery for our commercial marine and our Navy, the usefulness of which has been demonstrated in every emergency when we have been called upon to maintain the rights and honor of our flag on the high seas.

Resolved, That while we have every desire to cultivate friendly relations with our neighbors and to encourage the present Administration in efforts to that end, we would be false to our duties as American citizens and business men if we failed to protest against the ratification of a treaty so unjust and inequitable and which sacrifices nearly every right for which our Government has been contending.

Resolved, That this question should not be considered from an administration or anti-administration, a free-trade or protection point of view, but from a national and business standpoint, and we feel confident that if this treaty is thus considered it will not receive the approval of the Senate, the co-ordinate branch of the treaty-making power.

Resolved, That if the Canadian Government should persist in unjust treatment of American fishing vessels, it can only have the effect to interfere with and delay the closer commercial relations between the United States and Canada which so many persons in both countries would be glad to see consummated, and if continued will inevitably result in a greater or less degree of non-intercourse for which our last Congress unanimously conferred authority upon the President.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted to the President and Senate and to such other persons as the executive committee may direct.

H.

[Resolution of Gloucester Board of Trade.]

GLOUCESTER, MASS., April 26, 1888.

To Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR:

At a meeting of the Gloucester Board of Trade held this morning, Joseph O. Proctor, president, presiding, the following resolution was presented by Charles H. Pew, esq., and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the proposed Chamberlain treaty is detrimental to the interests of the United States as a people, and injurious to its honor and dignity as a nation, and ought not to be ratified.

CYRUS STORY, Secretary.

I.

[Resolutions of the American Fishery Union.]

Whereas the present national interest in the matter of the American fisheries has oftentimes been subjected to unfavorable criticism by reason of the facts being misunderstood, the American Fishery Union desires to place upon record their position in the following resolution:

Resolved, That, in common with other producing industries of the country, we ask of the General Government neither subsidy nor bounty, but simply equal protection.

Resolved, That we have neither asked nor sought the intervention of any commission, mixed or otherwise, to define our just rights on the high seas or in foreign ports, but have appealed to our own Government to maintain the integrity and just interpretation of treaties and legislation under which our business and rights as American citizens are affected.

Resolved, That we neither use nor desire to use Canadian waters for practical fishing, but simply ask that our commercial rights therein shall be defined by our own Government, and, when so defined, maintained.

Resolved, That the American ocean fisheries are not dependent upon any favor or privilege granted by Canada, but, on the contrary, the natural resources of our own country and the high seas afford everything necessary for the prosecution of our business.

Resolved, That we cheerfully conform to whatever construction our own Government shall place upon existing treaties and legislation, and desire no new treaty that shall dictate our national legislation or destroy the small remnant of protection we now have.

Resolved, That the freedom of our ports and markets afforded Canadian vessels is in marked contrast to that afforded American vessels in Canadian ports when sailing under papers issued by the United States Government, conferring all rights and privileges upon them, and that a refusal on the part of the Canadian Government to recognize such papers bearing the seal of the United States is an act of non-intercourse, and justifies retaliation.

J.

[Notice of Louis Henry Davies, extracted from Appleton's Biographical Dictionary.]

Davies, Louis Henry, Canadian statesman, born in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, May 4, 1845. He was educated at the Central Academy and Prince of Wales College, Charlottetown, and was admitted to the bar in 1866. He was solicitor-general of his native province in 1869, and again in 1872–'73; was the leader of the opposition in the Legislative Assembly until September, 1876, when he became premier and attorney-general, which portfolios he retained till 1879, when his administration resigned. He was elected to the local Legislature in 1872, and re-elected from time to time till 1879, when he was defeated. In 1882 he was elected to represent Queens County, Prince Edward Island, in the Dominion Parliament, and still (1886) represents that constituency. He was counsel for the tenantry of Prince Edward Island before the land commission, which sat in 1875–'76, when the estates of all proprietors in the island were expropriated by the province. He was also one of the counsel representing Great Britain before the international fishery commission which sat at Halifax, Nova Scotia, in 1877, under articles of the Washington treaty. He is a Liberal.

K.

[Articles X and XI of the proposed fisheries treaty.]

ARTICLE X.

United States fishing vessels entering the bays or harbors referred to in Article I of this treaty, shall conform to harbor regulations common to them and to fishing vessels of Canada or of Newfoundland.

They need not report, enter, or clear, when putting into such bays or harbors for shelter or repairing damages, nor when putting into the same, outside the limits of established ports of entry, for the purpose of purchasing wood or of obtaining water; except that any such vessel remaining more than twenty-four hours, exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays, within any such port, or communicating with the shore therein, may be required to report, enter, or clear; and no vessel shall be excused hereby from giving due information to boarding officers.

They shall not be liable in any such bays or harbors for compulsory pilotage; nor, when therein for the purpose of shelter, of repairing damages, of purchasing wood, or of obtaining water, shall they be liable for harbor dues, tonnage dues, buoy dues, light dues, or other similar dues; but this enumeration shall not permit other charges inconsistent with the enjoyment of the liberties reserved or secured by the convention of October 20, 1818.

ARTICLE XI.

United States fishing vessels entering the ports, bays, and harbors of the eastern and northeastern coasts of Canada or of the coasts of Newfoundland under stress of weather or other casualty may unload, reload, transship, or sell, subject to customs laws and regulations, all fish on board, when such unloading, transshipment, or sale is made necessary as incidental to repairs, and may replenish outfits, provisions, and supplies damaged or lost by disaster; and in case of death or sickness shall be allowed all needful facilities, including the shipping of crews.

Licenses to purchase in established ports of entry of the aforesaid coasts of Canada or Newfoundland, for the homeward voyage, such provisions and supplies as are ordinarily sold to trading vessels shall be granted to United States fishing vessels in such ports, promptly upon application and without charge; and such vessels, having obtained licenses in the manner aforesaid, shall also be accorded upon all occasions such facilities for the purchase of casual or needful provisions and supplies as are ordinarily granted to the trading vessels; but such provisions or supplies shall not be obtained by barter nor purchased for resale or traffic.

L.

A list of American vessels seized, detained, or warned off from the Canadian ports during the last year.

1. Sarah B. Putnam.—Beverly, Mass.; Charles Randolph, master. Driven from harbor of Pubnico in storm March 22, 1886.

2. Joseph Story.—Gloucester, Mass. Detained by customs officers at Baddeck, Nova Scotia, in April, 1886, for alleged violations of the customs laws. Released after twenty-four hours' detention.

3. Seth Sookbridge.—Gloucester, Mass.; Antone Olson, master. Warned off from St. Andrews, New Brunswick, about April 30, 1886.

4. Annie M. Jordan.—Gloucester, Mass.; Alexander Haine, master. Warned off at St. Andrews, New Brunswick, about May 4, 1886.

5. David G. Adams.—Gloucester, Mass.; Alden Kinney, master. Seized at Digby, Nova Scotia, May 7, 1885, for alleged violation of the treaty of 1818, act of 59 George III, and act of 1883. Two suits brought in vice-admiralty court at Halifax for penalties. Protest filed May 12. Suits pending still, and vessel not yet released apparently.

6. Susie Cooper (Hooper?).—Gloucester?, Mass. Boarded and searched, and crew rudely treated, by Canadian officials in Canso Bay, Nova Scotia, May, 1886.

7. Ella M. Doughty.—Portland, Me.; Warren A. Doughty, master. Seized at St. Ann's, Cape Breton, May 17, 1886, for alleged violation of customs laws. Suit was instituted in vice-admiralty court at Halifax, Nova Scotia, but was subsequently abandoned, and vessel released June 29, 1886.

8. Jennie and Julia.—Eastport, Me.; W. H. Travis, master. Warned off at Digby, Nova Scotia, by customs officers, May 18, 1886.

9. Lucy Ann.—Gloucester, Mass.; Joseph H. Smith, master. Warned off at Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, May 29, 1886.

10. Matthew Keany.—Gloucester, Mass. Detained at Souris, Prince Edward Island, one day for alleged violation of customs laws, about May 31, 1886.

11. James A. Garfield.—Gloucester, Mass. Threatened, about June 1, 1885, with seizure for having purchased bait in a Canadian harbor.

12. Martha W. Bradly.—Gloucester, Mass.; J. F. Ventier, master. Warned off at Canso, Nova Scotia, between June 1 and 8, 1886.

13. Eliza Boynton.—Gloucester, Mass.; George E. Martin, master. Warned off at Canso, Nova Scotia, between June 1 and 9, 1886. Then afterwards detained in manner not reported, and released October 25, 1886.

14. Masco'.—Gloucester, Mass.; Alexander McEachern, master. Warned off at Port Amherst, Magdalen Islands, June 10, 1886.

15. Thomas F. Bayard.—Gloucester, Mass.; James McDonald, master. Warned off at Bonne Bay, Newfoundland, June 12, 1886.

16. James G. Craig.—Portland, Me.; Webber, master. Crew refused privilege of landing for necessaries at Brooklyn, Nova Scotia, June 15 or 16, 1886.

17. City Point.—Portland, Me.; Keene, master. Detained at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, July 2, 1886, for alleged violation of customs laws. Penalty of $400 demanded. Money deposited, under protest, July 12, and in addition $120 costs deposited July 14. Fine and costs refunded July 21, and vessel released August 26. Harbor dues exacted August 26, notwithstanding vessel had been refused all the privileges of entry.

18. C. P. Harrington.—Portland, Me.; Frellick, master. Detained at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, July 3, 1886, for alleged violation of customs laws; fined $400 July 5; fine deposited, under protest, July 12; $120 costs deposited July 14; refunded July 21, and vessel released.

19. Hereward.—Gloucester, Mass.; McDonald, master. Detained two days at Canso, Nova Scotia, about July 3, 1886, for shipping seamen contrary to port laws.

20. G. W. Cushing.—Portland, Me.; Jewett, master. Detained July (by another report, June) 3, 1886, at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, for alleged violation of the customs laws; fined $400; money deposited with collector at Halifax about July 12 or 14, and $120 for costs deposited 14th; costs refunded July 21, and vessel released.

21. Golden Hind.—Gloucester, Mass.; Ruben Cameron, master. Warned off at Bay of Chaleurs, Nova Scotia, on or about July 23, 1886.

22. Novelty.—Portland, Me.; H. A. Joyce, master. Warned off at Pictou, Nova Scotia, June 29, 1886, where vessel had entered for coal and water; also refused entrance at Amherst, Nova Scotia, July 24.

23. N. J. Miller.—Booth Bay, Me.; Dickson, master. Detained at Hopewell Cape, New Brunswick, for alleged violation of customs laws, on July 24, 1886. Fined $400.

24. Rattler.—Gloucester, Mass.; A. F. Cunningham, master. Warned off at Canso, Nova Scotia, June, 1886. Detained in port of Shelburne, Nova Scotia, where vessel entered seeking shelter August 3, 1886. Kept under guard all night and released on the 4th.

25. Caroline Vought.—Booth Bay, Me.; Charles S. Reed, master. Warned off at Paspebiac, New Brunswick, and refused water, August 4, 1886.

26. Shiloh.—Gloucester, Mass.; Charles Nevit, master. Boarded at Liverpool, Nova Scotia, August 9, and subjected to rude surveillance.

27. Julia Ellen.—Booth Bay, Me.; Burnes, master. Boarded at Liverpool, Nova Scotia, August 9, 1886, and subjected to a rude surveillance.

28. Freddie W. Alton.—Provincetown, Mass.; Alton, master. Boarded at Liverpool, Nova Scotia, August 9, 1886, and subjected to rude surveillance.

29. Howard Holbrook.—Gloucester, Mass. Detained at Hawkesbury, Cape Breton, August 17, 1886, for alleged violation of the customs laws. Released August 20 on deposit of $400. Question of remission of fine still pending.

30. A. R. Crittenden.—Gloucester, Mass.; Bain, master. Detained at Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia, August 27, 1886, for alleged violation of customs laws. Four hundred dollars penalty deposited August 28 without protest, and vessel released. Three hundred and seventy-five dollars remitted, and a nominal fine of $25 imposed.

31. Mollie Adams.—Gloucester, Mass.; Solomon Jacobs, master. Warned off into storm from Straits of Canso, Nova Scotia, August 31, 1886.

32. Highland Light.—Wellfleet, Mass.; J. H. Ryder, master. Seized off East Point, Prince Edward Island, September 1, 1885, while fishing within prohibited line. Suit for forfeiture begun in vice-admiralty court at Charlottetown. Hearing set for September 29, but postponed to September 30. Master admitted the charge and confessed judgment. Vessel condemned and sold December 14. Purchased by Canadian Government.

33. Pearl Nelson.—Provincetown, Mass.; Kemp, master. Detained at Arichat, Cape Breton, September 8, 1886, for alleged violation of customs laws. Released September 9, on deposit of $200. Deposit refunded October 28, 1886.

34. Pioneer.—Gloucester, Mass.; F. F. Cruchel, master. Warned off at Canso, Nova Scotia, September 9, 1886.

35. Everett Steel.—Gloucester, Mass.; Charles H. Forbes, master. Detained at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, September 19, 1886, for alleged violation of customs laws. Released by order from Ottawa, September 11, 1886.

36. Moro Castle.—Gloucester, Mass.; Edwin M. Joyce, master. Detained at Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia, September 11, 1886, on charge of having smuggled goods into Chester, Nova Scotia, in 1884, and also of violating customs laws. A deposit of $1,600 demanded. Vessel discharged November 29, 1886, on payment, by agreement, of $1,000 to Canadian Government.

37. William D. Baisley.—Gloucester, Mass.; J. E. Gorman, master. Detained at Souris, Prince Edward Island, October 4, 1886, for alleged violation of customs law. Fined $400, and released on payment; $375 of the fine remitted.

38. Laura Sayward.—Gloucester, Mass.; Melleo Rose, master. Refused privilege of landing to buy provisions at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, October 5, 1886.

39. Marion Grimes.—Gloucester, Mass. Detained at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, October 9, for violation of port laws in failing to report at custom-house on entering. Fined $400. Money paid under protest and vessel released. Fine remitted December 4, 1886.

40. Jennie Seaverns.—Gloucester, Mass.; Joseph Tupper, master. Refused privilege of landing, and vessel placed under guard at Liverpool, Nova Scotia, October 20, 1886.

41. Flying Scud.—Gloucester, Mass. Detained for alleged violation of customs laws at Halifax, November 1, or about that time. Released November 16, 1886.

42. Sarah H. Prior.—Boston, Mass. Refused the restoration of a lost seine, which was found by a Canadian schooner, December, 1885.

43. Boat (name unknown).—Stephen R. Balcom, master, Eastport, Me. Warned off at St. Andrews, New Brunswick, July 9, 1886, with others.

44. Two small boats (unnamed).—Charles Smith, Pembroke, Me., master. Seized at East Quaddy, New Brunswick, September 1, 1886, for alleged violation of customs laws.

45. Druid (foreign built).—Gloucester, Mass. Seized, warned off, or molested otherwise at some time prior to September 6, 1886.

46. Abbey A. Snow.—Injury to this vessel has not been reported to the Department of State.

47. Eliza A. Thomas.—Injury to this vessel has not been reported to the Department of State.

48. Wide Awake.—Eastport, Me.; William Foley, master. Fined at L'Etang, New Brunswick, $75 for taking away fish without getting a clearance; again November 13, 1886, at St. George, New Brunswick, fined $20 for similar offense. In both cases he was proceeding to obtain clearances.

49. Eliza A. Thomes (schooner).—Portland, Me.; E. S. Bibbs, master. Wrecked on Nova Scotia shore, and unable to obtain assistance. Crew not permitted to land or to save anything until permission was received from captain of cutter. Canadian officials placed guard over fish saved, and everything saved from wreck narrowly escaped confiscation. (From statements of C. D. Thomes, owner, Portland, Me.)

50. Christian Ellsworth (schooner).—Eastport, Me.; James Ellsworth, master. Entered Port Hastings, Cape Breton, for wood; anchored at 10 o'clock, and reported at custom-house. At 2 o'clock was boarded by captain of cutter Hector and ordered to sea, being forced to leave without wood. In every harbor entered was refused privilege of buying anything. Anchored under lee of land in no harbor, but was compelled to enter at custom-house. In no two harbors were the fees alike. (From statements of James Ellsworth, owner and master, Eastport, Me.)

51. Mary W. Whorf (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; Simon Berrio, master. In July, 1886, lost seine off North Cape, Prince Edward Island, and not allowed to make any repairs on shore, causing a broken voyage and a long delay. Ran short of provisions, and being denied privilege of buying any on land, had to obtain from another American vessel. (From statements of Freeman A. Snow, owner, Wellfleet, Mass.)

52. Stowell Sherman (schooner).—Provincetown, Mass.; S. F. Hatch, master. Not allowed to purchase necessary supplies, and obliged to report at custom-houses, situated at distant and inconvenient places; ordered out of harbors in stress of weather, namely, out of Cascumpec Harbor, Prince Edward Island, nineteen hours after entry, and out of Malpeque Harbor, Prince Edward Island, fifteen hours after entry, wind then blowing too hard to admit of fishing. Returned home with broken trip. (From statements of Samuel T. Hatch, owner and master, Provincetown, Mass.)

53. Walter L. Rich (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; Obadiah Rich, master. Ordered out of Malpeque, P. E. I., in unsuitable weather for fishing, having been in harbor only twelve hours. Denied right to purchase provisions. Forced to enter at custom-house at Port Hawkesbury, C. B., on Sunday, collector fearing that vessel would leave before Monday and he would thereby lose his fee. (From statements of Obadiah Rich, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

54. Bertha D. Nickerson (schooner).—Booth Bay, Me.; N. E. Nickerson, master. Occasioned considerable expense by being denied Canadian harbors to procure crew, and detained in spring while waiting for men to come from Nova Scotia. (From statements of S. Nickerson & Sons, owners, Booth Bay, Me.)

55. Newell B. Hawes (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; Thomas C. Kennedy, master. Refused privilege of buying provisions in ports on Bay St. Lawrence, and in consequence obliged to leave for home with half a cargo. Made harbor at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, in face of storm, at 5 p. m., and master immediately started for custom-house, 5 miles distant, meeting captain of cutter Terror on way, to whom he explained errand. On returning, found two armed men from cutter on his vessel. At 7 o'clock next morning was ordered to sea, but refused to go in the heavy fog. At 9 o'clock the fog lifted slightly, and, though the barometer was very low and a storm imminent, vessel was forced to leave. Soon met the heavy gale, which split sails, causing considerable damage. Captain of Terror denied claim to right of remaining in harbor twenty-four hours. (From statements of T. C. Kennedy, part owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

56. Helen F. Tredick (schooner).—Cape Porpoise, Me.; R. J. Nunan, master. July 20, 1886, entered Port Latour, N. S., for shelter and water. Was ordered immediately to sea. (From statements of R. J. Nunan, owner and master, Cape Porpoise, Me.)

57. Nellie M. Snow (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; A. E. Snow, master. Was not allowed to purchase provisions in any Canadian ports, or to refit and land and ship fish, consequently compelled to leave for home with a broken trip. Not permitted to remain in ports longer than local Canadian officials saw fit. (From statements of J. C. Young, owner, Wellfleet, Mass.)

58. Gertrude Summers (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; N. S. Snow, master. Refused privilege of purchasing provisions, which resulted in injury to voyage. Found harbor regulations uncertain. Sometimes could remain in port twenty-four hours, again was ordered out in three hours. (From statements of N. S. Snow, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

59. Charles R. Washington (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; Jesse S. Snow, master. Master was informed by collector at Ship Harbor, C. B., that if he bought provisions, even if actually necessary, he would be subject to a fine of $400 for each offense. Refused permission by the collector at Souris, P. E. I., to buy provisions, and was compelled to return home September 10, before close of fishing season. Was obliged to report at custom-house every time he entered a harbor, even if only for shelter. Found no regularity in the amount of fees demanded, this being apparently at the option of the collector. (From statements of Jesse S. Snow, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

60. John M. Ball (schooner).—Provincetown, Mass.; N. W. Freeman, master. Driven out of Gulf of St. Lawrence to avoid fine of $400 for landing two men in the port of Malpeque, Prince Edward Island. Was denied all supplies, except wood and water, in same port. (From statements of N. W. Freeman, owner and master, Provincetown, Mass.)

61. Zephyr (schooner).—Eastport, Me.; Warren Pulk, master. Cleared from Eastport May 31, 1886, under register for West Isles, New Brunswick, to buy herring. Collector refused to enter vessel, telling captain that if he bought fish, which were plenty at the time, the vessel would be seized. Returned to Eastport, losing about a week, which resulted in considerable loss to owner and crew. (From statements of Guilford Mitchell, owner, Eastport, Me.)

62. Abdon Keene (schooner).—Bremen, Me.; William C. Keene, master. Was not allowed to ship or land crew at Nova Scotia ports, and owner had to pay for their transportation to Maine. (From statements of William C. Keene, owner and master, Bremen, Me.)

63. William Keene (schooner).—Portland, Me.; Daniel Kimball, master. Not allowed to ship a man or to send a man ashore except for water, at Liverpool, Nova Scotia, and ordered to sea as soon as water was obtained. (From statements of Henry Trefethen, owner, Peak's Island, Me.)

64. John Nye (schooner).—Swan's Island, Me.; W. L. Joyce, master. After paying entry fees and harbor dues was not allowed to buy provisions at Malpeque, Prince Edward Island, and had to return home for same, making a broken trip. (From statements of W. L. Joyce, owner and master, Atlantic, Me.)

65. Asa H. Pervere (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; A. B. Gore, master. Entered harbor for shelter; ordered out after twenty-four hours. Denied right to purchase food. (From statements of S. W. Kemp, agent, Wellfleet, Mass.)

66. Nathan Cleaves (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; P. E. Hickman, master. Ran short of provisions, and, not being permitted to buy, left for home with a broken voyage. Customs officer at Port Mulgrave, Nova Scotia, would allow purchase of provisions for homeward passage, but not to continue fishing. (From statements of Parker E. Hickman, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

67. Frank G. Rich (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; Charles A. Gorham, master. Not permitted to buy provisions or to lay in Canadian ports over twenty-four hours. (From statements of Charles A. Gorham, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

68. Emma O. Curtis (schooner).—Provincetown, Mass.; Elisha Rich, master. Not allowed to purchase provisions, and therefore obliged to return home. (From statements of Elisha Rich, owner and master, Provincetown, Mass.)

69. Pleiades (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; F. W. Snow, master. Driven from harbor within twenty-four hours after entering. Not allowed to ship or discharge men under penalty of $400. (From statements of F. W. Snow, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

70. Charles F. Atwood (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; Michael Burrows, master. Captain was not permitted to refit vessel or to buy supplies, and when out of food had to return home. Found Canadians disposed to harass him and put him to many inconveniencies. Not allowed to land seine on Canadian shore for purpose of repairing same. (From statements of Michael Burrows, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

71. Gertie May (schooner).—Portland, Me.; I. Doughty, master. Not allowed, though provided with permit to touch and trade, to purchase fresh bait in Nova Scotia, and driven from harbors. (From statements of Charles F. Guptill, owner, Portland, Me.)

72. Margaret S. Smith (schooner).—Portland, Me.; Lincoln W. Jewett, master. Twice compelled to return home from Bay of St. Lawrence with broken trip, not being able to secure provisions to continue fishing. Incurred many petty inconveniences in regard to customs regulations. (From statements of A. M. Smith, owner, Portland, Me.)

73. Elsie M. Smith (schooner).—Portland, Me.; Enoch Bulger, master. Came home with half fare, not being able to get provisions to continue fishing. Lost seine in a heavy gale rather than be annoyed by customs regulations when seeking shelter. (From statements of A. M. Smith, Portland, Me.)

74. Fannie A. Spurling (schooner).—Portland, Me.; Caleb Parris, master. Subject to many annoyances, and obliged to return home with a half fare, not being able to procure provisions. (From statements of A. M. Smith, owner, Portland, Me.)

75. Carleton Bell (schooner).—Booth Bay, Me.; Seth W. Eldridge, master. Occasioned considerable expense by being denied right to procure crew in Canadian harbors, and detained in spring while waiting for men to come from Nova Scotia. (From statements of S. Nickerson & Sons, owners, Booth Bay, Me.)

76. Abbie M. Deering (schooner).—Portland, Me.; Emory Gott, master. Not being able to procure provisions, obliged to return home with a third of a fare of mackerel. (From statements of A. M. Smith, owner, Portland, Me.)

77. Cora Louisa (schooner).—Booth Bay, Me.; Obed Harris, master. Could get no provisions in Canadian ports, and had to return home before getting full fare of fish. (From statements of S. Nickerson & Sons, owners, Booth Bay, Me.)

78. Eben Dale (schooner).—North Haven, Me.; R. G. Babbidge, master. Not permitted to buy bait, ice, or to trade in any way. Driven out of harbors, and unreasonable restrictions whenever near the land. (From statements of R. G. Babbidge, owner and master, Pulpit Harbor, Me.)

79. Charles Haskell (schooner).—North Haven, Me.; Daniel Thurston, master. Obliged to leave Gulf of St. Lawrence at considerable loss, not being allowed to buy provisions. (From statements of C. S. Staples, owner, North Haven, Me.)

80. Willie Parkman (schooner).—North Haven, Me.; William H. Banks, master. Unable to get supplies while in Gulf of St. Lawrence, which necessitated returning home at great loss, with a broken voyage. (From statements of William H. Banks, owner and master, North Haven, Me.)

81. D. D. Geyer (schooner).—Portland, Me.; John K. Craig, master. Being refused privilege of touching at a Nova Scotia port to take on resident crew already engaged, owner was obliged to provide passage for men to Portland, at considerable cost, causing great loss of time. (From statements of F. H. Jordan, owner, Portland, Me.)

82. Good Templar (schooner).—Portland, Me.; Elias Tarlton, master. Touched at La Have, Nova Scotia, to take on crew already engaged, but was refused privilege and ordered to proceed. The men being indispensable to voyage, had them delivered on board outside of 3-mile limit by a Nova Scotia boat. (From statements of Henry Trefethen, owner, Peak's Island, Maine.)

83. Eddie Davidson (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; John D. Snow, master. June 12, 1886, touched at Cape Island, Nova Scotia, but was not permitted to take on part of crew; boarded by customs officer and ordered to sail within twenty-four hours; not allowed to buy food in ports on Gulf of St. Lawrence. (From statements of John D. Snow, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

84. Alice P. Higgins (schooner).—Wellfleet, Mass.; Alvin W. Cobb, master. Driven from harbors twice in stress of weather. (From statements of Alvin W. Cobb, master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

85. Cynosure (schooner).—Booth Bay, Me.; L. Rush, master. Was obliged to return home before securing a full cargo, not being permitted to purchase provisions in Nova Scotia. (From statements of S. Nickerson & Sons, owners, Booth Bay, Me.)

86. Naiad (schooner).—Lubec, Me.; Walter Kennedy, master. Presented frontier license (heretofore acceptable) on arriving at St. George, New Brunswick, but collector would not recognize same; was compelled to return to Eastport and clear under register before being allowed to purchase herring, thus losing one trip. (From statements of Walter Kennedy, master, Lubec, Me.)

87. Louisa A. Grout (schooner).—Provincetown, Mass.: Joseph Hatch, jr., master. Took permit to touch and trade; arrived at St. Peter's, Cape Breton, in afternoon of May 19, 1886; entered and cleared according to law; was obliged to take inexperienced men at their own prices to complete fishing crew, to get to sea before the arrival of a seizing officer who had started from Straits of Canso at 5 o'clock same afternoon in search of vessel, having been advised by telegraph of the shipping of men. (From statements of Joseph Hatch, jr., owner and master, Provincetown, Mass.)

88. Lottie E. Hopkins (schooner).—Vinal Haven, Me.; Emery J. Hopkins, master. Refused permission to buy any article of food in Canadian ports. Obtained shelter in harbors only by entering at custom-house. (From statement of Emery J. Hopkins, North Haven, Me.)

89. Florine F. Nickerson (schooner).—Chatham, Mass.; Nathaniel E. Eldridge, master. Engaged fishermen for vessel at Liverpool, Nova Scotia, but action of Canadian Government necessitated the paying of their transportation to the United States and loss of time to vessel while waiting their arrival; otherwise would have called for them on way to fishing grounds. Returning, touched at Liverpool, but immediately on anchoring Canadian officials came aboard and refused permission for men to go ashore. Captain at once signified his intention of immediately proceeding on passage, but officer prevented his departure until he had reported at custom-house, vessel being thereby detained two days. (From statement of Kendrick & Bearse, owners, South Harwich, Mass.)

90. B. B. B. (sloop).—Eastport, Me.; George W. Copp, master. Obliged to discontinue business of buying sardine herring in New Brunswick ports for Eastport canneries, as local customs regulations were, during the season of 1886, made so exacting that it was impossible to comply with them without risk of the fish becoming stale and spoiled by detention. (From statements of George W. Copp, master, Eastport, Me.)

91. Sir Knight (schooner).—Southport, Me.; Mark Rand, master. Compelled to pay transportation for crew from Nova Scotia to Maine, the vessel not being allowed to call at Nova Scotia ports for them on her way to the fishing grounds. (From statements of William T. Maddocks, owner, Southport, Me.)

92. Uncle Joe (schooner).—Southport, Me.; J. W. Pierce, master. Compelled to pay transportation for crew from Nova Scotia to Maine, the vessel not being allowed to call at Nova Scotia ports for them on her way to the fishing grounds. (From statements of William T. Maddocks, owner, Southport, Me.)

93. Willie G. (schooner).—Southport, Me.; Albert F. Orne, master. Compelled to pay transportation for crew from Nova Scotia to Maine, the vessel not being allowed to call at Nova Scotia ports for them on her way to the fishing grounds. (From statements of William T. Maddocks, owner, Southport, Me.)

94. Lady Elgin (schooner).—Southport, Me.; George W. Pierce, master. Compelled to pay transportation for crew from Nova Scotia to Maine, the vessel not being allowed to call at Nova Scotia ports for them on her way to the fishing grounds. (From statements of William T. Maddocks, owner, Southport, Me.)

95. John H. Kennedy (schooner).—Portland, Me.; David Dougherty, master. Called at a Nova Scotia port for bait, but left without obtaining same, fearing seizure and fine, returning home with a broken voyage. At a Newfoundland port was charged $16 light-house dues, giving draft on owners for same, which, being excessive, they refused to pay. (From statements of E. G. Willard, owner, Portland, Me.)

96. Ripley Ropes (schooner).—Southport, Me.; C. E. Hare, master. Vessel ready to sail when telegram from authorities at Ottawa refused permission to touch at Canadian ports to ship men; consequently obliged to pay for their transportation to Maine, and vessel detained while awaiting their arrival. (From statements of Freeman Orne & Son, owners, Southport, Me.)

97. Jennie Armstrong (schooner).—Southport, Me.; A. O. Webber, master. Vessel ready to sail when telegram from authorities of Ottawa refused permission to touch at Canadian ports to ship men; consequently obliged to pay for their transportation to Maine, and vessel detained while awaiting their arrival. (From statements of Freeman Orne & Son, owners, Southport, Me.)

98. Vanguard (schooner).—Southport, Me.; C. C. Dyer, master. Vessel ready to sail when telegram from authorities refused permission to touch at Canadian ports to ship men; consequently obliged to pay for their transportation to Maine, and vessel detained while awaiting their arrival. (From statements of Freeman Orne & Son, owners, Southport, Me.)

99. Electric Flash (schooner).—North Haven, Me.; Aaron Smith, master. Unable to obtain supplies in Canadian ports and obliged to return home before obtaining full cargo, (From statements of Aaron Smith, master and agent, North Haven, Me.)

100. Daniel Simmons (schooner).—Swan's Island, Me.; John A. Gott, master. Compelled to go without necessary outfit while fishing in Gulf of St. Lawrence. (From statements of M. Stimpson, owner, Swan's Island, Me.)

101. Grover Cleveland (schooner).—Boston, Mass.; George Lakeman, master. Compelled to return home with only partial fare of mackerel, being refused supplies in Canadian ports. (From statements of B. F. De Butts, owner, Boston, Mass.)

102. Andrew Burnham (schooner).—Boston, Mass.; Nathan F. Blake, master.

M.

[Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 94. An act respecting fishing by foreign vessels.]

* * * * * * *

2. Any commissioned officer of Her Majesty's navy serving on board of any vessel of Her Majesty's navy cruising and being in the waters of Canada for the purpose of affording protection to Her Majesty's subjects engaged in the fisheries, or any commissioned officer of Her Majesty's navy, fishery officer, or stipendiary magistrate on board of any vessel belonging to or in the service of the government of Canada and employed in the service of protecting the fisheries, or any officer of the customs of Canada, sheriff, justice of the peace, or other person duly commissioned for that purpose, may go on board of any ship, vessel, or boat within any harbor in Canada or hovering in British waters within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors in Canada, and stay on board so long as she remains within such harbor or distance.

3. Any one of the officers or persons hereinbefore mentioned may bring any ship, vessel, or boat, being within any harbor in Canada, or hovering in British waters within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors in Canada, into port and search her cargo, and may also examine the master upon oath touching the cargo and voyage; and if the master or person in command does not truly answer the questions put to him in such examination, he shall incur a penalty of $400; and if such ship, vessel, or boat is foreign, or not navigated according to the laws of the United Kingdom or of Canada, and (a) has been found fishing, or preparing to fish, or to have been fishing in British waters within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of Canada, not included within the above-mentioned limits, without a license, or after the expiration of the term named in the last license granted to such ship, vessel, or boat under the first section of this act, or (b) has entered such waters for any purpose not permitted by treaty or convention, or by any law of the United Kingdom or of Canada for the time-being in force, such ship, vessel, or boat, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo thereof shall be forfeited.

4. All goods, ships, vessels, and boats, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo liable to forfeiture under this act may be seized and secured by any officers or persons mentioned in the second section of this act; and every person opposing any officer or person in the execution of his duty under this act, or aiding or abetting any other person in any such opposition, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to a fine of $100 and to two years' imprisonment.

* * * * * * *

6. All goods, vessels, and boats, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo, condemned as forfeited under this act, shall be sold by public auction, by direction of the officer who has the custody thereof under the provisions of the next preceding section of this act, and under regulations made, from time to time, by the governor in council; and the proceeds of every such sale shall be subject to the control of the minister of marine and fisheries, * * * shall first pay thereout all necessary costs and expenses of custody and sale, and the governor in council may, from time to time, apportion three-fourths, or less, of the net remainder among the officers and crew of any of Her Majesty's ships or Canadian Government vessel from on board of which the seizure was made, as he thinks right—reserving to the Crown and paying over to the minister of finance and receiver-general at least one-fourth of such net remainder, to form part of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada; but the governor in council may nevertheless direct that any good vessel or boat, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo, seized and forfeited shall be destroyed or be reserved for the public service.

* * * * * * *

10. If a dispute arises as to whether any seizure has or has not been legally made, or as to whether the person who seized was or was not authorized to seize under this act, oral evidence may be taken, and the burden of proving the illegality of the seizure shall lie upon the owner or claimant.

11. No claim to anything seized under this act and returned into any court of vice-admiralty for adjudication shall be admitted unless the claim is entered under oath, with the name of the owner, his residence and occupation, and the description of the property claimed, which oath shall be made by the owner, his attorney or agent, and to the best of his knowledge and belief.

* * * * * * *

13. No writ shall be sued out against any officer or other person authorized to seize under this act for anything done under this act until one month after notice in writing has been delivered to him or left at his usual place of abode by the person intending to sue out such writ, his attorney or agent, in which notice shall be contained the cause of action, the name and place of abode of the person who is to bring the action, and of his attorney or agent, and no evidence of any cause of action shall be admitted except such as is contained in such notice.

14. Every such action shall be brought within three months after the cause thereof has arisen.

15. If on any information or suit brought to trial under this act on account of any seizure, judgment is given for the claimant, and the court or judge certifies that there was probable cause for seizure, the claimant shall not be entitled to costs, and the person who made the seizure shall not be liable to any indictment or suit on account thereof; and if any suit or prosecution is brought against any person on account of any seizure under this act, and judgment is given against him, and the court or judge certifies that there was probable cause for the seizure, the plaintiff, besides the thing seized or its value, shall not recover more than 4 cents damages, and shall not recover any costs, and the defendant shall not be fined more than 20 cents.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senate will proceed from open executive session to the consideration of legislative business, without a formal motion.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I present the report of the committee of conference on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the committee of conference will be read.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator from Kansas will not call that report up for consideration this evening. I should like to hear the result of the report made to the other House before we act upon it. There is one of the subjects of difference between the House and the Senate that I should like to have considered after the action of the other House upon the report of the conference committee, and in the event that the House do not concur I shall ask the Senate not to concur in that provision of the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be objection to the consideration of the report, the motion to proceed to consider the same must be decided without debate. Does the Senator from Kansas insist on his motion to proceed to its consideration?

Mr. PLUMB. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report is before the Senate, and will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8989) "making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 13, 14, 20, 21, 38, 50, 56, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 72, 77, 82, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 118, 120, 128, 161, 162, 163, 164, 167, 169, and 172.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 7, 8, 10, 16, 18, 19, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 46, 47, 48, 51, 54, 57, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 73, 78, 80, 81, 83, 84, 86, 92, 93, 94, 105, 106, 109, 112, 113, 116, 117, 119, 122, 124, 125, 127, 129, 130, 131, 136, 137, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 148, 149, 151, 152, 168, 171, 174, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 183, 185, 186, 187, 188, 190, 191, and 192, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 13 of said amendment strike out the words "three thousand" and in lieu thereof insert the words "two thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$43,864;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended as follows: Strike out all after the word "repealed" therein; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,400;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$400;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$11,600;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$615,000," and strike out, in line 24, page 5 of the bill, the words "on the" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in the discretion of the Commissioners on;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$144,600;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$38,600;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 9 of said amendment strike out "Rhode Island avenue" and insert "Boundary" in lieu thereof; in lines 10 and 11 strike out "New Jersey avenue" and insert "Boundary" in lieu thereof; in line 16 strike out "Sixth" and insert "Fifth;" insert after line 18 the following: "Thirteenth-street intersection to B street; Eighth street, from S street to Boundary;" and in lieu of the sum proposed in said Senate amendment insert "$191,400;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 9 of said amendment strike out the word "Hall" and insert in lieu thereof "South Capitol," and after said line 9 insert "L street, from First to Four-and-a-half streets;" and in lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$52,800;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After line 2 of said amendment insert the following:

"Seventh street, from D street to Virginia avenue.

"South Carolina avenue, from Seventh to Ninth streets."

In lines 9 and 10 of said amendment strike out "Pennsylvania avenue" and insert "G street."

And in lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$54,400."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 10 of said amendment strike out "Massachusetts" and insert "Maryland;" and after line 12 insert "Sixth street, from H to K streets;" and strike out line 19 of said amendment; and in lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$129,700;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$3,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$95,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "90,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the amended paragraph; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 74, 75, and 76: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 74, 75, and 76, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the amended paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For the grading and paving of Fourteenth street northward from the Boundary, for the grading and paving of Stoughton street and of Chapin street from Fourteenth street extended to Wayland Seminary, and the paving of Pomeroy street in front of the Freedman's Hospital, $15,000; in all, $88,980."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 79: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 79, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Including retaining-wall on M street, at the approach to the new free bridge across the Potomac, which bridge is hereby placed under the jurisdiction of the commissioners of the District of Columbia;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 85: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$77,000," and add at the end of the amended paragraph the following:

"Provided, That no expenditure hereunder shall be made at a price higher than 27 cents per 1,000 square yards."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$105,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 95: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$58,971;" and in line 19, page 12 of the bill, strike out "sixty-four thousand three" and insert in lieu thereof "sixty-six thousand eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 107: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 107, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$137,711;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$22,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 114: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$8,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 115: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 121: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 121, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$315,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 123: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 123, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,700;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 126: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "twenty-two;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 132: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 132, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,400;" and after the word "building," in line 24, page 15 of the bill, insert the words "and cells;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 133: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 133, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$14,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 134: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 134, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert the following: "$15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 135: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 135, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$406,540;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 138: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 138, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "nine;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 144: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 144, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 145: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 145, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 146: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 146, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following: "for erecting engine-house in southeastern section of Washington and furnishing same, $12,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; hose carriage for same, $700;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 147: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 147, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$141,200;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 150: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 150, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"The commissioners of the District of Columbia shall not, after the 15th day of September, 1888, permit or authorize any additional telegraph, telephone, electric-lighting, or other wires to be erected or maintained on or over any of the streets or avenues of the city of Washington; and said commissioners are hereby directed to investigate and report to Congress at the beginning of its next session the best method of removing all electric wires from the air or surface of the streets, avenues, and alleys, and the best method of interring the same underground, and such legal regulation thereof as may be needed; and they shall report what manner of conduits should be maintained by the city of Washington, if any, and the cost of constructing and maintaining the same, and what charge, if any, should be made by the city for the use of its conduits by the persons or corporations placing wires therein, and upon what terms and conditions the same should be used when required so to do, and for such investigation $1,000 is hereby appropriated: Provided, That the commissioners of the District may, under such reasonable conditions as they may prescribe, authorize the wires of any existing telegraph, telephone, or electric-light company now operating in the District of Columbia to be laid under any street, alley, highway, footway, or sidewalk in the District whenever, in their judgment, the public interest may require the exercise of such authority; such privileges as may be granted hereunder to be revocable at the will of Congress without compensation, and no such authority to be exercised after the termination of the present Congress."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 170: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 170, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter insert the following: "all under the control of the commissioners;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 173: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 173, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted insert the following: "all under the control of the commissioners;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 175: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 175, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "association" in line 8 of said amendment down to and including line 10, and insert a period in lieu of the semicolon after the said word "association;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 189: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 189, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$17,836;" and in line 3, on page 25 of the bill, strike out "thirty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

P. B. PLUMB,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. C. CLEMENTS,
FELIX CAMPBELL,
LOUIS E. McCOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. McPHERSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before that motion is put I desire to have a formal amendment to a little joint resolution agreed to. The matter of time is important.

Mr. McPHERSON. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield for the purpose indicated by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not ask it if action is to be taken now on the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the conference committee.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senate non-concur in so much of amendment numbered 1 as relates to the salary to be paid to the inspector of plumbing in the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me interrupt the Senator for a moment to make a statement which I think will be satisfactory to his mind.

The Senator is aware, in the first place, that the salary of this officer was reported from the Senate Committee on Appropriations exactly as it was estimated for. On the motion of the Senator from Florida the salary was increased to $3,000 by the Senate in deference to his opinion about it, unsupported by that of any other person that I know of. Certainly no one came before the committee to say anything about it, and we heard from nobody except from him. The Senate conferees stood out unreasonably, as some think, certainly stronger for that item than almost any other provision in the bill, and we finally succeeded in effecting an increase to $2,000.

I do not believe the Senator can make anything by any motion he may make. As he has opened up the question, if he is right, as I am persuaded that he is very likely, not because I know anything about it, but simply because I have confidence in his judgment, it has laid the foundation for something in a succeeding bill, either at this or the next session of Congress, and he is fully as likely to accomplish what he desires in that way as any other. Certainly he can not expect that the two Houses should remain in anything like permanent controversy over a mere question of salary, and that, too, for a person who has been serving at the salary he is now receiving for years, and about which there has been no complaint whatever, and who I have no doubt in the world is entirely willing to continue to serve, and would consider himself grossly outraged if he were turned out, notwithstanding what the Senator thinks the insufficient character of his salary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would observe that the motion of the Senator from Florida is not in order and can not be entertained by the Chair. The report of a committee of conference is not susceptible of amendment. Having been agreed upon by the managers on the part of the Senate and House of Representatives, it must be adopted or rejected as an entirety. The question, therefore, is upon concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. CALL. Then I hope the report will not be concurred in. I have observed that on repeated occasions the committees of conference have reported to the Senate a motion to concur in certain numbered amendments or certain numbered agreements of the committee. That was the report of the committee. It may be parliamentary perhaps that it is a privilege belonging only to members of a conference committee to ask that items shall be separately considered and so acted upon, and that the Senate shall not have the right to do it, but it is certainly not a rational or business method of procedure.

I wish to state as the ground of my objection to the conference agreement that every physician of prominence in the city of Washington of whom I have any knowledge has by letter and statement, which have been printed in the RECORD, advised the Senate and the House of the present, immediate necessity of the provision to the lives of the people in the District, and to the strangers who come here, relating particular instances enforcing the necessity and the propriety of the amendment. The law, as I understand it and as they understand it, confines the duty of the inspector of plumbing to new houses being erected, and to see that proper plumbing is inserted in such houses. For the old houses there is no provision; and that work has been gratuitously performed by this most deserving scientific and practical sanitary engineer, not as an inspector of plumbing, but as a sanitary engineer of experience and skill. That fact is certified by every physician and by some of the leading business men of this city, and their certificates were read to the Senate and printed in the RECORD when the amendment was put upon the bill. Numerous instances have occurred and within a short period of time.

The reason why I ask that this report may not be agreed to now is that General WHEELER, a member of the other House, in the Butler Building near here, very recently came near losing his life, according to the testimony of one of the most eminent physicians of this town, by the sanitary condition of that house, which was ascertained only at his request when, as a gratuitous and voluntary and unpaid service, the officer who is to receive this increase of salary was sent for and discovered it. The same is true, I understand from the best authority, of General Sheridan's family and children. The same is true of my own immediate neighbor's house, and numerous instances have occurred, most notably that of Mr. Black, a member of the other House of Congress, who lost his life by paralysis, caused by the condition of the rented house which his family occupied.

Numerous instances of this kind have been gathering for years, until every physician of prominence in this city has recommended and written letters which were presented by me to the Senate, showing the necessity of immediate action and of compensation to this man for the service which he is gratuitously performing. Why any one should desire to continue this wholesale sacrifice of life I can not understand, but it seems that some one prefers that the people should die by the thousand rather than pay a thousand dollars more to a deserving and capable public officer.

There is not a city in the United States where the salary of the person charged with the duties of a sanitary engineer, not of an inspector of plumbing, is not largely over $3,000 a year, and yet we are asked that this service shall either go unperformed and the epidemics which are brought into the city and District, particularly the hotels and in rented houses, shall continue to destroy the lives of the people and the children of the people, or that this person shall perform the service without compensation.

Mr. President and Senators, that is the condition of the question. I take it for granted that when this conference report is made to the House of Representatives and the facts are made known as have been developed in the case of General WHEELER lately, they will agree to the amendment put upon the bill by the Senate, and for that reason I ask that the report be non-concurred in. As I said, there is not a prominent physician in the city of Washington who is not upon the records here certifying to the necessity of it. I see before me the Senator from Colorado, who told me that he had had personal experience which exhibited the necessity of it, and the danger to which himself and his family had been exposed. I therefore ask that the Senate will not concur in the conference report. There are hundreds of people in the public service who do not do the thousandth part of the good done by this man who receive more than the amount proposed to be paid to him. We have no right to assume that this man will continue to perform this service gratuitously, and if he does we have no right to punish him for his charity and his skill.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, this is a city that the Congress of the United States is responsible for, and strangers coming from all parts of the country and all parts of the world have a right to suppose that the houses of this city are decently cared for; that the best of sanitary skill is employed here to see that they are kept in due order. As a matter of fact, life after life is being lost, and practically murder is being committed simply because the old houses of the city are not properly inspected.

I do not know just how this matter rests, but for one I believe that we should disagree to this report, and that the attention of both Houses should be called to this one specific item, so that we may get a scientific and responsible sanitary officer whose duty it shall be to inspect the new buildings which are being erected, and also the old houses where three-quarters of the population live, and into which the strangers from all parts of the country are invited every session in vast numbers, and where many of them die.

Mr. DAWES. The difficulty is not that we have not an efficient officer of this kind. He is commended by everybody for his skill. The difficulty with the Senator from Florida and the Senator from New Hampshire is that he does not get enough salary by $200. That is the trouble.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator's pardon; the proposition of the Senate was to increase the salary to $3,000.

Mr. DAWES. The officer discharges all the duty now that the Senator from Florida thinks he ought to discharge, but the Senator from Florida says some part of it is voluntary, and the Senator from Florida thinks because of the value of his services, which all concede, his salary ought to be raised. Very likely it ought to be raised, but whether it should be $3,000 or $2,000, where the conference committee put it, may be a question. I do not think that the houses will suffer whether the salary be $2,000 or $3,000. No complaint has come from the officer himself, no suggestion has come before the committee that there has been any failure of duty on the part of this officer for lack of pay, nor from the commissioners, nor anybody that he ought to have more pay. It is possible that he ought, but I submit we had better not shake the Republic in the sum of $200.

Mr. CALL. I beg the Senator's pardon, that is not the state of the case. The statement is not that the law requires certain duties to be performed, that of inspecting new buildings, not of old buildings, not of sewers, but so far as this work is done, it is done voluntarily. The Senate and the House ought not to ask this man to devote his time, and if they did he could not devote his whole time, to the inspection of the old houses in this great city. But if he did, what kind of an argument is it that his wife and children should be allowed to suffer while he is gratuitously inspecting the house of the Senator from Massachusetts and saving the life of his wife and children?

The leading physicians in this District, the proper guardians of the health of the people, have urged upon Congress the passage of this amendment to increase the compensation of this man as something absolutely required by the public service and demanded by justice and right. The Senate, almost unanimously, put this amendment upon the bill after reading their letters, and two of the commissioners of the District of Columbia told me that they thought it was a proper and a wise measure.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not understand the question of fact to be as the Senator from Massachusetts states it. As I am not upon the Committee of Appropriations, I do not undertake to know whether he is correct or the Senator from Florida, who is also upon the same committee, who called the attention of the Senate to this subject. But if the Senator from Florida be right, there is no official duty chargeable upon this officer to inspect the old buildings of the city, and certainly there can be no legal obligation upon him to perform a duty which he performs gratuitously, for if it be a legal duty it is not a duty gratuitously performed.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator suppose that it would be any more his legal duty if he should get a little more pay?

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator is trifling and treating this matter which concerns life with an absurdity of questioning which I trust he will accept my pardon for doing, which I give with that sort of feeling that is perhaps proper under the circumstances. It is not a thing to be laughed or sneered down that lives have been lost here in this city by reason of the imperfect inspection of buildings. On many occasions the work has not been done. Whether there be a legal obligation upon any officer under the law to perform the work or not, the work has failed to be efficiently performed in many instances, and there has been great complaint about it. If the Senator from Massachusetts, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, has not heard that complaint, he simply has not heard all that is going on in this city, nor all the complaint that has been made.

As I understand the facts to be, here is a sanitary inspector whose official duty it is to examine the new buildings and see that the new plumbing which is put into the city is all right. That he is paid for. I do not understand that consequently it is his official duty at all to inspect the older buildings. I do not know whether I am right or wrong about that. If the Senator be right about that, it is simply a case where there is an official obligation which is not sufficiently paid for, but there is beyond that the further fact, as I understand, that it is a duty to the public which is not fully performed by anybody.

Mr. DAWES. In acknowledgment of my obligation to the Senator from New Hampshire for the gracious manner in which he has pardoned the offense that I have committed, I will state to him that there is no legal duty imposed upon this officer to inspect old buildings; that it was not in the power of the Committee on Appropriations to impose that duty upon him. It was not asked by anybody, because it could not be done in an appropriation bill. If his salary remains at $1,800, where it has been for a great many years, or at $2,000, where the conference committee has put it, or at $3,000, where my friend the Senator from Florida wants it, his duty will remain the same, and he will discharge it with great efficiency and with great service to the people.

In addition to that, he is willing and always has been, and will continue to do it, whether the salary remain at either one of these three points, when called upon by the people occupying the old houses, to give his opinion as to what ought to be done in them.

The Senator from New Hampshire does not—I speak it with modesty—know anything more about the defects of plumbing in old houses than I do. I speak it with becoming modesty. The Senator does not appreciate any more than I do the necessity of prescribing by law the duties of such an officer, and clothing him with power not only to give his opinion, but to enforce such alterations in the plumbing of the old houses in this city as will secure in some measure a degree of health that is not now in the city. All that the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Florida, in their zeal about a salary, leave out of the question. If they desire something that will produce better plumbing in the old houses of this city and will undertake the work, I will join with them; but it will not be effected by changing a salary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida moves that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.]

Mr. PLUMB. I hope that will not be done until we dispose of this conference report.

Mr. CALL. I shall call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The noes appear to have it.

Mr. PLUMB. There is evidently a misunderstanding about this matter, both on the part of the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida has a right to demand the yeas and nays if he desires. Does the Senator from Florida ask for the yeas and nays?

Mr. CALL. I withdraw the demand for the present. I should like to have the yeas and nays on concurring in the conference report.

Mr PLUMB. What the Senator desires and what the physicians of this city desire is a new piece of legislation giving authority to some one to act as sanitary inspector for this city. They believe this officer would be a good person for that place, and they have wanted an enlarged provision or a new provision giving him authority which he does not now possess. That was not proper to be put on an appropriation bill, and it could not be put on in conference because it was not in controversy between the two Houses. If this report were to be rejected we should be in the same condition as now, because anything we might put in would be subject to a point of order. What both these Senators want, and very properly, with credit to their heads and hearts, could not be accomplished in the way in which they seem to be desirous of getting it.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not want to delay the Senate. I have acted in the discharge of what I conceive to be my duty. When every physician of prominence, every property-holder says to me, "It is your duty, exercising a public function as a legislator, to make compensation to a man whose services are used every day by us for the discovery of the cause which is destroying human life, not in one instance but in hundreds of cases," whenever a source of information or authority comes to me and addresses itself to me for the performance of a duty intrusted to me with the statement that one person not charged by law with the performance of that duty is constantly called upon, giving his time and service to other public duties at a smaller compensation than prevails in any city in the Union, and giving it ineffectually for the want of time taken from his other duties and the want of assistance, and asks that an amendment be made increasing his compensation until there can be more complete details provided by a statute, I do not think I am performing my duty when I turn a deaf ear to it knowing as I do that this action will cause the death of many children and many people in this city. Therefore I have asked for a vote on the subject. I do not think that these important measures should be disposed of in this way without a quorum and in haste.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conferrence.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, July 11, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 10, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PAPER FOR UNITED STATES SECURITIES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a letter addressed by him to the President pro tempore of the Senate respecting the appropriation for distinctive paper for United States securities for 1889; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

OHIO CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the Senate amendments to the joint resolution (H. Res. 196) declaring the true intent and meaning of the act approved May 9, 1888.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I want to move a concurrence in the Senate amendments with an amendment. I observe that the dates are wrong, both in the body of the resolution and in the title. It should read "approved May 28," instead of May 9.

The SPEAKER. In the body of the resolution it reads, "passed May 9."

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. What I ask is that unanimous consent be granted to change the dates both in the title and the body of the resolution to conform to the facts; that is, to make the date in each case May 28, and amend the resolution in other respects to conform.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Senate amendments will be concurred in; and the Clerk will report the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the title strike out "9th" and insert "28th." Amend line 2 by striking out "passed" and insert "approved." Also, in the fourth line, strike out "9th" and insert "28th;" and in lines 2 and 3, strike out "and approved."

There being no objection, the Senate amendments were concurred in, and the amendments proposed by Mr. BUTTERWORTH were agreed to.

RETURN OF A BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following request of the Senate:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, July 9, 1888.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the resolution of the Senate agreeing to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 889) for the relief of Mary M. Briggs.

The SPEAKER. Without objection this request will be complied with.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOVEY. I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill which I send to the desk.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that the morning hour for the call of the committees be dispensed with, and that committees having reports to make may be permitted to hand them in at the desk.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PORTRAITS OF FORMER SECRETARIES OF THE NAVY.

Mr. WISE (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 10783) making an appropriation for the purchase of portraits of former Secretaries of the Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

ELDREDGE SMITH SURFACE, ELEVATED, AND STREET RAILWAY SYSTEM.

Mr. WISE also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10784) making an appropriation to test the Eldredge Smith surface, elevated, and street railway systems; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

FILING OF REPORTS.

By unanimous consent, the following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

J. M. HOGAN.

Mr. BIGGS, from the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4489) for the relief of J. M. Hogan; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PHILIP W. SILBER.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7957) for the relief of Philip W. Silber, captain Company C, Indiana Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

PHILIP THOMPSON (THOMAS).

Mr. MATSON also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 10210) increasing the pension of Philip Thompson (Thomas); which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FRANCIS H. PLUMMER.

Mr. FRENCH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an amendment the bill (S. 2091) granting a pension to Francis H. Plummer; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES M'GOWAN.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2764) increasing the pension of James McGowan; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. ELLA M. GROVE.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2254) increasing the pension of Mrs. Ella M. Grove (?); which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELLA M. THORNTON.

Mr. SAWYER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2982) granting a pension to Ella M. Thornton; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARGARET A. HILLARD.

Mr. SAWYER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2993) granting a pension to Margaret A. Hillard; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ARTHUR D. AND ALFRED LYFORD.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 4670) granting a pension to Arthur D. and Alfred Lyford; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

STATE HOME FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. LAIRD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7939) providing for aid to a State home for disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States, their widows and orphans; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RICHARD PORTER.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10241) granting a pension to Richard Porter; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RIGHT OF WAY ACROSS PAPAGO INDIAN RESERVATION, ARIZONA.

Mr. SHIVELY, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 7843) granting to the Citrous Water Company the right of way across the Papago Indian reservation in Maricopa County, Arizona; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS BLAZER.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6880) granting a pension to Thomas Blazer; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SMITH BODKINS.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 6022) granting a pension to Smith Bodkins; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY CAFFREY.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7623) granting a pension to Mary Caffrey; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PERRY R. NYE.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6409) for the relief of Perry R. Nye; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

H. S. SAYRE.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 968) granting a pension to H. S. Sayre; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RACHEL MORGAN.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10607) granting a pension to Rachel Morgan; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELEANOR D. HEATH.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7457) granting a pension to Eleanor D. Heath; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY WOODWORTH.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7657) granting a pension to Mary Woodworth, widow of Ebenezer F. Woodworth; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ISAAC ROSHON.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 6334) for the relief of Isaac Roshon; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JONATHAN HARRISON.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7887) granting an increase of pension to Jonathan Harrison; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HARRISON WAGNER.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (S. 332) granting a pension to Harrison Wagner; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHRISTINA EDSON.

Mr. HERMANN, from the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 2822) for the relief of Christina Edson, and the personal representatives of John Geisel, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES R. BERRY.

Mr. MANSUR, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9848) for the relief of James R. Berry; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

STATE HOMES FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. LAIRD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2116) to provide aid to State homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL MILITARY HOMES.

Mr. LAIRD also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2461) appropriating $150,000 for quarters and barracks at the branches of the National Military Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FORT ROBINSON AND FORT NIOBRARA.

Mr. LAIRD also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendment the bill (S. 1561) to provide for the completion of quarters, barracks, and stables at Fort Robinson and Fort Niobrara, in the State of Nebraska; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

OREGON RAILWAY AND NAVIGATION COMPANY.

Mr. DARLINGTON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2536) granting to the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company the right of way through the Nez Percé Indian reservation; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NEWPORT AND KING'S VALLEY RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. HARE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1129) granting to the Newport and King's Valley Railroad Company the right of way through the Siletz Indian reservation; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SPRINGFIELD, MO.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9618) to extend the limit for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mo.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ATCHISON, KANS.

Mr. WADE also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1726) to provide for the erection of a public building for the use of the post-office and Government offices at the city of Atchison, Kans.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. LEE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 7785) for the relief of the attendants on the insane at the Hospital for the Insane in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of revenue bills.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I understand that the regular order is the call of committees under the hour.

The SPEAKER. The House has, by unanimous consent, just dispensed with the call of committees.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It dispensed with the call of committees for reports, but not the hour for consideration as I understand it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware of that fact; but under the rules of the House, after the hour for the call of committees has been consumed, or dispensed with, a motion is in order to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider revenue or appropriation bills. If that motion is not agreed to, then the second morning hour will be in order, unless dispensed with.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There is but one bill pending now in that hour from the Committee on Military Affairs, the bill which was called up at our last meeting, and it will take, I am satisfied, not more than two or three minutes to dispose of it. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas to withdraw his motion for a moment and allow the consideration of that bill to be completed.

The SPEAKER. But if the hour is entered upon, then another committee will be called.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Not necessarily.

Mr. SPRINGER. He asks unanimous consent to proceed to consider that bill without regard to the hour.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No, I do not ask unanimous consent to proceed outside of the hour, but to consume such portion of the hour as is necessary to complete that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must get the House to reject the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas in order to reach his object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the House will vote that motion down. This is the bill in relation to the detail of Army officers to the colleges.

Mr. PAYSON. A very important bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If the House shall proceed in the morning hour to consider that bill then the whole hour will be consumed either by the Committee on Military Affairs or the next committee called, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It will not take three minutes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. But if you enter upon the consideration of the bill in the hour another committee will be called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so stated.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken; and there were, on a division—ayes 54, noes 31.

So the motion was agreed to.

THE TARIFF.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation, and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To strike out lines 364 and 365, as follows:
"Potato or corn starch, rice starch, and other starch, 1 cent per pound."

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose debate on the amendment had been exhausted. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rice, cleaned, 2 cents per pound; uncleaned, or rice free of the outer hull, and still having the inner cuticle on, 1½ cents per pound.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I move to strike out the word "or," in line 366, and to strike out, in line 367, the words "free of the outer hull and still having the inner cuticle on."

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned last night we were on the subject of starch.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the gentleman came into the Hall the amendment in regard to starch was voted on, and the Clerk proceeded to read the section of the bill now under consideration, no other gentleman desiring to speak on the subject of starch.

Mr. REED. I was sitting here, Mr. Chairman, waiting to make some observations before the matter passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did not address the Chair.

Mr. REED. I certainly did not. I did not know there was an opportunity. I should like to point out some little difficulties with the section in regard to starch, if I can have the unanimous consent of the House.

There was no objection.

Mr. REED. I just want to point out what seems to me a very flagrant inconsistency both in the purpose and object of this provision in regard to starch. We have already provided that there should be 15 cents a bushel duty upon potatoes, the raw material out of which this starch is made. Out of a bushel of potatoes you can make 10 pounds of starch. At the present rate of duty that gives a protection of 20 cents, which is 5 cents for the manufacturer, in addition to 15 cents which has already been put upon the raw material. It is proposed to reduce the tariff on starch to 1 cent, which will give you a tax on the raw material of 15 cents, and a tax on the manufactured article of 10 cents, an inconsistency that is very obvious. In addition to that, the sole object of putting 15 cents upon a bushel of potatoes must be to increase the market for that article of farm produce. Now, one-half of the potatoes which are produced in this country are sold to starch factories. If those factories cease, then one-half the market for the potatoes of the farmer, whom we desire to protect, will be destroyed. So that with one hand you retain the duty for the benefit of the farmer, and in order to strike the manufacturer you incidentally take away one-half of the market which the farmer has for his potatoes; and in addition to that you are guilty of the gross inconsistency of having a larger tax—to use the phraseology you delight to employ—upon the raw material than you have upon the manufactured article. There is now only an increase of one-quarter in the present law, and under your proposed law there is a decrease of one-quarter. I suppose those considerations will hardly move you, because it is impossible for the House to know precisely what has gone on in the private consultations with regard to this matter, so it is difficult to respond to the reasoning that may have moved the committee.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I want to ask you whether you really believe a reduction of 1 cent a pound on starch is going to destroy the entire manufacture of starch in this country?

Mr. REED. I have not said that.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Is not your whole argument based on that?

Mr. REED. My whole argument is based upon the idea that with regard to potato starch the effect will be to injure the industry in some places and destroy it in others. The gentleman from Ohio, if he has done me the honor to listen on the various occasions when I have addressed the House, will find that I have never made extravagant statements as to the effect of any part or portion of this bill. I have not felt that in each instance where I had occasion to address the House it was necessary in any way to make rhetorical statements with regard to these matters. But I do know that in my own State, in the county of Aroostook, where this industry is the principal money crop of the farmers—that from which they obtain the money which they have to use outside of their personal subsistence—the money comes largely from the sale of potatoes to starch factories.

I recollect with great distinctness that in the Forty-seventh Congress there was a great effort made by the starch manufacturers to cause a change in the tariff on account of the injury which was done them in the present law by the admission of dextrine and other substances made out of starch at a rate of duty which enabled the starch manufacturers to evade the tariff. I know what the effect of that was, and I am quite sure what the effect of this will be, namely, that in a great many places it will stop the factories, and in others it will injure them, and that the tendency of it is to lessen the market of the farmer for his potatoes. It is obvious that must be the result.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We are very large exporters of starch, which clearly indicates that that industry is upon an independent basis. We exported in the last fiscal year over 7,000,000 pounds of starch.

Mr. REED. Not potato starch.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We are also very large exporters of potatoes, having exported several hundred thousand bushels of potatoes.

Mr. DINGLEY. We have imported, not exported, potatoes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I am speaking of exports and I have the list before me.

Mr. DINGLEY. We have not exported potatoes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There was an exportation of potatoes in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, of over 434,000 bushels.

Mr. DINGLEY. But the last fiscal year was the year ending June 30, 1888, and in that year there was no exportation of potatoes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. But we have not got the returns for that year.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is only on certain portions of the border that there are any potatoes exported.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We are producers of a surplus of potatoes, just as we are producers of a surplus of corn, and as a rule that surplus causes the product to sell at free-trade prices whether there be a tariff or not. Now, I am very glad to find a recognition on the part of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] of one fact, and that is that this bill does retain the duty on potatoes, whereas he, I think, and certainly others on his side, have heretofore claimed that under the vegetable clause potatoes were put on the free-list.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What is the provision in this bill in regard to potatoes?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I refer you to your colleague from Maine [Mr. REED], who has just cited it.

Mr. DINGLEY. But you impose a tariff of 15 cents a bushel on the raw material, potatoes, while you put only 10 cents a bushel upon them when they are manufactured in the form of potato starch.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I recognize that fact; but I also recognize another fact, namely, that potatoes being a general product like corn, wheat, and cotton, if we have a surplus, that surplus is sold in the market independent of any effect of the duty, and the fact that we are large exporters of starch is further evidence of the truth of that proposition.

Mr. DINGLEY. But do you think it fair to put a higher duty upon the raw material than upon the manufactured product?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I do not hold the proposition of the gentleman from Maine, as generally urged, that the higher the duty the lower the price. It is only where you are producing a surplus under such conditions as do not permit the formation of a trust or a combination that a duty is inoperative. I recognize the soundness of the gentleman's proposition as applied to this case under those limitations.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I wish the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] would state just what the Mills bill does provide in regard to potatoes. I understood you [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas] to accept an interpretation of it from this side. Now, what is your interpretation?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. My interpretation is the same as that of your colleague [Mr. REED].

Mr. BOUTELLE. That it does not alter the present law?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That potatoes are not put on the free-list.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That there is a duty of 15 cents a bushel on potatoes?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I believe that is it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent was given for the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] to make some remarks on this paragraph of the bill, but the pending question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] to the paragraph in relation to rice.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I should like to have unanimous consent to make some remarks upon this starch paragraph.

Mr. DOCKERY. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I want to speak in my own right under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has no right under the five-minute rule on this paragraph which has been passed.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND. I supposed that this portion of the bill had been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. This paragraph has been passed, but the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] obtained unanimous consent to make some remarks upon it.

Mr. BLAND. Then I demand the regular order and a vote upon the pending question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] made an exhaustive statement upon this paragraph yesterday evening.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I state to the committee that I desire to present some facts that have not been stated at all in this discussion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. But we have passed that paragraph, and therefore the gentleman's facts can not possibly affect the action of the committee now.

Mr. BOUTELLE. They are in connection with starch.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. But we have passed that paragraph.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Very good. Then I desire to offer an amendment to the tariff bill, to come in at this point.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I must object to going back, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. REED. I think that hereafter when the House opens, as there is generally a good deal of confusion when we are going into committee, the Chair ought to call attention to the fact that the paragraph last under consideration is going to be passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair in this case did call special attention to it.

Mr. REED. The notice did not seem to reach us all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] in regard to rice.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask unanimous consent that at this point and in this connection I be permitted to offer my amendment, which directly affects this starch question.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order and that we proceed with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made to the request of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman does not intelligently object. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAND. All the intelligence of the committee is not with the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman allow me to state what I desire to do?

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I insist that the regular order is the offering of amendments to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], upon which he is entitled to the floor. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 366 strike out "or," and in line 367 strike out "free of the outer hull."

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not now in order unless it be an amendment to this amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is exactly what I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not the floor for that purpose. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] is entitled to the floor for five minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Very good; then I will be recognized afterwards.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. The subject of my amendment, Mr. Chairman, is of importance enough to challenge the attention of every member of the House. Rice as a food product has become of almost universal use in this country; and if we are legislating in favor of the poor man or in favor of cheap food products, it seems to me that the time to show we are in earnest upon such a question has now arrived.

Prior to 1846 there was no import duty on rice of any kind; but under the tariff law of that year an import duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem was placed upon rice, which in 1855 was reduced to 15 per cent. ad valorem. The duty upon rice is now a little more than 113 per cent., being very much higher than it was during the war. In the bill now under consideration there is a change in the schedule so that it is claimed there is a reduction, making the duty something over 100 per cent. on cleaned rice and 59 per cent. and a fraction on uncleaned. If this were all there is in this question, I do not know that I should attempt to hold the attention of the House upon this matter; but as it was shown in reference to the sugar schedule yesterday that after certain parties had visited the leading members of the Ways and Means Committee the sugar schedule was changed to the detriment of the consumer, so I find in comparing the bill as it was originally prepared by the Ways and Means Committee with the bill now under consideration a similar transformation has taken place in regard to rice.

For the last forty years or more there have been certain laws defining the classifications, cleaned rice, uncleaned rice, and rice in the rough, or paddy. There has been no definition which has interfered with this classification; and persons in trade and commerce have come to understand exactly what is meant by cleaned rice, uncleaned rice, and rice in the rough, or paddy. The decisions of the Treasury Department are in harmony with this understanding of the trade, so that the definitions are fixed and settled. This seems to have been clearly understood by the Ways and Means Committee when this bill was first prepared; for I find on referring to the bill in its original shape that there is no limitation, no special definition of uncleaned rice. But in the bill now under consideration, when we come to the article of uncleaned rice, we find this definition: "or rice free of the outer hull, and still having the inner cuticle on." That, apparently, is an innocent innovation upon the existing rice schedule. Upon its face it would seem to be in the interest of all persons concerned. But when you come to look at the condition of things prevailing in the rice trade, you see that this sectional hand which is apparent all through the bill is made manifest on this subject; then you find that the producers of rice, the persons who are interested in keeping the price up on this food product, have had their influence with the Ways and Means Committee, and that this definition, instead of being something which will aid the consumer of the product, will have a direct tendency to increase the price of the article. Now, that came about, Mr. Chairman, in this way: I am told——

Mr. DOCKERY. I would like to ask the gentleman whether in this bill there is an increase of the duty on rice, or whether there is a reduction.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. There is apparently a decrease of the duty on uncleaned rice, because under the schedule in the existing law the duty on uncleaned rice is 1½ cents per pound, or 71.52 per cent. ad valorem; and it is claimed that this bill makes the duty 1¼ cents per pound, or 59.60 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then this bill proposes a decrease on the present rate.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I would like a few minutes more time.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will be allowed five minutes additional.

Mr. BLAND. I object. Let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the time of the gentleman from Illinois for five minutes?

Mr. BLAND. I object.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I hope I may have time to answer the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY]. He is apparently honest in his question, and I desire to show him that while the schedule in this bill proposes upon its face to reduce the duty on rice, yet the practical result will be to increase the duty.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the request of the gentleman from Illinois for additional time will be granted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] objects.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] has made a statement in reference to the rice schedule which he has not yet had full opportunity apparently to develop. I should be obliged to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] if he would withdraw his objection and allow the gentleman from Illinois to develop his argument, for I can assure the gentleman that there is nothing in the argument; nevertheless, I should be glad if an opportunity were given to present it.

Mr. BLAND. We have heard that argument here for nearly a month. These speeches simply go over what we heard in the general debate. If we are to leave here before September, let us proceed to business and stop this eternal political discussion. I object to it.

Mr. REED. I am not surprised that a gentleman on the other side objects to this discussion. I think it very natural.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, if I can be allowed——

The CHAIRMAN. Objection has been made.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I am, for my own part, entirely willing that the gentleman from Illinois should have additional time, but I have no desire to press that request upon the House in the face of the objections which have been presented. I will endeavor just now, unless consent is given that the gentleman may have additional time to finish his argument, to make a brief reply to the position he has taken.

It has been quite the fashion for gentlemen who profess to have had superior opportunities to study these economic questions to impute either ignorance, or sometimes perhaps worse motives, to gentlemen on this side of the Chamber, and the remarks which have just been made by the gentleman from Illinois are a signal illustration of the fact that when a gentleman talks about an item in this bill he ought to be sure first that he knows something about it or understands it. That gentleman is generally well informed on anything he undertakes to discuss, but I respectfully submit that he has not studied this subject with the care its importance deserves, especially when the gentleman has endeavored to annex to this discussion the idea of sectionalism, which he charges against my colleagues on the committee.

It requires but brief and indifferent examination of the records of the Treasury Department to convince any gentleman who will take the trouble to inquire, that the definition he seeks to strike out of the clause of the pending bill is not only a necessary definition, in order to secure a fair enforcement of the tariff law with reference to the item it embodies, but in order to prevent constantly growing frauds upon the revenues. It is true that the article of rice has stood upon the tariff schedules in the form, as stated by the gentleman, for many years; but this item in the bill, like a thousand others in the law bearing upon the tariff schedules generally, has been evaded by cunning and curious devices and contrivances as much as any schedule all along the line.

Rice is a grain which, like wheat, rye, and other small grain, has two cuticles—first, the outer husk or chaff, and when inclosed in the hull in that form is called rough rice or "paddy." In order to make rice perfectly clean it is necessary that both of these cuticles or skins shall be removed, and that has been the uniform regulation of the Treasury Department. The gentleman could have found it out by slight inquiry, but he seems to have neglected his opportunity.

Now, sir, it has been found on trials in the courts where this question has been raised that rice has been brought in almost completely cleaned, but still in a condition which excludes it from the Treasury definition; brought in at San Francisco or New Orleans in this condition, and in cases made against the collector for charging the duty on clean rice those cases have gone to the jury. The cases have been tried, and, as in most cases, the jury have found against the Government, and hence the Treasury Department has been embarrassed almost as much as in any other small item in the tariff to administer the law with reference to the collection of the duty on rice. Cargoes have been brought in in this condition which were required to be put in the simplest machine, built at the smallest expense, and brushed or refined by an air-blast or by friction at an insignificant cost per bushel, and the consequence has been that under these facts rice which was practically clean, but which still had the inner cuticle, or even dust adhering to it, has been brought in at the lower rate of duty and brushed, or simply exposed to an air-blast to remove the cuticle or dust, and thereby come in competition with clean rice which paid the full and higher tariff duty.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, as I said before the gentleman from Georgia addressed himself to the Chair, for more than forty years the schedule of rice has been found to work well in this country; the decisions of the Treasury Department have been uniform, and there has been no trouble. But since this bill was first reported to the House several cargoes of rice were stopped at the port of Savannah and other Southern ports, and this question was raised; and in view of that fact, this question having been raised by the Southern rice planters, the interpolation was made in the bill and an entirely new classification was presented, such as we now find presented for our adoption here.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Will the gentleman pardon me to ask where he gets his information?

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Yes, sir; I will give the information with pleasure. Partly from Mr. Maney, an importer of New York; from Mr. Talmage, another importer of New York.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. That is sufficient.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. And a practical analysis of the entire subject presented by the New York press.

Mr. REED. If the gentlemen on the other side would favor us with a little more specific information at times, we might get along a little better with the consideration of this bill.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Now, Mr. Chairman, under this new classification proposed by the majority of the Ways and Means Committee, nine-tenths of the rice which has been heretofore imported as uncleaned rice will be excluded, and will have to pay the higher duty, and the object of the definition of uncleaned rice in this bill is for that purpose.

This brings me to the point where I desire to answer the question of the gentleman from Missouri, who asks if the duty on uncleaned rice has not been lowered. It has been lowered a quarter of a cent per pound, but under the definition, as the parties who are familiar with this subject claim, nine-tenths will be excluded and will be compelled to pay a duty of 2 cents per pound, or 100 per cent. and a fraction ad valorem.

The gentleman says there is no trouble about this, and from his statement it would seem there was to be none. I confess, Mr. Chairman, a definition which has answered the purposes of this Government for more than forty years on the importation of this food product ought to be sufficient now, and especially so when the duty upon rice is kept as high as it is. During the war, when the Government was reaching for every avenue or source of revenue, the duty upon rice was not as much as is proposed in the present bill.

Now, if that be so, why is it the Southern planter desires this increase of duty upon imported rice? The statistics show that there is over 50 per cent. more rice raised in this country now than there was before the war. The statistics show that in Louisiana and the Carolinas it is a constantly increasing crop in value and amount. The statistics also show that it is a crop that the planter receives a higher price per pound for than he did before the war. Now, I ask the gentlemen who claim to be in the interest of the people of this country, in the interest of furnishing them a food product which shall be cheap, why a crop that is increasing every year in amount, with a gradual ascending scale in price, should be protected by an import duty higher than it was before the war?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I desire to state in the outset that I do not represent the rice industry. My residence is far in the interior. I have no relation to those who are engaged in the cultivation of tide-water rice. There was a stricture or so, however, made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], of which some notice ought to be taken. He charged the gentlemen who reported this bill or those who changed its original form in this respect with sectionalism.

Where the foundation for that charge can be found, he has not yet disclosed. There is no foundation for it. On the contrary, when he seeks to strike out this definition, he is, although he may not be aware of it (I hope the gentleman will not be offended for imputing to him a want of knowledge), defending a corner on rice or on the cleaning of rice, which is an actual fraud on the honest importer. I want to say here, without intending any reflection on his sources of information, that one of the gentlemen to whom he referred, Mr. Talmage, of New York, is an importer of this peculiar kind of uncleaned rice, and he is making his profit on that margin which is afforded by the present rulings of the Treasury Department, enabling him to bring in the rice which he uses at a lower rate of duty, cleaning it at a trifling cost, and then putting it on the market as a perfectly clean rice in competition with that which has been honestly imported. Now, sir, if a defeat of this little scheme by which importers are seeking to put up their little cleaning establishments in Savannah, in Charleston, and in New Orleans, and make their fortunes, will be the result, the gentleman is welcome to any credit which he can make out of his discovery, and welcome to any reputation which he can secure by the charge of sectionalism on those who attempt to defeat this scheme and this proposition. That is the whole of it, Mr. Chairman.

Let us see further how it will operate. Of the regular cleaned rice imported into this country there were 33,000,000 pounds in round numbers. Of the inferior article, or rather the article which is imported as uncleaned rice and brought in at the lower rate of duty, there were, I believe, about 8,000,000 pounds.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Four million.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. In order to be entirely accurate I have referred to the figures, and instead of 8,000,000 I should have said 4,000,000, because I knew it was about 12 per cent. of the entire importation of the cleaned rice. Now, I ask the gentleman if he is aware that the Treasury report for the next twelve months will show at least a double importation of the uncleaned rice; and I ask him if he is aware that at the time Mr. Talmage was flitting about these corridors here and giving him the information upon which he is acting to-day, there were cargoes of the Batavian rice and others already anchored in the port at Savannah, and that there were other cargoes on the way, the owners of which were seeking to take advantage of the fact that there was no definition of uncleaned rice in the tariff schedule? I presume the gentleman was not aware of the fact or else he would not have taken the position he has taken here, which does him no credit and which certainly does not illustrate his fairness.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I withdraw it, and move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLIOTT].

Mr. ELLIOTT. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the proper test of the correctness of this definition to which the gentleman refers is to ascertain what meaning was given to it at the time when uncleaned rice first became known in our tariff laws.

In 1862 this expression "uncleaned rice" was for the first time used, and at this point I will read from the record of the debate a petition which was presented at that time by Mr. Sargent, of California. Mr. Sargent said:

In support of the amendment I send to the Clerk's desk to be read a communication signed by the East India importers of the city of San Francisco, and of several United States officials employed in the custom-house of that port, which I commend to the attention of members.

The Clerk read as follows:

"SAN FRANCISCO, January 1, 1862.

"GENTLEMEN: The undersigned importers of East India rice goods at the port of San Francisco, in view of the possible change in the tariff during the present session, very respectfully call your attention to the great importance of securing in any new bill the same ratios of discrimination in favor of uncleaned rice as are afforded under the bill which went into operation August 5, 1862. The consumption of rice in California amounts to 25,000,000 pounds per annum. The imports consist of cleaned rice—namely, rice with the inner skin removed and uncleaned rice, or rice with the outer husks only removed, and paddy. The cleaned rice is imported almost exclusively by Chinese; the latter description by American houses who have it cleaned in our rice mills, in the erection of which a large amount of American capital has been invested.

"The cleaned rice at places of export costs more than twice as much as the uncleaned, and a specific duty upon all grades of rice would manifestly be unjust, and would speedily drive the entire business into the hands of the Chinese instead of the American importers, and besides give to the East India cooly the profits upon cleaning instead of to the laborers of California, where it properly belongs.

"We therefore respectfully request that you will give this subject your attention should there be any change in the tariff during the present session, and beg you to secure for the American importer and for American labor that protection from their own Government which they have a right to demand.

"Importers of uncleaned rice lose from 10 to 40 per cent. in cleaning here, and it costs on an average 50 cents per 100 pounds to clean and fit it for consumption; and in the event of the character of the importations being changed by a proper discrimination in favor of uncleaned rice the cost of cleaning, amounting to $125,000 per annum, would go into the hands of the American instead of the East Indian laborer.

"We have the honor to remain, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

"F. G. CARY.
"FALKNER, BELL & CO.
"MACONDRAY & CO.
"McNEIL & CO.
"R. FEUERSTEIN & CO.
"W. T. COLEMAN & CO.
"DICKSON, DE WOLF & CO.
"FLINT, PEABODY & CO.
"DANIEL GIBB & CO.
"H. F. EDWARDS.
"KOOPMANSCHAP & CO.
"EDWARDS & BAILEY.
"ALSOP & CO.
"WM. M. GREENWOOD.

"Hon. MILTON S. LATHAM,
"Hon. JAMES A. McDOUGALL,
"Senators.
"Hon. A. A. SARGENT,
"Hon. THOMAS G. PHELPS,
"Members of Congress representing the State of California at Washington.

"At the earnest solicitation of East India importers, we have carefully examined the annexed memorial to the California delegation in Congress, and fully approve of the same.

"C. H. McNULTY,
"United States Examiner for East India Goods.
"B. W. MUDGE,
"United States Appraiser for East India Goods."

It will be seen, Mr. Chairman, that in the petition I have read, which was sent to Congress upon this very subject by the men who were then the only persons in this country engaged in the business, there is found the precise language which the Committee of Ways and Means have incorporated in this bill as a definition of uncleaned rice, to wit, "rice with the outer husk only removed." This petition was presented in 1862, and I have here a copy of a letter dated in 1863 from Mr. Chase, the then Secretary of the Treasury, in which he gives precisely the same definition, and I have also extracts from documents on file in the Treasury Department showing that at that time it was conceded upon all hands that uncleaned rice was precisely the article which is described by the bill of the committee.

GENERAL APPRAISER'S OFFICE, Boston, July 28, 1863.

SIR: So much of the eighth section of the tariff act of July, 1862, as refers to the article of rice designates three articles, and imposes on each a distinct and different rate of duty.

1. Paddy.—Paddy is rice, or rice-grain, in its calyx or hull, or, in other words, unhulled rice.

2. Cleaned rice.—This is the rice of commerce, and is paddy divested (1) of its hull or calyx, (2) of its inner cuticle or dowse, which adheres to the grain after the hull is disengaged, and (3) of the dowse or fine meal and dust which is found in the rice after this inner cuticle by friction is disengaged from it.

The process of turning paddy into rice—cleaned rice—is simple. The paddy is run through sand or hulling stones, and is then passed through a fanning-mill, by which the grains are entirely cleared from the chaff or hull. The grain is then thrown into the mortar and subjected to friction, and passed through other cleaning and fanning processes. This second winnowing leaves the rice free from dowse meal or dust, and presents a grain of a pearly appearance, which then becomes the true rice of our commerce.

3. Uncleaned rice.—All the rice which comes to the United States directly from the East Indies has undergone the first process above described, either by running it through stones or by the use of the mortar and pestle. That is, the paddy has been divested more or less perfectly of its chaff or outer hull. None of it arrives separated from its inner cuticle, part of the cuticle being still on the grain, and the rest of it in the form of fine meal and dust mixed in with the rice. East Indian rice is always exported in this manner. No cargo of rice imported into Boston or New York is ever put on the market or sold as cleaned rice. It is not considered an article which can be used or ready for the jobbing or retail trade; and if sold as imported, both seller and purchaser understand that it is uncleaned, or, as they usually term it, "cargo style." It is sent to the rice mills to be dressed or cleaned before it is put on the market as an article for consumption.

The residuum of the paddy, this inner cuticle and dust, forms a distinct article of trade, and is called rice-meal. In the Carolinas it is usually sold at about 40 cents a bushel, and is used as food for cattle. In New York and Boston it is sold for similar purposes.

It has been stated that this meal or dust is an article put into the rice to prevent the weavel from entering it. This is probably a mistake. There is no evidence of it, at least I have found none. No dealer in rice that I have met with believes it. An analysis made in Boston by Dr. Charles T. Jackson proved it to be free from any foreign substance whatever.

If it be true, however, that a poisonous substance is found in this East Indian rice (the Tariff Committee had a sample of it before them when the act of 1862 was framed) this fact alone affords ample reason for Congress designating it uncleaned.

Several cargoes or parts of cargoes of East Indian rice have recently been imported as cleaned rice and paid the highest rate of duty, but the shipments were made from Germany or England, where the article had undergone the cleaning process. The cost of cleaning it in this country I understand to be about three-quarters of a cent a pound.

I have not the least doubt Congress intended this very article of East Indian rice as the uncleaned rice designated. It appears to have been the intention of Congress to modify the act of 1861.

I inclose herewith a copy of a statement made to me by the foreman of the rice-mill at New York. The statement was not made under oath, but the party making it was both frank and intelligent.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOMAS McELRATH,
United States General Appraiser.

I. L. GOODRICH, Esq.,
Collector, etc.

Statement made by Charles Rowan, foreman of the rice mill at the foot of Jefferson street, New York. (Statement made in answer to my interrogations.—T. McElrath.)

I am not the superintendent of these mills. They are called the New York Rice Mills. My name is Charles Rowan. I am the foreman. I have been in the business for twenty-six years. The mill is not running now, as there is no rice to clean in the market. Several cargoes of East Indian rice have lately arrived in New York, but not direct from the East Indies. The rice was cleaned at Hamburg or London. The East Indian rice which is brought to the United States directly from Calcutta or other places is always called unclean rice; or, I mean, it is always understood to be uncleaned. It contains a part of the dowse, that is what we call it, or the meal. Sometimes it contains the whole of it.

This dowse is an inner skin, and is entirely different from the hull. This inner skin must always be separated from the rice before the rice is merchantable. I mean merchantable as an article of food or to the retail trade. Rice from South Carolina either comes here as paddy or is divested of this inner skin before it is shipped. The East Indian rice always has this skin on. I do not consider the dust which is found in East Indian rice as that which makes it uncleaned rice, but the inner skin in the grain is what I consider makes it unfit to be sold as an article for consumption. The dust, in part at least, may be made by the weavel or sand bug, a small insect peculiar to rice. It may partly be made by attrition.

The rice used in the United States always has this skin and this meal or dowse taken from it. It is separated in these mills by friction and fanning, and is quite a different and independent process from that of hulling. Whenever we say East Indian rice at the mill we mean—that is, we all understand it to mean unclean rice; that is, rice which has to be cleaned before it is sold to the merchants. The Patua rice is not cleaned rice, but is partly so.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, September 10, 1863.

SIR: Your letter of August 10, 1863, is received, asking for instructions as to the proper application of the terms "paddy," "cleaned," and "uncleaned" rice, as found in section 8 of the tariff act of July 14, 1862. Paddy is rice or rice-grain in its natural condition as first removed from the straw; that is, the grain in its calyx or hull.

"Cleaned" is when the grain is divested of its hull or calyx, the inner cuticle which adheres to the grain after the hull is disengaged, and of the fine meal and dust which are found in the rice after this inner cuticle is by friction removed; or, in other words, when it is in a condition suitable for culinary uses. "Uncleaned" applies when the grain has been divested of the calyx or hull, advanced from its condition as paddy, but not perfectly freed from the inner cuticle, dust, etc.

The presence of dust, either of foreign matter or of particles of rice, resulting from abrasion or the work of insects, I do not consider as affecting the classification.

I am, etc.,

S. P. CHASE, Secretary of Treasury.

I. L. GOODRICH, Collector, Boston, Mass.

From that day on at various times controversies have arisen which have put the Treasury Department to a vast amount of trouble. As the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] has stated, there have been many suits instituted against the Government, involving large costs, the importers generally obtaining judgment against the Government in consequence of their facilities for procuring the testimony of experts—men engaged in the same business. To such an extent has this gone that the Secretary of the Treasury lately urged the propriety of defining uncleaned rice, and also rice of the other classes, so that the Government might be saved from these numerous suits arising out of matters which are really of very little importance. If the gentleman will refer to the statistics, he will find that while of granulated rice, another grade, some forty millions are annually imported, and of clean rice dutiable and free about forty-three millions more, of this class of rice there were only about 4,000,000 pounds imported last year, amounting in value to about seventy or eighty thousand dollars; so that this great outcry is made about an article of import which amounts altogether in value to only about $80,000, a business in which very few persons are interested, one of the principal individuals engaged in it being the gentleman who has been referred to here, Mr. Talmage, of New York. The letter of the Secretary is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., March, 1888.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, in which, referring to the classification under the tariff acts of the different conditions of rice, you request to be informed whether the Department experiences any difficulty in classifying such commodities and whether there is any need for a clearer definition thereof by legislation.

In reply you are informed that it is very desirable, in view of the many questions which have heretofore arisen between importers and the officers of the customs as to what should be considered "cleaned" and "uncleaned" rice, "paddy" and "rice meal" and "rice flour," that these several conditions of rice should be clearly and distinctly defined in any tariff act which may hereafter be enacted.

The clause for "cleaned" rice should definitely specify the character of that commodity; that is, whether it is intended to mean the cleaned and polished rice of commerce, ready and fit for table use, or not; and the character of the "uncleaned" rice should be particularly set forth. "Paddy" is understood on all sides to consist of rice not hulled; but as to what constitutes "rice meal" and "rice flour" controversies have heretofore arisen as to whether the article called "granulated rice" comes within the scope of the clause for those commodities as now contained in the statute. On this point I would respectfully refer you to the Department's letter to Hon. A. S. Hewitt, chairman of the subcommittee on Ways and Means, dated respectively the 29th and 31st of March, 1886, contained on pages 42 and 45 of Appendix A of the "Report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the Collection of Duties," dated December 13, 1886.

I may mention that under the provisions of the then existing tariff acts for "cleaned" and "uncleaned" rice, large importations of so-called Patna rice, that is, rice from which the hull and inner cuticle had been removed, were made at New York, Boston, and San Francisco, in the years 1874, etc., which were classified by the collectors at the ports as "cleaned" rice, but which the importers claimed to be "uncleaned." The importers protested, appealed, and instituted suits for the recovery of the difference in the duties between "cleaned" and "uncleaned" rice and upon trial succeeded in recovering the same, the jury finding, from the proofs submitted, that such rice was the "uncleaned" rice of commerce. This necessitated the refund of large amounts of duties, including interest and costs; and a clear and succinct statement as to what is meant by the terms of the statute would avoid such confusion in future cases.

Very respectfully,

I. H. MAYNARD, Assistant Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM ELLIOTT.

I also read the following:

TRYING TO EVADE DUTY BY IMPORTING SO-CALLED UNCLEAN FOREIGN RICE.

[From the New York Times.]

NEW ORLEANS, March 15.

The interest that has existed in the rice trade of late on account of the free importation of so-called unclean foreign rice at Atlantic ports was given additional strength to-day by the arrival of a considerable quantity at this port. It was generally known that some rice was on the way here; in fact, samples of the unclean rice imported through New York were some weeks ago submitted to the appraiser at this port to have him pass upon them, and thus pave the way for the ready entry of the consignments expected here later. Appraiser Bouny, after submitting the samples to local experts, refused to appraise them as unclean rice, the experts having declared that the samples were in reality clean rice. The final process of brushing has been evidently omitted with the intention of defrauding the revenue. It was thought that this decision of the appraiser would have the effect of turning away the expected importation from this port; but this does not seem to be the case, as 683 sacks arrived yesterday on the steamer Professor, and other lots are on the way.

The arrival of this rice, and the attempt to enter it as unclean to secure the benefit of lower duty, caused considerable excitement at the Produce Exchange, and a formal request was at once signed by members engaged in the rice trade, as follows:

"We, the undersigned, members of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, interested in the rice trade, certify that we have examined sample of 683 sacks Patna rice ex steam-ship Professor, and are of the opinion that said rice has been thoroughly milled and afterward mixed with flour to make it appear in the unclean instead of the clean state."

The consignment is said to be the property of Perseverance Rice Mill. This case promises to open up a very interesting question, and will doubtless be eventually appealed to Washington.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it is a favorite argument with some people who find themselves occupying an untenable position to assume that their opponents are ignorant of the matter under discussion, and that all the information on the subject is confined to themselves.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. The gentleman must be describing his own party.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I do not mean to say that the gentleman from Georgia occupies that position; but he can not put me down on the amendment I propose here by claiming that I am ignorant of the subject I am attempting to discuss. Before he undertakes to do that I would like to have him explain why the Ways and Means Committee, of which he is a distinguished member, when they first presented this tariff bill, adopted the same classification of rice that has existed in our tariff for so many years; and then I should like to have him explain why, after certain Southern planters and importers visited these halls and consulted with members of the committee, this definition which I seek to have stricken out was interpolated in the bill as we now have it. That information would be more interesting to members of this House than it is to charge ignorance upon me.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Will the gentleman pardon a suggestion? I desire to inform him that most of my information was obtained from his friend Mr. Talmage. I looked through his statements, and arrived at the conclusion I have reached, with the aid of other gentlemen familiar with the subject.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Well, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman gained his information from that source it was very unkind on his part to traduce Mr. Talmage as he did.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I hope the gentleman does not understand me as having traduced Mr. Talmage; I had no such intention.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. If the gentleman obtained all his information from Mr. Talmage, I can say to him that I stand on more fortunate ground; for, besides that information which has been furnished by this importer on this all-absorbing subject, I have availed myself of all the information that could be furnished by the importers, North and South, and of the examination which was had before the Ways and Means Committee in the Forty-ninth Congress, when some of the most distinguished planters of the South were before that committee and gave their evidence. With this combined information I am clear in my conviction that the interpolation in this bill to which I have called attention is intended to work a detriment to the consumer and a benefit to the planter at the South.

The gentleman in his argument substantially admits that the effect of this restriction in the bill will be to change the classification of a large amount of rice which has been imported into this country under the definition of "uncleaned," and to place it in the schedule of cleaned rice, upon which the higher import duty will be paid, the effect of which, using the arguments of our Democratic friends, will be that the price to the consumer will be enhanced.

If this were a struggling industry, if it were an "infant," and needed such enormous protection as is afforded in the Mills bill, I would have nothing to say; but the statistics, coming to my aid again, show that no business prosecuted North or South pays any better than the cultivation of rice. Mr. Trenholm, of South Carolina, who was before the Committee on Ways and Means in the Forty-ninth Congress, gave it as his deliberate judgment——

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I can inform the gentleman of something else he does not know—that half of the rice plantations have been abandoned.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Well, I will come to that. Mr. Trenholm, in his evidence before the Ways and Means Committee in the Forty-ninth Congress, stated that 60 bushels of rice were not an unusual yield per acre.

Mr. ELLIOTT. His statement was precisely one-half of that—30 bushels; and I can refer the gentleman to the very page.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] has expired.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order. There are already pending an amendment and an amendment to an amendment. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLIOTT] to strike out the last word.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I withdraw that amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I move——

Mr. ELLIOTT. I move to amend by striking out the last two words.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will let me finish.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the pro forma amendment as being made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLIOTT] says that 30 bushels per acre were, according to Mr. Trenholm's evidence, a fair average production. Sir, that gentleman did state in his evidence that the yield in many cases was 60 bushels an acre, and where the rice is cultivated to the best advantage, 72 bushels an acre. Now, in view of the fact that rice can be cultivated at a profit when the cleaned rice brings 3 cents a pound, the net profit at 60 bushels per acre would be $36 an acre. That is the net profit as given by parties who are familiar with the cultivation of rice. This being the profit on 60 bushels per acre, I ask members of the House why the rice product of this country should be protected to the enormous extent proposed in this bill. If it be true that rice can be produced at a profit when sold at 3 cents per pound cleaned, then, assuming the average yield to be only 30 bushels per acre, as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLIOTT] now states, that is a larger profit than is made by the wheat growers of Dakota, Minnesota, or any of the Western States. That is a larger profit than can be made upon any of the farm products of the North which the gentlemen on the other side, in this bill, seek to strike down by placing many of them upon the free-list. Yet the gentleman from Georgia, who says there is nothing sectional in this proposition, insists, by his action, which is in harmony with the committee, that an import duty of more than 100 per cent. shall be retained upon cleaned rice. If that is not sectionalism, I ask the gentleman to explain what it is.

Mr. ELLIOTT. As to the production of rice, I have the testimony here of Mr. W. L. Trenholm, of South Carolina, and it shows the inaccuracy of the information furnished to the House during this debate by the other side on these subjects. The statements just made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] are a fair average of the kind of information which has been given to the House. Let me read from this testimony to which the gentleman refers:

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. How many bushels of rice are produced to the acre?

Mr. TRENHOLM. Thirty bushels to the acre is an average production. There are favored spots that produce 60 bushels to the acre.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Read further on. Does he not say that he has known 72 bushels to the acre?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Trenholm goes on to say further:

I have known 72 bushels to the acre to be produced on a small area of 3 or 4 acres.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is an example of the accuracy of the facts stated on that side of the House. The gentleman asserted that Mr. Trenholm stated that the average yield of rice was 60 bushels to an acre. In reply to that statement I appeal to the record, where it is shown that Mr. Trenholm stated the average production of rice to be 30 bushels to the acre. It is on a par with other statements made by gentlemen. The gentleman from Illinois said that the rice production is now twice as much as before the war.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I said 50 per cent. greater.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Before the war the production was 215,000,000 pounds. Last year it was 156,088,890 pounds. The gentleman evidently got his evidence from some tables used in argument upon the floor by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. He stated that the ante-bellum production was 115,000,000, a mistake of only 100,000,000 in 215,000,000 pounds. That statement is on a par with the statement that the average production is 60 bushels to the acre. Not more than 50 per cent. of the area formerly cultivated in rice is now cultivated in South Carolina.

It is a crop subject to entire destruction. On the Savannah River, on account of a freshet last August, the entire crop of a number of large plantations was lost. Not a pound was made. It is peculiarly subject to such disasters. In consequence of the peculiar character of the industry, not only is the crop subject to annihilation, but frequently the plantations are almost wholly destroyed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Do you claim their entire annihilation?

Mr. ELLIOTT. In certain localities at times, yes, the entire annihilation of the crop.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GEAR. I wish to say a word. I have presented petitions not only from dealers but from consumers of cleaned rice. We are told by gentlemen on the other side that the perfection of tariff legislation was the Robert J. Walker tariff of 1846.. That tariff put a duty of 20 per cent. on cleaned rice. The reduction of the tariff of 1857 put rice at 15 per cent. only. Why do the gentlemen on the other side put 100 per cent. duty on rice to-day in the present bill? You put vegetables, you put fresh meats, eggs, beans, pease, cucumbers, beets, potatoes, and wool of the Western States on the free-list, while you put rice, of which the people use 4 pounds per capita, or 250,000,000 pounds annually, at a duty of over 100 per cent. Why do you this? Why do you put sugar at 68 per cent. in the bill? It is now 82 per cent. How can you answer to the people for this inequality of taxation.

Gentlemen on the other side say we use sectional arguments. Why are you so sectional in your action when you reduce the rates of duty upon all the Northern products and the Western products, while you put upon clean rice a duty of over 100 per cent, in this bill? Why do you do this, when you say that you regard the tariff of 1846 as the perfection per se of that sort of legislation? You gentleman on the Democratic side have much to say about the poor. Why do you not aid this class of people by a reduction on rice, which enters so largely into into the consumption of the poor people of this country? I pause for a reply.

Mr. ELLIOTT. The duty on rice was put there by a Republican Congress. A Democratic Congress is not responsible for it. Prior to 1883 it was 2½ cents on the clean rice. The present Committee on Ways and Means has made a further reduction. The reduction in the duty on rice is much greater than the average reductions on dutiable articles. The average reduction by the bill is about 8 per cent.—on rice it is 18 per cent.

Mr. BAYNE. Thirteen per cent.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Altogether 18 per cent. The chairman of the committee has an amendment that he has offered or will offer that will make the reduction 18 per cent.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Is not the duty proposed in the Mills bill 80 per cent. more than before the war?

Mr. ELLIOTT. That may be. "It is a condition we are confronting, not a theory." [Laughter.] The Republican party is to-day proposing to reduce the duty on rice in behalf of the Chinese to whom they have also given a candidate for the Presidency, and the course of this debate shows they are quite ready to sacrifice the colored laborers of the South for their friends, the Chinese, by giving the latter free rice. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, I beg to read a letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, dated the 22d day of June. He writes:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS,
Washington, D. C., June 22, 1888.

DEAR SIR: In reply to yours of the 18th instant, I have to state that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, the quantity of cleaned rice imported and entered for consumption was 43,055,913 pounds; of uncleaned only 4,642,000 pounds; paddy 2,152 pounds; granulated, or rice-meal 48,526,723 pounds. Inasmuch as the rice-meal, or granulated, is not used generally as a food, it would appear that the greater portion of the foreign rice consumed in the country is imported in the condition of cleaned.

The amount of domestic rice produced in the country was 156,088,890 pounds. Of this there was exported only 644,384 pounds, the remainder being consumed for one purpose or another in the country. You will therefore see that the amount of foreign rice consumed is only about 27 per cent.

While this does not directly answer your question, it may afford you some useful information upon the subject.

I will add that the number of pounds of foreign rice imported and entered for consumption into the port of San Francisco during the year ending June 30, 1887, is as follows:

Rice:	Pounds.
Cleaned, from Hawaiian Islands	9,213,700
Cleaned, from all other countries	30,140,816
Paddy	2,152
Granulated, or rice-meal	1,378,521

This would indicate that the foreign rice is largely consumed on the Pacific coast, presumably by the Chinese. Our own rice is said to be much superior in quality to foreign rice.

Respectfully, yours,

WM. F. SWITZLER,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. WM. ELLIOTT, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. WARNER. I understood the gentleman to state in the discussion of this question that the committee finds itself confronted with a condition and not with a theory upon the rice question. Will the gentleman be kind enough to inform the committee what "condition" exists in regard to rice culture which requires a protective duty of 100 per cent.?

Mr. ELLIOTT. All that the rice planter asks is that his product shall be put upon the same footing with other protected articles which he is compelled to use in the prosecution of his business; that is to say, that the protection should not be denied to him while it is extended to the articles he is compelled to use.

That is all. The condition we find is a tariff of 2½ cents a pound imposed by the Republican party upon this article.

Mr. WARNER. I do not think the gentleman can make his defense by attacking the action of the Republican party. That is not the question now presented.

I want to know what is in the culture of the rice crop which requires a 100 per cent. duty to protect it.

Mr. ELLIOTT. The gentleman will observe that there is no such protection to rice as 100 per cent. Carolina rice is worth anywhere in the markets of the world almost twice as much as the foreign rice.

Mr. GEAR. Then it has double the protection?

Mr. ELLIOTT. By no means; just the contrary. Because there is a duty of 100 per cent. on foreign rice it does not follow that American rice is protected to that extent. As to the exact degree of protection which may be figured out on the basis of the relative value of the rice produced here and foreign rice, gentlemen can figure it out for themselves.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. WARNER. I hope additional time will be granted to the gentleman, because I consumed a part of his time, and a great deal of it has been taken up in interruptions from this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair made a liberal estimate of necessary interruptions.

Mr. GEAR. Will the gentleman from South Carolina permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolin has expired.

Mr. WARNER. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended.

Mr. BLAND. I have objected to extending the time of gentlemen on the other side, and I still object to any further extension. I think we are ready for a vote, and there has been enough talk on this question already.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard the pro forma amendment as being withdrawn, and the question now is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. GEAR. Will the gentleman permit me to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes.

Mr. GEAR. The gentleman from South Carolina states that Carolina rice is worth 100 per cent. more in any market than the foreign rice.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Not exactly that.

Mr. GEAR. Did not the gentleman state that?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I said this: that it is worth anywhere in the markets of the world almost twice as much as foreign rice. I did not say it was worth as much everywhere, but in some markets it is, particularly in England, where I believe it is worth more than that difference. In this country it is not.

Mr. BAYNE. How much more is it worth?

Mr. ELLIOTT. From 2 to 2½ cents per pound more.

Mr. GEAR. I beg the gentleman's pardon, the quotations of Chinese and Japanese rice do not bear out the assertion; in fact they show that the difference is less than three-fourths of a cent a pound.

Mr. ELLIOTT. The gentleman is doubtless becoming confused by different classifications of rice. I have statistics here which show that there is a difference which is equal in some instances to 3 cents a pound.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. If Carolina rice is so much more valuable, why do you want any protection at all?

Mr. BAYNE. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield to allow an answer to that question.

Mr. BAYNE. I want the time for myself. I have yielded all I can.

Rice, Mr. Chairman, is a necessary of life in this country. It is an article of food which is not only necessary to the comfort of many families, but it is absolutely indispensable in many cases as an article of food, whose place can not be supplied by anything else; and yet we have again here the spectacle presented by the gentlemen on the Ways and Means Committee, who sympathize so largely with the overtaxed public, placing rice in their bill at a duty of over 100 per cent.!

According to my information and observation there is no other article in the entire bill that is placed so high as this duty on rice. This duty, too, is a tax, because the amount of rice that we can produce in this country is, I believe, only one-quarter of the consumption. On the three quarters of the consumption the people of the country are required to pay 100 per cent. duty. And for what purpose? To serve a small interest, not as large now as it was many years ago, much like the sugar industry—retrograding; to protect and foster that industry, located in a particular section of one of the States of the Union. While the farm products of men in the Western States and in the Eastern States are put upon the free-list, rice is maintained at a duty of 100 per cent. I do not know that I blame the gentleman from South Carolina so much for getting 100 per cent. duty if he can do it; nor do I blame so much the gentlemen from that section of the country for standing by him. But what must be thought of the Northern Democrat who votes to put the products of the Northern States on the free-list and walks up like a little man between the tellers to put 100 per cent. duty on rice?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, it makes no great consumption of time to state the proposition that is before the House. The bill now under consideration proposes a reduction of the duty on rice. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], who has just taken his seat, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr HOPKINS], who has vexed himself so much on the question this morning, are both resisting this bill, and by resisting it propose to keep the rate on rice and on sugar just where it is now. That will be the result if they defeat this bill.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. McMILLIN. In one moment. Wait until I complete my statement. When they get through with resistance to this bill, if successful in that resistance, in place of the duty being what we propose to make it, a reduction on an average of about 18 per cent., they will leave it as it now stands, and where their party originally put it.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Will not the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. McMILLIN. They will leave the duty where their party said in their platform at the Chicago convention it should remain, instead of at a reduced rate.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. McMILLIN. With pleasure.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman if, under the definition you give for uncleaned rice, that will not exclude a large percentage which is, under the existing law, imported?

Mr. McMILLIN. I will state to the gentleman that under the amendment proposed to be offered to this section the reduction on the rice schedule will be about 18 per cent.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. That does not answer my question at all. I asked you if, under this definition which you have given for uncleaned rice, you will not exclude a large amount that has been heretofore imported as uncleaned rice?

Mr. McMILLIN. I will state to the gentleman that there may have been constructions and evasions——

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Answer the question.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will answer it in my own way. I will not be dictated to as to how I shall answer it. We find under the law that was enacted by the gentleman's party all sorts of frauds are being perpetrated all along the line. One of the objects of this bill is to correct these things and to have a sensible, just, and fair administration of the law. I need only illustrate by stating that one of the crying evils of the present law is that coverings come in untaxed. That is remedied in this bill. So with many other things. It is the purpose to make the law, just so far as we can, and have it enforced as written, to place no premiums on fraudulent invoices or evasions of the law in importations.

Now, to resume what I was about to say. Mr. Chairman, there is a reduction proposed in this bill.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman answer another question?

Mr. McMILLIN. My time is so limited I can not answer. The gentleman has had the floor almost half of the time since the House met this morning, and must excuse me if I decline to allow him to keep it all day.

We propose a reduction of 18 per cent. in the rice schedule. The gentleman is resisting that reduction. If this bill is killed gentlemen on the other side will succeed in keeping the present rate of duty of about 113 per cent. on rice. Furthermore, if the gentleman wants any comfort let him study his own actions. Why, the platform he is boasting so much about, adopted at Chicago, says his party will not reduce any duty, but in lieu thereof will give first, free whisky in the arts, and if that does not sufficiently reduce the revenue, then free whisky for drinking. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the formal amendment is exhausted. If there be no objection it will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I renew it, Mr. Chairman. I am not surprised, after listening to the closing statements of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] in interpreting the Republican platform, that he gave so lame an answer to my question as he did. A man who is incapable of giving a proper construction to a platform as tersely put as the one adopted by the Republican convention in Chicago, is evidently incapable of answering as direct a question as I put to him. When the gentleman talks about free whisky he is indulging in wild imaginings. He can not find free whisky in the Republican platform. When he says the Republican party, in its convention in Chicago, resolved against reducing taxation upon any of the dutiable articles, he gives a construction to that platform not indorsed by any Republican, East, West, North, or South. The Republican party simply states it is in favor of protection to American industries.

It is in favor of protecting American labor, and it is in favor of any law that looks to the well-being of this country upon those two great questions. But these gentlemen on the other side of the House are undertaking to put a construction upon that platform to the effect that the Republicans are in favor of retaining a duty upon every article that is covered by the existing tariff law. After the debate upon the sugar question I should have supposed that gentlemen on the other side would understand that the Republican party is in favor of a reduction of taxation upon at least some of those articles, and I now call their attention to the fact that when the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] introduced his amendment here proposing to reduce the duty upon sugar to an extent which would harmonize it with the tariff upon other articles covered by this bill, every Republican voted in favor of that amendment, and it was opposed solidly by the Democratic members of this House. In view of that fact, I ask the gentleman which party is in favor of maintaining war taxes and which party is in favor of cheap food products for the American people? The gentleman's argument upon the rice question is in harmony with his position upon sugar. The amendment which I have proposed is for the purpose of securing cheap rice. The gentleman could not deny the statement I made here this morning, that that amendment is calculated to give to the food consumer a cheaper product than he can obtain under this bill if it should become a law, and before we get through we will go a step further and move to reduce this tariff of over 100 per cent. on rice in the same proportion we proposed to reduce the tariff on sugar. On all of these food products that are in use in every household the duty should be reduced to as low a limit as is consistent with the needs of the Government and the interest of the laboring people.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will my colleague permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I understood the gentleman to say that every Republican voted in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] to reduce the tariff on sugar 50 per cent. I desire to call his attention to the fact that Mr. MCKENNA, of California, and Mr. FUNSTON, of Kansas, and several other Republicans voted against that amendment, voted with the Democrats.

Mr. CONGER. The exception proves the rule.

Mr. BOUTELLE. How does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] know that they voted that way?

Mr. MCKENNA. There is no question about it at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I accept the gentleman's correction; but he names only two Republicans, one from California and one from Kansas, who did not vote in favor of the amendment. Now I will ask my colleague: Are you in favor of cheap sugar, or are you in favor of retaining war prices?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am opposed to retaining war prices, and therefore I am in favor of the Mills bill.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Did you vote for the Dingley amendment?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am in favor of the Mills bill, which takes twelve millions off sugar. You are opposed to the Mills bill.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Did you vote for the Dingley amendment? [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" on the Democratic side.] I think I have the floor, Mr. Chairman, but I will yield long enough for my colleague to answer my question, whether he voted for the Dingley amendment, reducing by one-half the duty which this bill proposes on sugar.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will take the floor in my own right and answer my colleague.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. You can answer the question in my time. Answer it now.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will answer it in my own time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] is recognized.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I can answer my colleague's inquiry without any hesitation whatever. I voted against the Dingley amendment. It was an amendment introduced here for the purpose of confusing the action of those who are in favor of reducing war taxes. [Jeers on the Republican side.] I shall vote for the Mills bill, which makes a large reduction of the duty on sugar, and my colleague [Mr. HOPKINS] has already indicated that he will vote against that bill.

Now, as I am on the floor, before I take my seat I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, those here or elsewhere will find themselves mistaken who have indulged the belief that some of those sitting on the other side of this Chamber, elected by Republican votes in the West, when the time for final action on this bill arrives will rise above mere partisanship and vote upon this question as the interests of their constituents dictate. The recent debate clearly indicates that every Republican member will, on the final roll-call on this bill, vote against a reduction of taxation and in favor of maintaining the high and unnecessary war taxes in the interests of the protected monopolies.

I am, however, gratified to know that many of the Republican constituents of these gentlemen will join the Democrats of their districts in condemning their course at the ballot-box next November.

As proof of this assertion allow me to call attention to the position of a distinguished member of that party in Illinois whose name is familiar to all Republican members from that State, as one who has been a leader in that party from its foundation until since the Republican convention at Chicago made the platform it did last month. Certainly he will be no stranger to the gentleman from the Seventh district, who is his representative on this floor. I refer to Hon. L. D. Whiting, a prominent farmer living near Tiskilwa, Ill., who has been a resident of Illinois for fifty years. He was the trusted ally of Owen Lovejoy. For eighteen years he represented the Republicans of his district in the State senate. He is a man of a high order of ability and of unquestioned honesty.

Some six months ago he said the issue of tariff reform would dwarf all other issues in this campaign, and expressed a hope that the Republican party would array itself on the side of the people in the impending conflict. He is disappointed in the action of the Republican convention and refuses to support it.

He says that the Republican masses of the country were not fairly represented by the body over which Thurston and Estee presided, and thinks there are hundreds of thousands of Republicans who will not surrender principle at the dictation of a class interest. "I do not like to take my Republicanism from B. F. Jones," he said, "for it is so unlike the doctrine which Abraham Lincoln advocated. WILLIAM WALTER PHELPS is not an acceptable substitute for Wendell Phillips. No protected lumber barons can interpret to me the Republicanism which was taught by the lips of Owen Lovejoy. In the old days the Republican party was not run in the interest of factory and mine owners, and a railroad man controlling $300,000,000 of capital was not supreme dictator."

In an interview with the Chicago Herald correspondent on the 7th instant, relative to the platforms adopted and nominations made at Chicago and St. Louis, he said what I ask the Clerk to read.

Mr. MASON. The gentleman says Mr. Whiting repudiates the Republican platform. Did not the party repudiate him first?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No, sir; he has never been repudiated by your party. He has been faithful to your party until the action of the Republican convention at Chicago.

Mr. MASON. I know that two years ago he was a candidate before the Republican convention for the State senate and was defeated. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, who has the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] has the floor, and declines to yield.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I knew very well that I had touched my colleague [Mr. MASON] "on the raw" when I called attention to the fact that Illinois Republicans are spitting upon the platform of the Chicago convention. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, let the interview be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following:

"I have," continued Senator Whiting, "studied the two platforms chiefly in reference to the tariff planks. The tariff issue now before the country is the most important question we have been called upon to consider since slavery was abolished. The Republican party, through its last convention, transformed itself into a high-tariff and monopoly party. I can not think of the convention that nominated Harrison as a Republican convention. It was a high-tariff and monopoly assemblage. It took an entirely new departure on the tariff, leaving all the grounds it has formerly occupied. When the present war tariff was levied, as a compensation for the direct tax which was laid on manufactured goods, it was conceded by its authors and all supporters that the two, coming in together, would go out together.

"But when the direct taxes were removed from manufactured goods the protectionists managed to retain the high tariff. The country submitted on the ground that the money, so far as it went to the Treasury, was applied to pay off the war debt; but all parties conceded that the time was near at hand when it would be improper to continue this high war tariff. Strong protectionists then said its continuance would be unjust to other interests. But now what do we see? These protected interests, having long enjoyed its advantages, have joined in a combination, offensive and defensive, to make a war tariff a permanency. Their first oracles to broach their scheme were Messrs. RANDALL and KELLEY, who, something more than a year ago, openly advocated that the national revenue should be reduced by the removal of the tax on spirits and tobacco.

"This proposition was then deemed by the people generally to be too absurd for serious consideration. Massachusetts and the East generally (where the protected interests dominate in public affairs) through State conventions and the press gave it their indorsement. The nearly unanimous public sentiment of the West was for retaining the tax on spirits and tobacco and removing it from lumber, coal, salt, and reducing it on the other necessaries of life. The former, through their grangers' alliances and farmers' institutes, were unanimous in demanding such a tariff reduction, but the politicians who secured the representative positions in the State and national conventions were passive and allowed the combined protected interests to shape the revenue plank in the platform.

"I regard the action of the Chicago convention as a new departure, dictated by powerful interests for perpetuating an unjust advantage which the exigency of war had given them. I consider it a robbery of the West to enrich the East. I think it is drawing the life-blood from Western agriculture to give large bounties to a class interest. The programme of the protectionists is to confine their operations to the home market, and, as the mills, their employés and appendages, are ample to manufacture for a continent, they contemplate, through combinations and trusts, to stop production by running on half time and other devices and yet obtain prices for the goods which will give them their desired profits. This tariff, or revenue plank, aims to secure this state of things, and the election of the high-tariff candidates is to obtain the indorsement of the country of this programme. I believe the time has come when the manufacturers of the United States should contemplate in the near future a competition at home and abroad for the trade of the world.

"This country affords so many advantages for such an enterprise that by running on full time and with economies which are now in many cases disregarded their profits will not be reduced and the wages of their employés will be greater because of the increased demand. In the early days of the Republic commerce was counted as one of the great elements of our prosperity. Commerce is a civilizer and enricher of nations. It is contrary to the genius of our institutions and instincts of our people to adopt the Chinese plan proposed by the late high-tariff convention. Though I would not suddenly make radical changes in the tariff, the protected interests should prepare for the application of that sound principle that a business or interest which can not sustain itself is not worth sustaining by others. The American people are rapidly learning that to protect one interest is to do it at some other one's expense.

"I would retain the internal-revenue taxes on spirits and tobacco as one of the permanent sources of revenue. I fully indorse Mr. Blaine when he said, not long ago, that he would tax whisky so long as there was any whisky to be taxed. I fully indorse Presidents Grant, Garfield, Arthur, and Cleveland in their declared purpose to keep the taxes on spirits and tobacco so as to give a proper opportunity for reforming the war tariff. I regard the revenue plank in the high-tariff platform as no less an indorsement of Grant, Garfield and Arthur with their distinguished Secretaries of the Treasury than of Mr. Cleveland. This new departure of the late high tariff convention at Chicago is not only condemnation of Mr. Cleveland but of these distinguished Republican statesmen and of the Republican party up to a very recent period.

"Its success at the polls can not destroy tariff reform, but it will delay it and convulse the country for an indefinite time to the detriment of other reforms. It will continue a system of robbery which the farmers can not much longer endure. Tariff-reform Republicans now face an exigency which taxes to the utmost their wisdom and courage and faithfulness to principle. It seems to be plain that they must refuse to support the doings of the Chicago convention. The majority of Republican tariff reformers will be averse to identifying themselves with the Democratic party, though that party at this juncture, in its platform at St. Louis and doings in Congress, substantially represents their views. It seems to me to be desirable that there shall be some public consultation on the part of such Republicans to decide what action they will take to sustain their principles. If that decision should be to support Mr. Cleveland, the purpose of such support could be publicly made known. In the several Congressional districts of Illinois, and I think the West generally, there should be found a practicable way for all tariff reformers, of whatever party, to combine in supporting a tariff-reform candidate.

"I view with great apprehension the fact that the late Chicago convention was so completely officered and controlled by the great monopolies of the country. There is nothing less than the defeat of the Republican party that can purge it of this dangerous element. Its success would be the success of monopoly. I somewhat anticipate that a real anti-monopoly party must be organized in the near future. On all of the principles which constituted the Republican party in regard to slavery and the war I am as ardent as I ever was. Were those issues present ones I would be as zealous in the cause as ever. I helped to organize the Republican party in Bureau County in 1854, and never from that time till now voted for any candidate for office but a Republican. But I regard principle as above party, and party as but a means to carry out principles. I can not regard the late Chicago convention as Republican. In all its essential features it was a convention of classes and monopolists.

"When you tell your Republican friends this, what do they say?"

"I am sometimes asked when I met with my change of opinion. I reply, 'I have not changed. One year ago,' I say to my Republican questioner, 'you were with me for retaining the taxes on spirits and tobacco, and for making the reduction of national taxes on the necessaries of life. I know of no Republican who then dissented from this proposition. You were with me six months ago, and two months ago, and down to the time of the promulgation of the Chicago platform. If you now indorse that tariff plank you must have changed almost in the twinkling of an eye. You accuse me of change! If you will study your own case you will see where the change comes in.'

"If the occasion called for it I could shout as ardently as ever, 'Free soil, free speech, and free men;' but I do not expect that the high-tariff confederacy will ever induce me to shout for free whisky and free tobacco.

"The national Republican party was formed in Pittsburgh in 1856, and the platform on which Frémont was nominated related to slavery, Mormonism, and the public lands, making no reference whatever to the tariff. The platform on which Mr. Lincoln was nominated in 1860 was slightly injected with incidental protection to please Pennsylvania. The Republicans in Congress in 1858, even those from Massachusetts, joined the Democrats in reducing the tariff, conforming to the principle of a tariff for revenue. The Republican platform in 1864 made no reference to the tariff. From that time up to the last Chicago convention the declarations in regard to the tariff were moderate and constant in favoring a reduction of the war tariff. Mr. Garfield did not lose his standing as a Republican by declaring in his speech in Congress that he was for that kind of protection which led to free trade.

"The high tariffites claim that the system of protection commenced under Washington's administration. That tariff, however, averaged but 8 per cent., and up to the war of 1812 it did not reach 15 per cent. The war of 1812 forced into existence many manufacturing establishments. Henry Clay, with considerable propriety, proposed to protect for a time these infant enterprises. In 1843 Mr. Clay declared that the doctrine of protection was a temporary expedient to protect infant industries which have now grown mostly to maturity, and would not much longer require protection."

"Does protection in any instance within your knowledge increase the pay of the laborer?"

"I think that in no case within my knowledge does it increase the laborer's pay. The high tariff has tended strongly to derange labor by stimulating into existence more establishments than the country needed. Many of the strikes and lock-outs have been caused by the desire of the mill-owners to stop production. The wages of labor are regulated by supply and demand, the employers always seeking to hire at the lowest price. The claim of a high tariff as protection for American labor really means a high tariff to protect monopoly."

"As between the St. Louis and Chicago platforms, which do you intend to support?

"The Chicago platform clearly demands a continuance of the tax upon farmers to give bounties to the manufacturers. The St. Louis platform, on the contrary, demands such a reform of the tariff as will give great relief to agriculture. Unless farmers are willing from partisan motives to vote that heavy and unjust burdens shall be imposed upon them, they must vote down the Chicago platform. The St. Louis platform declares in the line of the interest of farmers and other consumers, and there should be found a way in this emergency by which they can give it their earnest support. Personally, believing Grover Cleveland to be the foremost champion of the rights of the people, I shall support at the polls the views he advanced in his brave message. Grover Cleveland has grown in public estimation, in ability, and in character. He represents a great principle, and when a principle is at stake I shall be true to my convictions. This year, to be consistent, I must indorse by ballot, pen, and voice the platform of the St. Louis convention."

[During the reading of the foregoing, when Mr. TOWNSHEND's time had expired, he asked and obtained consent that the whole interview, as already given, be published in the RECORD.]

Mr. GEAR. I move to amend by striking out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendment is in order at present, as an amendment and also an amendment to the amendment are pending. If there be no objection the pro forma amendment will be regarded as withdrawn.

Mr. BLAND. I object, and call for a vote.

Mr. GEAR. I renew the pro forma amendment to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. A pro forma amendment to the amendment is already pending. Objection has been made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] to the withdrawal of the pro forma amendment. The question will therefore be taken on agreeing to the motion to strike out at the end of the paragraph the word "pound."

The question having been put,

The CHAIRMAN said: The noes seem to have it.

[Cries of "Division" on the Republican side.]

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 56, noes 70.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I call for tellers. I want to give the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] a vote upon this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on ordering tellers.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withdraw the demand for tellers.

Mr. CHEADLE. I make the point that no quorum voted.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 103.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. BAYNE. I send to the desk a substantial amendment which I desire to offer to the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 366, "2 cents" and insert "one-half of 1 cent;" and, in lines 367 and 368, strike out "1½ cents" and insert "one-quarter of 1 cent."

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BAYNE, it was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 366 and 367 strike out "or rice free of the outer hull."

The amendment of Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois, was rejected.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The imports of rice into this country the past year were, cleaned, 33,731,462 pounds; uncleaned, 4,000,642 pounds; paddy, or rice having the outer hull on, 2,152 pounds; total, 37,734,257 pounds. This bill proposes to put the duty on rice at, for cleaned, an equivalent of 100.47 per cent., and for uncleaned an equivalent of 59.60 per cent. This bill puts the vegetables, flax, meats, poultry, and wool raised by our Eastern farmers on the free-list. Here is a chance to correct an "inequality," but I am confident it will not be corrected. Here is an opportunity to abolish a "war tax." Why does not the Committee on Ways and Means make the same cut on rice and sugar that they have on the farm products of the North? Sugar is left at about 68 per cent. and rice at over 100 per cent. and yet we are told this is a bill to reduce and simplify taxes and to correct inequalities in the tariff.

Mr. WARNER. I move to amend by striking out, in line 366, the words "two cents" and inserting "one cent;" so as to make the duty on rice, cleaned, 1 cent per pound.

Mr. Chairman, while the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLIOTT], who is certainly familiar with this subject, was defending a duty of over 100 per cent. on rice, in response to the suggestion he had made, that it is "a condition and not a theory which confronts us," I asked what conditions exist in the culture of rice in South Carolina or any other State which renders it necessary that a duty of over 100 per cent. should be maintained upon this food product? I do not wish to do the gentleman any injustice, but my remembrance is that the only answer vouchsafed to my inquiry was the statement that the committee had reduced the duty which was placed upon this food product by the Republican party; that, then, is the only "condition" that confronts us. He defends his action now by what the Republican party did years ago.

The condition that confronts the gentleman is this: The Republican party years since placed a high duty on rice, a food product, I might say a necessary of life. Rice is produced in a certain section of our common country, therefore it must be maintained, while other duties placed by the same party on great agricultural products in other sections of the country, less than one-third of that on rice, is to be ruthlessly cut down, and in many instances wiped out.

The condition that confronts the gentleman is high protection to every interest in his section. His theory is free trade, which he arbitrarily applies to every other section.

No reason has been given outside of the geographical one why a duty of 100.47 per cent. should be maintained on rice.

What are the facts as to the rice culture in the South? The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLIOTT] gives me this information; he at least wants to make the best possible showing in defense of the committee in making this glaring discrimination in favor of the rice of South Carolina and other Southern States. He tells me that rice is worth on an average to the planter 4½ cents a pound, that is, 1.21½ cents a bushel, the average yield being 30 bushels to the acre. The testimony before the Ways and Means Committee of last Congress gives 30 bushels to the acre as the lowest estimate, while the yield in some favorite localities runs as high as 72 bushels to the acre.

In arriving at the value of the rice crop per acre, I propose to take the lowest average of the crop, 30 bushels to the acre, thus understating rather than overstating its value. I am also informed that it costs 8 cents per bushel to clean the rice for the market. Let us be even more liberal and put the cost of cleaning at 11½ cents. From these figures it will be seen that when the rice is cleaned the net value to the planter is $1.10 per bushel.

A crop of 30 bushels to the acre would yield the planter $33. Certainly a profitable crop. That is the condition which confronts us in determining what protection is needed in the rice culture. It demands and is given a protective duty of 100 per cent. Is this just? I have talked with some of my fellow-grangers on each side of the Chamber as to yield and value of the corn and wheat crops. I find an average wheat crop to be 15 bushels to the acre. This is a fair average yield. For the purposes of my illustration I will call it 20 bushels to the acre Fifty cents a bushel is all it will average to our Western farmers; but that I may be on the safe side, I shall estimate it at 60 cents a bushel, which is fully 20 per cent. more than the price realized by the farmers in Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Minnesota, Iowa, and Dakota, the great wheat-fields of the continent, for their wheat crop. Leave out of the calculation the 2 or 3 cents a bushel that it costs to thrash and prepare this cereal for the market. The farmer from his wheat crop of 20 bushels to the acre gets at the outside figure $12, against the rice-planter's $33. That, let me say to the gentleman from South Carolina, is the condition that confronts the Western farmer when he is asked to pay the rice-planter 100 per cent. on his crop.

Take that other great agricultural product of the North and Southwest—corn. Its average yield will not exceed 35 bushels to the acre; the price will not average to exceed 25 cents per bushel. In estimating the value of the corn crop I shall take 40 bushels to the acre as the average yield rather than 35; this gives the value of the corn crop to the farmers of the great West at $10 per acre.

To use the gentleman's language, the "condition that confronts us" when we are asked to place a duty of 100 per cent. on rice is this, that taking the lowest average value of the rice crop per acre in South Carolina it is $33, while taking the highest average value of the wheat and corn crops in the North and Southwest per acre it is but $12 and $10, respectively.

Yet we are assured over and over again that there is nothing sectional in this bill and certainly not in maintaining this extraordinary high rate of duty on this common food product of over 100 per cent.

Certain it is I have no disposition to charge that this high protective duty on rice is sectional, that it is the result of a design to favor one section rather than the result of accident. Yet, farmers of the North whose industries have been stricken down will naturally ask, why give this protection to the rice-planter, who realizes $33 an acre from his crop, while they get a return of but $12 for their wheat and $10 for corn per acre?

You will find that this will be a condition and not a theory that will confront you in November.

Should my motion prevail there will be left a duty of 50 per cent. on rice. No facts have been given why it should be more.

Mr. KELLEY. How many pounds of rice does the gentleman say there are in a bushel?

Mr. WARNER. Twenty-seven.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WARNER. I will move to strike out the last word. Sir, I offer this amendment in good faith. My judgment is that rice should be placed on the free-list. My judgment is that sugar should be put on the free-list. I am not here advocating any measure which shall work what may appear an injustice or hardship to the rice-grower. I am willing to concede to him a protection greater than the average protection granted to the other industries of the country. I am willing to vote for 50 per cent. protection to that industry. Why should it be more? Not a figure has been given, not a fact stated to show that this will not amply protect the rice industry.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLIOTT] says that we wish to strike down the colored man. It is argued that this duty on rice is for the protection of the colored men of the South. To this extremity is the gentleman driven for a reason to justify this duty. It is to be presumed that the gentleman is sincere in this, yet it taxes our credulity to believe it. Is the colored man who labors upon the rice plantation better protected than the man who works in the wheat or corn fields of the North? The popular impression is to the contrary. The fact is you do not pay the freedmen who cultivate your rice one-half the wages the corn and wheat farmer of the North pays his farm hands. Other reasons than that of the protection of the black man must have controlled the committee in fixing a duty of 100 per cent. on rice.

Mr. Chairman, it is as well to be honest about this matter. Certain States raise rice. Their Representatives wanted it protected. Their votes were necessary to secure the passage of the Mills bill. This was the "condition" that confronted the Committee on Ways and Means. A duty of over 100 per cent. is put on rice to secure votes. A like condition confronted the committee on the sugar question, and it was met and solved in the same simple and practical way. This will explain a remark made in the Democratic caucus by an eminent statesman, who is always frank:

That in the preparation of this bill the committee was as honest as it could afford to be.

Votes were needed; to secure them every principle of protection, revenue reform, and free trade were violated.

It was necessary for them to show that under the new leadership there was sufficient cohesive quality in the Democratic party to pass in the House a revenue bill; consistency and principle were of less consequence than votes. In order to secure support of your measure among other things it became necessary to take glue from the free-list.

A MEMBER. And wooden screws of Connecticut.

Mr. WARNER. Oh, yes; the wooden screws of Connecticut. It was necessary to fasten a vote that could not be secured by glue. I congratulate, Mr. Chairman, my friends on the other side on their advanced views and ultra protection doctrine when rice and sugar is discussed.

To maintain high rates of duty—100 per cent. on the former and 68 per cent. on the latter—every man on that side of the Chamber stands up to be counted. In the discussion of the duty on these articles that constitute a part of the daily meal of every laboring man in the land the cry of "legalized robbery" is not heard. You vote solidly to thus tax the breakfast-table of the poor man for the sugar and rice planter. You shut your eyes to the gigantic sugar trust that enables the sugar refiners to advance the price of sugar to sixty million consumers.

In the last two days you have been making strong protection speeches in defense of an exorbitant duty on rice and sugar; you have invoked protection to American industries. One unacquainted with your record, a believer in the doctrine of protection, might be led to exclaim: "God bless the Democracy, which is the faith's (protection) defender," if I may be pardoned for thus paraphrasing the quotation of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. COX]. But, sir, when we see that party striking down the great wool industry of the entire country and indiscriminately degrading American labor and destroying American industries we must exclaim: "God bless—no harm in blessing—the pretender."

Gentlemen, stop masquerading as revenue reformers, as the friends of American labor, until at least you are prepared to deal fairly by every industry, wherever situated in our common country. Treat all alike.

You have no facts to give the country why this exorbitant rate of duty should be imposed upon an article which is consumed by every laboring man, a food product in which every family in the country has a direct interest as consumers. You have talked much of a free breakfast-table. Do not longer—

Keep the word of promise to our ear,
And break it to our hope

[Here the hammer fell.]

[Mr. WILKINSON withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. COX having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate, in compliance with the request of the House, herewith furnished a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (H. R. 3300) to amend an act to enable the city of Denver to purchase certain lands for military purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887; and

A bill (S. 3215) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Cummings Landing, Lincoln County, Arkansas.

The message further announced that the Senate disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1430) to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads and for other purposes; asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. DOLPH, and Mr. WALTHALL conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2657) granting an increase of pension to Emily J. Stannard; asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BLAIR, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. TURPIE as conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 8180) to regulate judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States; asked a conference on the amendments, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, Mr. EVARTS, and Mr. GEORGE.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1540) granting a pension to Hannah Babb Hutchins; and had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 671) to provide for the sale of the site at Fort Omaha, Nebraska, the sale or removal of the improvements thereof, and for a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 1062) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Clay and Jackson Counties, Missouri, at a point to be selected consistent with the interests of river navigation between Kansas City, Mo., and a point within 5 miles below said city.

TARIFF.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] in his remarks a few minutes ago asserted that all over the Northwest Republicans were joining the Democratic party on account of the tariff. As far as the State of Wisconsin is concerned I am sure my friend has drawn simply on his vivid imagination. I have not heard of a solitary case of that kind, but, on the contrary, I know personally a number of Democrats who have come out boldly for the Republican party on account of the tariff question. I will cite only one instance. A gentleman who supported Cleveland four years ago, and who only two years ago was the Democratic candidate for State treasurer of the State of Wisconsin, has come out for the Republican candidate. In a long letter, published in the Milwaukee Sentinel of last Saturday, he states his reasons for doing so. I should like to print the letter in full, and will ask the Clerk only to read the closing paragraph in order that I may not detain the House.

The letter is as follows:

THE ISSUE JOINED—SQUARELY PRESENTED IN THE PRESENT CAMPAIGN—FREE-TRADE FICTIONS EXPOSED BY MR. J. A. JOHNSON—THE ACTUAL FACTS REGARDING THE PERCENTAGE OF LABOR IN FINISHED MANUFACTURES AND THEIR BEARING ON THE QUESTION.

Not since the election of 1864, when the Democratic convention pronounced the war a failure, has there been an issue so fairly and broadly presented as is that of protection and free trade in the present campaign. Both parties have presented good candidates, so that there will be no side issues to distract the attention of the voter. And while it is true that there are some Democrats who favor protection and some Republicans who favor free trade, yet these are comparatively few, and it may fairly be said that the issue is joined on the question of protection or free trade. Some Democrats argue that in 1884 they had a platform that was as strongly protective as it is possible for any platform to be, and quote the following paragraph from that platform:

"The Democratic party is pledged to revise the tariff in a spirit of fairness to all interests. But in making a reduction in taxes it is not proposed to injure any domestic industries, but rather promote their healthy growth. From the foundation of this Government taxes collected at the custom-house have been the chief source of Federal revenue; such they must continue to be. Moreover, many industries have come to rely upon legislation for successful continuance, so that any change of law must be at every step regardful of the labor and capital involved. The process of reform must be subject in execution to this plain dictate of justice—all taxation shall be limited to the requirements of an economical government. The necessary reduction in taxation can and must be effected without depriving American labor of the ability to compete successfully with foreign labor, and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rate of wages prevailing in this country. Sufficient revenue to pay all the expenses of the Federal Government, economically administered, including pensions, interest and principal of the public debt, can be got under our present system of taxation from custom-house taxes on fewer imported articles, bearing heaviest on articles of luxury and bearing lightest on articles of necessity. We therefore denounce the abuse of the present tariff, and, subject to the preceding limitations, we demand that Federal taxation shall be exclusively for public purposes of and shall not exceed the needs of the Government economically administered."

It would seem to be impossible to find stronger language in favor of protection than is here used, and the platform of 1884 was reaffirmed by the Democratic convention of 1888, the above quoted section included, but with a very important qualification, to-wit, as interpreted by the President in his last annual message, and the Mills bill was indorsed as in harmony with and an explanation of the platform. Now, the President so interprets the platform that wool, one of our very important products, should be put on the free-list. The free-traders and the President argue that the poor man should have free wool so that he may obtain cheap clothing. But if he is to have free clothing in order that he may keep warm, is there any reason under Heaven why he should not also have free stoves, which are necessary not only to keep him warm, but also to cook his scanty food? Is there even a shadow of consistency in arguing free wool and woolen fabrics and protected iron and iron wares? Is the one more of a necessity than the other? Must not he who argues free wool to-day argue free iron to-morrow? Is there any possible escape from this? And then what becomes of protection? Will it be possible to have free importation of iron and wool and not "injure any domestic industry" or lower the wages of American labor?

England, our great competitor, certainly does not on the average pay more than two-thirds as much for labor as we do. Will any one soberly contend that our manufacturers can pay $150,000 for labor where England would pay but $100,000 in making goods of general adaptation and consumption, and compete? The steam-engine is very nearly all labor. The material even in a $20,000 steam-engine can be bought for a few dollars before any labor is put on it. The same is true of a $25,000 printing press. The same holds true in most machinery and wares. Material costs but little before any labor is put on it. The man of soberness and truth must admit that making our markets free to the foreigner, be it on wool or textile fabrics, on machinery or the iron in them, must result in one of two things: Either we must reduce the price of labor to the European level or we must surrender our markets to the foreign manufacturer.

A FREE-TRADE FICTION.

One of the chief, and we may say the chief arguments of the free-trader against protection is that the American manufacturer and workingman need no protection, for the reason that the amount of labor in the finished wares is only 18 to 20 per cent. of the value, the 80 to 82 per cent. being the part taken by capital in the form of interests and profits. These assertions are iterated and reiterated by nearly every free-trade journal and free-trader in the country. David A. Wells, one of the highest, and perhaps the very highest free-trade authority in the country, in a speech delivered in Brooklyn and in a free-trade catechism, which are largely circulated as free-trade documents, positively declares that the census shows that only 18 to 20 per cent. of the value of finished wares is labor. Senator McDonald, of Indiana, another very high authority, in a speech at Des Moines, Iowa, which was reported and largely circulated, makes the same assertion, and declares that he knows that it is true—that the census shows it. The St. Paul Pioneer-Press, in an editorial January 19, 1888, says: "And it has seemed to men of common sense that since wages in 1880 constituted 18 per cent. of the total value of the product, an average duty of 47 per cent. could hardly be necessary to protect either product or laborer."

A free-trade statistician, Mulhall, asserts that the ratio of wages to manufactures produced in the United States is, in New England, 22 per cent.; Middle States, 19 per cent.; Southern States, 18 per cent.; Western States, 18 per cent.; average, 20 per cent.

The Chicago Tribune, in editorials of March 12, March 15, March 16, May 14, and May 16, 1888, clearly and positively asserts that the amount of wages in finished goods is only 18 to 20 per cent. of the value.

I have here quoted five free-trade authorities, and they are the very highest in the country, and I have no doubt the most candid and fair. If we can not get at the views of free-traders from such authorities, then it seems to me that we can not get at them at all. David A. Wells's "Free-Trade Catechism," containing this same assertion, is being extensively distributed by free-trade clubs and associations, while the works of Mulhall are being extensively circulated and quoted all over the country. Senator McDonald is one of the leading men of his party, and the two journals mentioned rank among the very best in the Republican party. And there is probably not a free-trade paper in the land that has not echoed and re-echoed the statement. It would be preposterous to say that they would make such a statement without believing it.

Now, if the statement is founded on facts I freely acknowledge that the whole protection theory is wrong. If it is true that only 18 to 20 per cent. of the value of finished wares is labor, while 80 to 82 per cent. is interest and profits, then most certainly no protection is needed. The value of steel rails is about $30 per ton. If the labor in that ton is but $6, what do we need protection for? The English have to pay $2 to $3 per ton freight to New York, nearly one-half the alleged cost of labor, which would be ample protection. The proximity of our own manufacturers to our market, their acquaintance with buyers and the peculiarities and wants of trade, and the shorter time the capital would have to be employed because the wares could be sold quicker, besides the saving in freight, would much more than make up for the additional cost of labor here. And if the free-traders will in some way make their assertions good, not with empty words and meaningless phrases, that the cost of labor of manufactured wares is only 20 per cent. of their value, but with actual cash or equivalent, it is perfectly safe to say that every protectionist in the land will at once abandon his position in favor of a protective tariff and join the free-trader in favoring a tariff for revenue only. But the free-trader will do no such thing. He makes the assertion simply because he has not carefully investigated the question, and not upon convictions founded upon invincible facts.

It does not need any great profundity to show the absolute fallacy of the assertion. Take our metallic and textile fabrics. What is the value of metallic fabrics before any labor is put on them? I have already stated that the material in a $20,000 steam engine and a $25,000 printing press can be bought for a few dollars, say $1 per ton, and not over $50 for material sufficient for both machines, before any labor is put on it. A finished farm wagon sells for, say, $60. But I can safely agree to furnish the materials for it before any labor is put on it for $1. By thus applying the touchstone of common sense we see that the above quoted assertions as to the amount of labor in manufactures must be very wide of the mark; in fact, that they have no foundation whatever.

But it will be said that they must have some straw upon which to base their assertions, that men of sense do not make such reckless statements without some foundation.

The conundrum is easily unraveled. The census of 1880 does state that the total value of manufactured articles was $5,370,000,000; that the value of materials was $3,397,000,000, and the total amount paid for labor was $948,000,000. Here they get the figures that the amount paid for labor is only 18 per cent. of the value of the finished goods. But they do not state that the same census also shows that the materials have been counted several times. The manufacture of the farm wagon commences when the miner begins to mine the iron and coal and the woodsman to fell the timber. Then comes the iron-ore as finished ware from the miner, the pig-iron from the furnaceman, the bar-iron from the rolling-mill, the steel from the steel-maker, the springs from the spring-maker, the bolts from the bolt-maker, and so on. Material is thus counted several times, and at each count a large amount of labor is added.

The material that could be bought for $1 before any labor was put on it costs the wagon manufacturer $25 before he touches it to construct a wagon. In more complicated wares the difference is still more striking. The $3,397,000,000 worth of materials were thus not raw materials, but materials that had already gone through several processes of manufacture.

In point of fact, strictly raw materials, that is, materials before any labor has gone into them, cost but little. In very many articles the raw materials cost nothing, such as brick, lime, cement, pottery, queensware, glassware, etc., while it costs but a trifle in all articles made of iron and steel. In the textiles, if we deduct what the labor has cost, for instance, to produce wool, we shall find that there is but little left.

A STRONG WITNESS.

A few years ago the London Times had an exhaustive article on this subject, and as to the cost of production in the 100 the Times classified it thus: In England 56 per cent. goes to labor, 21 per cent. to capital, and 23 per cent. to government. In France 41 per cent. goes to labor, 36 per cent. to capital, and 23 per cent. to government. In the United States 72 per cent. goes to labor, 28 per cent. to capital, and 5 per cent. to Government.

I have no proof that the Times is correct except that, so far as I know, there has been no denial of the correctness of the conclusions. And they are certainly reasonable. We know that taxes are much higher both in England and France. We also know that capital, while it commands somewhat higher interest in this country, yet it is turned more frequently in manufacturing, because our markets are at home, while both England and France must send many of their products to foreign markets, which requires longer time for returns. They also produce a larger proportion of fine wares, which require a longer time to manufacture. We may, I think, accept as practically true that in this country labor gets 72 per cent. of the value of manufactured goods, while capital gets 23 per cent. What then becomes of the claim of the free-trader that labor gets but 18 to 20 per cent.?

I have dwelt at considerable length on this feature of the case, because it is an all-important one. It seems to me that it is conclusively shown that the free-trader's premises being wholly based on fiction, his whole structure crumbles. And it follows that it is utterly impossible for this country to compete with Europe in manufacturing without greatly reducing the wages of labor. And this is the issue in the campaign. Either to a great extent abandon manufacturing of articles of general adaptation and consumption, or greatly reduce the wages of labor. And if wages must be reduced in one line of manufacture, it must be in all. If it must be reduced for the artisan, it must be for the common workman, and in time it must also affect the salaries of clerks, salesmen, and professional men. None could escape the general leveling process. We would get down to the European level.

The same David A. Wells above quoted wrote an article in 1870 for the Cobden (English) Club in which he said it would have been better for Americans if they had set fire to the American mills for rolling railroad rails and pensioned all the workmen and brought their rails from England. Here is the opinion of this high free-trade authority. And Professor W. G. Sumner, certainly a man of much ability, and as free-trade authority second only to Mr. Wells, said, in 1883, in Cleveland, in a debate with Professor Denslow, that it would be better if America would pay the manufacturers of pig-iron 10 per cent. on their capital and pay the workmen for lying idle, and buy her iron from foreign countries. Here are leading free-trade authorities who carry their doctrines to their legitimate results. We can see what their views are of American industries. It may be that these views have now been somewhat modified. But if so it has been brought about by absolute demonstration that the policy of protection has brought results wholly unexpected by them.

It may be asked how men of high ability and learning can seriously promulgate such egregious nonsense, for it certainly deserves no better name. We can explain it only as John Quincy Adams explained similar phenomena. He said in one of his reports that there is no error so absurd that some sublime philosopher will not defend it; no invention so stupid, no assertion so foolish that it has not been defended by some learned, amiable, and virtuous but bewildered statesman.

Has not John Quincy Adams stated the case correctly? May we not thus account for much of this free-trade absurdity?

The issues have been fairly joined; the case is on trial. It may not be decided in this campaign. It is possible that another four years of suspense and uncertainty, even of partial free trade, is in store for us. But the American people will get at the question in due course of time, even if it is not decided next November. No political question is settled till it is rightly settled. Lincoln said that a part of the people can be fooled all the time, that all the people can be fooled a part of the time, but that all the people could not be fooled all the time.

All the signs of the times, however, point to the settlement, and correct settlement, of this question next November. If the free-traders are defeated now, they will stay defeated. The question will then never again be made a party question. Protection sentiment is growing rapidly, especially in the South. If the free-traders are defeated in this campaign, not even the ghost of the Mills bill will linger in men's memories.

J. A. JOHNSON.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Is not this gentleman a manufacturer?

Mr. GUENTHER. He employs a great many men.

Mr. HUDD. The extract which my colleague from Wisconsin sent to the Clerk's desk to be read I recognize as coming from a gentleman who is quite distinguished in my State, and who up to a very recent period has been quite a distinguished member of the Republican party. A few years ago he experienced a change of heart, or thought he did, growing out of some irregularities in the Republican party, and he was nominated by the Democrats upon their State ticket.

Mr. GUENTHER. I want to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. MACDONALD. Oh, stop that interrupting. You do it all the time over there.

Mr. GUENTHER. My colleague [Mr. HUDD] is from Wisconsin, and he is always courteous. Will he allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HUDD. Not until I get through.

Mr. GUENTHER. Did not Mr. Johnson support Cleveland four years ago?

Mr. MACDONALD. I object to these interruptions. I would like to see some civility on the other side.

Mr. GUENTHER. I have nothing to do with Minnesota.

Mr. MACDONALD. Minnesota has something to do with you.

Mr. HUDD. Mr. Chairman, the trouble with our friends upon the other side, and particularly with my colleague from Wisconsin, is that they are fearful that some of the utterances which have been made by the distinguished gentleman whose letter was cited by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] will have an effect upon the country, and therefore they endeavor to counteract it by this publication of Mr. Johnson's. Mr. Johnson at the time he made those remarks (whatever they may be and wherever they may have been uttered, for I did not notice the occasion on which they were made), was probably in the state of mind that my colleague, Mr. GUENTHER, was in when the question of paying a bounty or subsidy to a certain Pacific mail steamship line was under discussion in last Congress. Mr. Johnson may have come to the conclusion, as did my friend, Mr. GUENTHER, upon that occasion, that confession was good for the soul, and I propose now to read as a part of my remarks, in order to show how distinguished gentlemen like my colleague may change their views, an extract which I think he will recognize as his own utterance, and which seems to be very appropriate at this time. He will find it in the report of a speech which he made here on the 17th of May, 1886, and which is printed in volume 79 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Forty-ninth Congress. He commences by saying, "confession is good for the soul, and it brings forgiveness." [Laughter.] He then proceeds:

I say, Mr. Chairman, the main charge brought against us as a party was the popular belief in the truth of it which has caused the Republican party, in spite of the truth of its principles, in spite of its glorious achievements, to find itself to-day out of power, were charges just of this character, charges that we had been too free with the people's money; that we had granted too many million dollars for subsidies; that we had paid too dearly for what we had received; that we had allowed ourselves to be made the victims of scheming corporations; that we had been too credulous; that we had been imposed upon too frequently by land-grant and subsidy-hunting railroad, canal, and transportation companies; that we had dealt too much in class legislation for the benefit of monopolies and millionaires, and that we let the plunderers pull the wool over our eyes—these were charges that many honest people believed, and the result was our discharge from power.

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. McMILLIN. Would not my friend like to strike out the whole extract? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. GUENTHER. I renew the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under obligation to recognize the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR].

Mr. KERR. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that my colleague from Wisconsin can for a moment think that I said those charges were true. I simply said to this House that the Democratic party had iterated and reiterated such charges for years, and that there were a good many honest people in the country who really believed them to be true [derisive laughter on the Democratic side], because they had been iterated and reiterated with genuine Democratic persistency. But, Mr. Chairman, to-day, after the Democratic party has been in power for a time, those very same people who, under the false pretenses made by the Democrats, were induced to vote against the Republican party, have seen the error of their ways and are now coming back to that party. [Laughter and jeers on the Democratic side.] This same Mr. Johnson, from whom I have read an extract, is one of those people, honest-minded, always trying to do the best by his country, and he, because he believed the charges that were preferred against the Republican party by you gentlemen on the other side, went over to the Democratic party. He was received by that party with open arms, and two years ago they put him on their ticket for treasurer of the State of Wisconsin; but now, after he has seen what the Democratic party really is, after he has discovered the hollowness of their pretenses, he comes back to the Republican party, and that is the case with most of the others who left the party for a time to join the Democrats. [Jeers on the Democratic side.]

Now, if my friend will read my whole speech he will find it utterly impossible to make any capital against me that can in the least reflect upon my Republicanism.

Mr. HUDD. I heard your speech when you delivered it, and applauded every word of it.

Mr. GUENTHER. Well, then, you did not understand it; that is the trouble. You read garbled extracts, and when I said that certain charges were preferred you construed me as conceding that they were true. We all know that charges may be preferred which can not be substantiated, and those charges to which I called the attention of the House and the country were of just that character—charges which were simply made, but never proved.

Mr. HUDD. I will ask my colleague whether one of the charges was not that the Republican party had granted subsidies to corporations, and whether he did not know that to be true?

Mr. GUENTHER. More land grants to corporations have been made by Democratic Congresses than by Republican Congresses.

Mr. HUDD. Then, brother, what did you mean by saying "An honest confession is good for the soul?" Are you making a second one now, in order to receive absolution for your sins?

Mr. GUENTHER. I have no absolution to receive.

Mr. BLAND. Now let us have a vote.

Mr. KERR addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last three words. I wish to call attention to the remarks just made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HUDD]. Serious charges are made by him against the Republican party in regard to granting subsidies to railroads. Now, I wish to refer to a list of subsidies granted to railroad companies—to the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad and other companies—before the Republican party took control of this Government; subsidies amounting to over 16,000,000 acres of the best lands in the United States, some of them situated in Iowa, in Illinois, the very garden lands of the United States, where railroads would have been built without one dollar of subsidy and without one acre of land. The land which has been given by the Republican party for the building of railroads was land which was not worth 1 cent an acre until those subsidies were granted—land which would not have been inhabited to this day but for the building of those roads. But the lands granted by the Democratic party embraced more than 16,000,000 acres of the best lands in the United States. I take the liberty of inserting in my remarks a list of those grants.

Subsidies granted previous to 1860.

Railroads.	Date.	Acres.
Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad	Feb. 9, 1852	1,656,593
Illinois Central Railroad	May 15, 1856	1,235,490
Chicago and North Western Railroad	June 3, 1856	545,575
Cedar Rapids and Missouri River Railroad	May 15, 1856	1,142,120
Winona and St. Peters Railroad	Mar. 3, 1857	1,668,787
St. Paul and Sioux City Railroad	Mar. 3, 1857	1,146,306
West Wisconsin Railroad	June 3, 1856	802,816
North Wisconsin Railroad	June 3, 1856	813,857
Mississippi and Missouri River Railroad	May 15, 1856	643,147
Hannibal and St. Joseph	June 10, 1852	693,186
St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railroad	Feb. 9, 1853	1,382,410
Western Minnesota Railroad	Mar. 3, 1857	646,558
St. Paul and Pacific Railroad	Mar. 3, 1857	1,254,046
Southwestern Branch of Pacific of Missouri Railroad	June 10, 1852	728,943
Stillwater and St. Paul Railroad	Mar. 3, 1857	860,501
Southern Pacific Railroad	July 27, 1856	1,145,162
North Louisiana and Texas Railroad	June 3, 1856	353,221
Burlington and Missouri River Railroad	May 15, 1856	388,697
Total number of acres		16,467,957

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLIOTT] said something about the colored men and the position of the Republican party with reference to them. Sir, there is a suspicion in the public mind of the country that the gentleman from South Carolina has no right to speak here for the colored men of his district; but if he has the right to speak for any such, he speaks only for the very small portion of the colored men of South Carolina who raise rice. The great body of the colored people of the South—7,000,000 people, scattered all over the Southern States—eat that rice—have it upon their breakfast plates every morning; and the gentleman from South Carolina, acting against the interests of that great body of people, as well as against the great body of the people of the whole country, asks that a tax of 100 per cent. shall be continued upon the breakfast table of every colored man in the entire South; and you are asked to continue this rate of taxation in spite of the fact that it is 60 per cent. more than the average duty upon the articles embraced in the tariff schedule at the present time. Is it not reasonable, is it not in the interest of a fair tariff, that this tax should be brought down to 40 per cent., the average of the schedule?

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] asked whether we would vote for the bill if this amendment should be made. The same question was asked in regard to the sugar duty. I ask whether any man can stand before the country and refuse to reduce the duty upon sugar and upon rice, which the committee leaves in one case 28 per cent. and in the other case 60 per cent. higher than the average of duties, and excuse himself by the question, "Would you vote for the bill if the amendment were adopted?" I say to you, gentlemen, perfect your bill; make it fair; make it equitable; make it reasonable; make it conform to the sense of justice of the country; and then you will be in a position to ask us whether we will vote for it or not, and to hold us responsible if we vote against it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Now let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] to strike out, in line 366, "2 cents" and insert "1 cent."

The amendment was rejected, there being—ayes 47, noes 70.

Mr. WARNER. I move to amend by striking out, in lines 367 and 368, the words "one and one-quarter cents" and inserting "three-fourths of a cent." I do not wish to occupy time on this amendment. I will merely remark that it makes the duty about 50 per cent.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rice-flour, rice-meal, and broken rice which will pass through a sieve known commercially as No. 10 brass-wire sieve, ten meshes to the running inch or one hundred meshes to the square inch; the space within the wires shall not exceed in length or width seven hundred and eighty-seven ten thousandths of an inch, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 369 to 375, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Rice-flour and rice-meal, 15 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, the effect of that amendment is still further to reduce the rate provided in this bill on rice-flour from 20 per cent. to 15 per cent. I have in my hand the report of the United States Brewers' Association, assembled in annual convention at St. Paul in May last, and included in that report is a report to that convention by Lewis Schade, who signs himself as the attorney of the United States Brewers' Association. From that report I will read a few lines which will throw some light on the origin of this paragraph.

There are two tariff bills before the House, one introduced by Mr. MILLS, the majority bill, and the other by Mr. RANDALL. Mr. MILLS's bill is more favorable to your interests. It provides that rice-flour, rice-meal, and broken rice that will pass through a sieve, known commercially as No. 10 brass-wire sieve, shall pay 20 per cent. ad valorem, which is an improvement on the present rate, it being also the same rate contained in Colonel Morrison's tariff bill of last Congress.

Mr. RANDALL'S bill is a step backwards, for it provides that rice-flour, rice-meal, and broken rice that will pass through a sieve, known commercially as a No. 12 wire sieve, shall pay one-half of 1 per cent. per pound.

A reduction of the duty on corks was frustrated by the cork manufacturers, who appeared here in great force. In every other respect your wishes were complied with in the Mills bill.

Comment is unnecessary, and I will make none.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question recurred on Mr. MCMILLIN'S amendment, and it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Paddy, or rice having the outer hull on, 1 cent per pound.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] stated in the remarks submitted by him this morning that the Republican party is in favor of maintaining the present rate of taxes and opposed to reducing it because we will not take the Mills bill whole. In other words, he assumes that we are opposed to any prescription for the patient because we will not take the particular remedy that he prescribed to us. The difficulty with the gentleman's prescription is that it contains more poison than good, honest medicine. The remedy is a good deal worse than the disease. It is calculated to physic to death the industries of certain Northern States, and at the same time to pamper and fatten the favorite industries of the South.

Look at it, Mr. Chairman, for a moment. While you place nearly all the products of the farmers of Maine on the free-list, you put the duty on rice at 100 per cent. Where is the justice in that? Tell me why the farmers in my own State should have their products placed on the free-list and be placed in direct competition with the products of the people who live over the line in Canada, just along side of them, while the farmers of the South who are engaged in rice-culture are protected by a duty of 100 per cent.? I should like that some of the gentlemen on the other side of the House would point out to me the justice of such a proposition.

On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, the position needs only to be stated to have its injustice at once seen. Its partisan unfairness and sectionalism are so bold and patent that no one but a Democratic free-trader would have the effrontery to defend it, and yet the gentleman from Illinois presents us this proposition of brazen injustice, and because we will not adopt it accuses us of not favoring the reduction of taxation. It is his method of reduction of taxation that we object to. His bill is a blow at great industries of one section of the country and a very careful protection of the industries of the other. It gives the most radical protection by this bill, with the highest rate of duties to the farm products of South Carolina, Florida, and Georgia, and free trade in nearly all the products of the North. One hundred per cent. protection for the rice-grower of the South, and all the farm products of Maine put on the free-list! Is not that a fine dose for the industries and labor of my own section, and then to say we oppose reduction entirely because we refuse to swallow that dose. Why, it is as absurd as the Mills bill itself, and that is saying enough of it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

By unanimous consent the pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has just taken his seat has volunteered the remark that this item of the bill was intended to favor and did as a matter of fact favor the Southern farmer. It is perfectly patent that assertion is not borne out by the facts and is wholly and entirely gratuitous. The bill now under consideration does propose, as is admitted on all sides, a substantial reduction of the present duty on rice.

The protection which the rice farmers enjoy to-day was given to them under an act passed by a Republican Congress. I do not believe that any man will insist for a moment that the Republican party at that time had or at any time since has had any especial good feeling for the farmers of the South, or that they would have conferred upon them this favor if it had not been required by the fitness of things and if it could, with any show of justice, have been withheld from them. The fact that they accorded it to them is therefore conclusive evidence that they were eminently entitled to it. If there be any industry in this country that does need protection, and within the revenue limit and regulated by the revenue principle there are many, it is this particular industry of rice cultivation in the South. Gentlemen have undertaken to compare the profits made in this industry with the profits made in the cultivation of wheat and other grains.

The comparison thus presented is unworthy of gentlemen on the other side, and shows that they do not understand the facts connected with the cultivation of rice as compared to wheat or corn. Everybody who knows anything about the cultivation of rice knows that at least twice as much labor is required to produce that article and prepare it for market as to produce wheat or corn or perhaps any other grain, and for this reason the profits of rice-farming are not so great as wheat-raising in the West, neither is the latter subject to foreign competition as the former is. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLIOTT] said, and I repeat it now, that the protection against foreign competition afforded by this bill to the article of rice will inure largely to the benefit of the colored laborers of the South, in whom the Republican party profess such interest, but whom I have noticed since I came here that party always desert when the pinch comes.

We do not cultivate rice there upon the principle that grain is cultivated in the West. We cultivate it upon what is known as the "tenant system." The largest part of the rice lands in my district are cultivated upon this plan, nearly always by poor men, both white and black, who pay the owners of the lands for rent a fixed portion of the crop, the balance of which they keep themselves for their labor. Thus is presented the fairest system of the division of the profits of the product between the land-owner and the laborer that can be devised. The profits, however, either to the landlord or to the laborer, are very small. Neither the landlords or laborers get rich, nor do we here behold those sudden accumulations of fabulous wealth which have come to the owners of many of our Northern protected industries. What little profit there is, whether it comes from protection or otherwise, we divide fairly between the tenant and the land-owner.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER. I understand the gentleman to say that the rice culture in the South or in his State is carried on largely by independent colored labor. Now, will he state what part of the proceeds of the land goes to the tenant and what part is retained by the landlord for rent?

Mr. SIMMONS. The landlord receives one-third of the proceeds, the tenant two-thirds.

Mr. WARNER. That is exactly what the landlord receives for lands used in the culture of grain on the same principle in the West.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is true, I presume; it is also the case in regard to corn raised in my own State, and I presume is generally the custom.

Gentlemen have said that on an average 60 bushels of rice were produced upon an acre of land in the South. That may be true in certain parts of the South. No doubt it may be true in regard to certain parts of the rice lands of South Carolina. But in my district, where they raise upland or highland rice exclusively, and I am informed by my colleague [Mr. MCCLAMMY], in whose district rice is a leading product, that in his district also 20 bushels an acre is considered a large yield. I know in some sections of my district where they engaged a few years ago quite extensively in the production of rice this industry has been abandoned and they have gone back to the culture of corn, which is regarded as one of the least profitable crops we raise, these lands being in the main unsuited to the growth of cotton.

This change is brought about by reason of the fact that there is no profit in the culture of rice. That is the present condition of the industry in my State. Now, by removing the duty on rice and allowing the free introduction of the Chinese product (for nearly all the rice brought here comes from China), this Chinese product would be permitted to come in and compete on equal terms with the rice produced by the poor farmers of the South. The gentleman from Iowa said we wanted it cheap so that the laborers of the South might have it upon their tables. I will tell the gentleman that under the protective system of the Republican party prevailing so long (for the South has had but a small bite at the cherry of protection) the laborers of the South have become so poor that they can not afford even to eat rice they produce. They are actually forced in many instances to sell this crop and to convert it into other and more substantial and cheaper necessaries. In many cases they are obliged to content themselves with such substantials as bread and pork. I am sorry to have to say it, but it is the truth.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened in vain for some facts to be given of this condition which the gentleman [Mr. ELLIOTT] says confronts us upon the rice question. The gentleman who last addressed the House says it costs two-thirds as much to produce rice as it does to produce wheat. He evidently does not mean that. He assumes, I suppose, that it costs twice as much.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. WARNER. I presume the gentleman meant that. But he goes on further and states that the rice culture of his State is managed upon the tenant system, the landlord renting the colored man the land for a part of the crop, allowing it to be cultivated, and when the crop is produced the landlord, as he informs the House, takes one-third of the crop and the laborer the balance. It is known to every one who knows anything of the great agricultural regions of the West that when a farmer rents his farm to a tenant he never receives more than one-third of the crop for the rent.

The rice crop is worth three times as much as the wheat crop, the corn crop, or the oats crop; and therefore the landlord in your State, taking the statements made upon this floor as true, which I concede to be correct, gets three times the amount for the rent of his land as the landlord of the North gets. That is the condition that confronts us in considering the necessity for the protection asked for the rice-grower.

But the gentleman says, what is the purpose of this? It would throw open the markets of America to the product of Chinese cheap labor.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Is the gentleman from Missouri aware of the fact that it costs about $100 an acre to prepare, by a system of ditches prevailing in rice culture, an acre for the production of rice, which expense is borne by the landlord? That is an expense the grain grower of the West does not incur.

Mr. WARNER. Is that necessary every year?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Oh, no; not necessarily.

Mr. WARNER. Well, for how many years?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. It is for the original preparation of the land. But after that there is a constant expense to keep up the embankments and keep the land in a condition to be flooded——

Mr. WARNER. What is your land worth an acre?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Without these ditches the lands would not be worth $10 an acre.

Mr. WARNER. Let me say to the gentlemen, we raise wheat, we raise corn on land worth three or four, five or ten times as much an acre as your rice land. Gentlemen, let us face the condition. Let us be honest. You are for this measure for protection's sake. You are for it because you raise rice. You are for it because you want the 100 per cent. duty; and yet you vote solidly to cut down every other industry.

The gentleman refers to Chinese cheap labor. In the bill under consideration is the item of bagging for cotton. The great bagging factories of the world are at Calcutta, where the jute butt is raised at the factory door, where they employ cooly labor at from 6 to 12 cents a day. You have prostrated that industry in this country. You have reduced it to 15 per cent. ad valorem, which you must know will close up the factories in my State. You are buying the cotton bagging manufactured in this country cheaper than you ever bought it before.

Before these manufactories were started in the United States you paid from 18 to 20 cents a yard for foreign bagging, for every yard of cotton bagging you bought. Since these industries have been established in our own country and fostered by protection cotton bagging has been 50 per cent. cheaper than ever before. It was sold last spring for 7 cents a yard, and has been down as low as 6 cents and 6 mills. Yet my friend will vote to cut down this manufacturing industry, to prostrate it, when he knows the result of his vote is to close the doors of every bagging factory in my State and to bring in the product of the cooly labor from Calcutta. Why are you not consistent?

Mr. Chairman, I do not pretend to know whether 20 bushels of rice is a fair crop or not. The gentlemen says it is. I made my statement upon this floor on information given to me by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLIOTT]. He sat here while I made it and did not dissent.

I know the evidence taken before a committee of this House shows that the lowest yield is 30 bushels, and that it runs up as high as 60 bushels an acre; in some cases as high as 72 bushels to the acre. In a book which I hold in my hand a letter from Captain Ross to Judge KELLEY states that the average yield of the rice crop of the South is 50 bushels to the acre.

Mr. KELLEY. That is the average crop of Florida.

Mr. WARNER. The average crop of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to submit these facts. The South wants a protection of 100 per cent. on rice, and it will get it regardless of right or justice.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the formal amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Has the paragraph been disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I move to insert the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after line 377 the following:

"Dextrine, burnt starch, gum substitute, or British gum, 2 cents per pound."

Mr. BLAND. I raise the point of order that that clause of the bill has been passed. The amendment is not germane to anything now pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is in order. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, when I made the statement a short time ago that the gentleman from Missouri did not intelligently object, I had no intention to say anything discourteous to him. What I had in mind was that in the confusion prevailing in the House at the time I thought the gentleman did not understand the amendment which I proposed to offer was a substantial amendment, germane to the paragraph which I had in view, and one which would bring before the committee facts I thought necessary to enable the committee to form a proper judgment as to the disposition of this question.

Dextrine, burnt starch, gum substitute, and British gum are on the tariff schedule at a different point and under a different classification from potato starch, but are manufactured products of potato and corn starch. They enter into consumption in this country in direct and disastrous competition with the manufacturer of potato starch. On the present tariff schedule these substances have a duty levied upon them of 1 cent per pound. The duty is entirely too low. The duty is not in conformity with any principle of tariff levying that can be justified, as I will endeavor to show to the House.

Dextrine, gum substitute, and British gum are imported into this country and used for precisely the same purpose for which potato starch is employed—for starching fabrics, for sizing fabrics, for printing cloths, and purposes of that kind. Under this classification of the tariff by which these articles are permitted to come in at the low rate of duty of 1 cent per pound the result has been that since 1883 the importation of these gums has almost doubled. In 1883 there were imported 2,639,000 pounds. In 1887 there were imported into this country of these gums and dextrine 5,617,751 pounds. Now, on the average 1 bushel of potatoes will produce 8 pounds of potato starch. At the present rate of duty of 2 cents per pound, that would be a duty of 16 cents on the potato starch. On a bushel of potatoes, under the existing tariff, and under the tariff as I understand it is to be left by the Mills bill, as the gentleman from Arkansas explained this morning, the duty on a bushel of potatoes is 15 cents.

Now, 1 bushel of potatoes, producing 8 pounds of starch, would, under the proposed tariff, admit the manufactured product of a bushel of potatoes at 8 cents duty, while the raw potatoes themselves have to pay 15 cents per bushel. That is manifestly contrary to any just principle of tariff duties. But this gum substitute and dextrine is a still more advanced product of the potato starch. It requires about 1¼ pounds of starch to make a pound of gum substitute or dextrine, and yet, at the rate of 1 cent per pound, while the bushel of potatoes in the raw state would have to pay 15 cents duty, this highly manufactured product of the bushel of potatoes would come in at 5½ cents; 5½ pounds of gum substitute or British gum coming in at 1 cent per pound would pay only 5½ cents. In other words, the product of the potato advanced two stages—first, to the stage of potato starch, and then to the still further manufactured stage of dextrine or gum substitute—would come in for 5½ cents, while the bushel of potatoes would pay 15 cents. In other words, again, the manufactured product would be admitted at about one-third of the duty that was imposed on the raw material. That is a condition of things that certainly ought not to exist. Now, my amendment proposes to put this duty upon this gum, dextrine, and substances of that kind at a rate proportionate to the duty which is laid upon the raw material.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

On motion of Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, Mr. BOUTELLE was allowed to continue his remarks for five minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. This is a matter of great importance to the potato growers in the section of country to which I have alluded in my previous remarks. Of course it is obvious that if we permit the advanced product of potatoes to be introduced into the country at a lower rate of duty than the potatoes themselves pay, that is the most serious and disastrous kind of competition, and that is the condition of things to-day. I have already spoken of the large increase in the importation of these gums, which go directly to fill the place that would be supplied by the manufacturers in this country. We have been manufacturing the gums or dextrines in the United States until within a year or two. I went before the Ways and Means Committee in 1884 on this subject and endeavored to get an increase in the duty on dextrine, because it was believed and stated that unless the duty were raised to a rate commensurate with that on other articles it would be disastrous to the dextrine factories in this country.

At that time we were manufacturing quite a large amount of dextrine and gum in Rhode Island and other States, but under the operation of the tariff those mills have been closed, and my information is that now there is not a pound of these gums manufactured in the United States, notwithstanding the fact that we have abundant facilities for growing the potatoes and that the manufacture would afford profitable employment to our own people. But the inequality of the tariff as it exists now, and as it is proposed to be perpetuated by this bill, is such that the foreign manufacturer of dextrine is enabled to put his goods on our market at a rate with which it is absolutely impossible for us to compete. At the present rate of consumption I assume that by saving for ourselves the manufacture of these substances we would give our farmers a home market for from three-fourths of a million to a million bushels of potatoes every year—a very important item. But the point to which I particularly desire to call the attention of gentlemen on the other side is this: Irrespective of the tariff upon potatoes or on their products, in view of the fact that we have placed and are perpetuating a duty of 15 cents a bushel on potatoes as they are dug from the field, we ought not to permit this highly-advanced product of potatoes to come in at a rate of duty only about one-third as much as the rate levied on the potatoes themselves.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, the present rate of duty on dextrine, burnt starch, gum substitute, etc., the articles mentioned in this paragraph, is 31.59 per cent., or 1 cent per pound. The duty on starch under the existing law is 2 cents a pound. The committee realized that that was an unreasonable discrimination against the higher product and they therefore lowered the duty on starch to 1 cent a pound. The effect of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] would be to increase the duty on dextrine, burnt starch, etc., to a rate above 94 per cent., and if the importation under that duty kept simply at what it is now, instead of making a diminution of revenue by this provision of the bill, there would be an increase of more than $160,000.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I state very frankly that my object is not to increase the revenue, but is to prevent importation and to stimulate production at home.

Mr. McMILLIN. Your object, then, is to make a prohibitory and exclusive duty upon this commodity?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. I thank the gentleman for his candor. Mr. Chairman, I insist that upon substances so essential as these are in manufactures this House would not be justified in putting a duty of 94 per cent. in order to make it prohibitory.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. McMILLIN. In a moment. The gentleman but a few minutes ago was joining with his friends on that side of the House—not by word of mouth, I believe, but in action—against the rate that was proposed to be levied on rice, one part of which was only fifty and odd per cent. Yet now he turns around and says that we ought to raise this duty on these articles from 31 per cent. to 94 per cent.! Now, I insist that that should not be done.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I want to make myself understood in regard to the "prohibitory" question, because that is an expression that is easily misunderstood. When I said that my design was to make this duty prohibitory, I meant to make it prohibitory against the competition of a product which comes in as a result of underpaid foreign labor; I meant to make it prohibitory up to the point where importations of these articles shall come in fair competition with articles produced in this country by labor paid at remunerative rates.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does not my friend believe that the rate he has proposed, 3 cents a pound, would be not merely compensation sufficient for the difference in wages but would be absolutely prohibitory?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not.

Mr. McMILLIN. Well, that is the fact. It certainly would be.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I believe it would have the effect of enabling the American farmer to produce potatoes and the American manufacturer to produce dextrine at a profit. It would enable them to pay the farm hands engaged in raising the potatoes and the laborers employed in the manufacture the rates of wages that we desire to have prevail in this country, and would prevent them from being brought in competition, as they are to-day, with the underpaid labor of Europe. That is the object of our tariff, and that is the object I have in view in offering this amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. The rate in the bill, 1 cent a pound, is the very rate which the gentleman's own party fixed by the tariff of 1883.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I admit that.

Mr. McMILLIN. This is not a reduction.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I admit that.

Mr. McMILLIN. We are proposing to let the duty stand where it has been under the existing tariff, and if there is any complaint to be made about wages having been lowered or manufactures having been injured or destroyed, the gentleman must complain of his own party.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] must recognize the fact that this bill proposes to remedy the defects of the existing law.

Mr. McMILLIN. It does wherever it can do so; but it is not possible to remedy every defect that is found in the law. We have reduced the rate of duty on starch to 1 cent, which is the rate on dextrine. We have destroyed that inequality.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate on the pending amendment has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I move to strike out the last word. I call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] to the fact that under the existing law, which the Mills bill does not propose to disturb in this respect, the duty on potatoes is fixed at 15 cents per bushel, and unless you adopt my amendment, or some other amendment increasing the duty on dextrine and gum substitute, you will permit the advanced product of potatoes to come in at a rate only about one-third as high as that which is levied on the potatoes themselves, the duty on potatoes being 15 cents per bushel, and the duty on dextrine and gum substitute being 5½ cents. Now, that certainly can not be advisable. It certainly is not businesslike. Either the duty on potatoes is too high or the duty on the manufactured article is too low.

Mr. McMILLIN. If potatoes were used only for the production of this article then there might be some force in the argument of the gentleman; but he must remember that this is one of the least uses to which potatoes are applied.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understand that to be the fact; but at the same time the gentleman must recognize that the stimulation of the potato starch industry has a direct stimulating effect upon the devoting of land area to the cultivation of potatoes, and to that extent tends to a cheapening of this product.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman is in effect complaining of the rate of duty on potatoes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am not; I am complaining that the duty on the product of potatoes is not so high as it ought to be. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this fact, that under the present bill the duty on potato-starch is put at 1 cent per pound; yet it is understood and admitted that it takes on the average a pound and a half of starch to make a pound of dextrine; and the duty you propose on dextrine is only the same that you propose on starch.

Mr. McMILLIN. But we correct the existing evil to the extent of one-half. We did not go below 1 cent, but did bring down the duty to the extent of one-half of the difference that originally existed.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The trouble is that the correction is made in the interest of the foreign producer, not in the interest of the American farmer.

Mr. McMILLIN. It would seem impossible to satisfy my friend. He complains that the duty on starch is too great as compared with the duty on dextrine; yet, when we attempt to make a reduction he says we are operating in the interest of the foreign producer.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly I do; and this bill shows that I am correct. Here is an inequality of duty between a crude article and its manufactured product, both being articles which can be produced in the United States profitably with proper protection; and yet, when the attention of the House is called to this matter the Democratic side, instead of removing the evil by putting up the duty on the article on which the duty is too low, attempts to remedy it by cutting down the duty upon the article on which the duty is low enough already. I do not think such legislation is in the interest of the American farmer or of the American people. I believe it would be better for our people if we could raise in this country every bushel of potatoes required for the manufacture of the starch or gums or other substances which go into the multiform manufactures carried on in this country. It is the duty of the American Congress to adjust duties in the interest of the American farmer, and not in the interest of the German or the English farmer.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] insists upon making a comparison between the profits made by the Southern rice-planter and those of the Western wheat and corn grower. I think the gentleman does not take into consideration the fact that the two systems of farming are essentially different. I know myself but little about the yield of the Western corn and wheat lands; but I am informed by a gentleman who lives in that section, who comes, I believe, from the State of Ohio, that in his State it is not an unusual thing for an acre of corn to yield 30, 40, and sometimes as high as 60 bushels. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. O'NEALL], who sits behind me, says that where he lives the yield is sometimes 75 to 100 bushels per acre.

Mr. WARNER. Is there any gentleman on this floor from the State of Ohio who will say that the average yield of corn in that State is more than 40 bushels an acre? I do not think there is.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not say the average.

The gentleman insists that this is a tax for the benefit of the landowners of the South, and that it inures chiefly to the benefit of a particular class of Southern farmers. In that also he is mistaken. The actual profits of the Southern rice-farm owner are not equal to those of the Western wheat-crop grower, and for the simple reason that, as I understand the facts toexist in the West, a crop of wheat or corn can be grown every year. The land is rich, black soil, and will bear annual cultivation. The case is different with rice-growing lands in my State, and I speak only for my State. In my State the lands will not bear annual cultivation in rice. Rice is a very draining and exhaustive crop, and if any man should put his high lands in rice every year he would find at the end of four or five years that his land would be impoverished and incapable of growing anything.

Mr. WARNER. Does not the gentleman know that all Northern farmers rotate their crops; that the land, if planted in wheat or corn year after year, would become exhausted?

Mr. SIMMONS. The gentleman does not advert to the fact that the rice-producing lands can not be planted in corn in intervening years. In my section of the country the land which grows rice will not, as a rule, grow anything else; and if you wish to cultivate it in rice you must give up the cultivation of any other crop. We can not rotate the crops on these lands, and hence every alternate year they are idle and yield the owner no income.

Mr. Chairman, I said a little while ago that the result of the repeal of these duties would be to bring the poor rice laborer of the South into direct competition with the labor of China. When gentlemen from the Western States are confronted with the competition of the Chinaman on their own soil they raise up their hands in holy horror and denounce it on this floor and throughout the country. But when it is proposed that the Chinaman in China (where he lives more cheaply than he does in America) shall be put in competition with American labor on the Southern coast, these gentlemen say: "Open wide the doors, and let the competition come in."

Mr. YOST rose.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have only five minutes and can not yield. Again, when it is proposed by this bill to take off even a fraction of the high bounties which the manufacturing interests of the North enjoy under the existing tariff, these gentlemen on the other side protest against it. The slightest reduction of these duties they declare will destroy these industries, shut up their factories, and deprive their laborers of employment; but these same champions of protection think it a virtuous action to come down into that much-abused section where I and a large number of gentlemen on this side of the floor reside and take from us the meager benefits which our tariff laws grudgingly give us. When we seek to hold on to a part of the crumbs which came to us from that munificent system of bounties bestowed by the tariff which they have so long maintained in this country, they charge us with inconsistency and twit us with having protective tendencies.

Ah, gentlemen, you are willing to keep up the duties, oppressively high as they in many instances are, upon everything except rice and sugar. The duties upon these you wish to reduce even below the cut made by this bill. It is because they are Southern industries, and because they are farming industries.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to continue this discussion, but I do wish to say to the gentleman who last addressed the House [Mr. SIMMONS], and who represents a section of the country from which he says so many members on that side come, that when he talks of striking down an industry or striking a deadly blow at an industry of his State, and that that blow comes from gentlemen on this side, it is well enough for the gentleman to know the fact and it is well enough for the country to understand the deadly blow that is to be struck.

We simply say to those engaged in rice-culture, we will give you a protection of 50 per cent. You say you want 100 per cent. We ask for the facts upon which you base such a demand. Yet so far not one man has given any fact that tends to justify such demand. You deal in glittering generalities. You talk of Chinese cheap labor coming into competition with freedmen of the South. Yet you have not told us how much you pay these freedmen of the South a month. You have not told us what your land is worth. You have not told us what it costs to cultivate an acre of rice, and the simple fact, Mr. Chairman, is that these gentlemen demand this duty of 100 per cent. on rice for protection's sake alone and because they raise the rice. If they raised wool, it would, if necessary, have been given a like protection.

The last gentleman who addressed the House is a protectionist of the ultra type. He deceives himself when he imagines he is anything else. He is for the protection of those articles in which he and his constituents are interested, and for which I do not blame him. I would the Representatives on this floor from some of the other States would follow his example, and not let their industries be stricken down without protest.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to say that the reduction of duty on those articles under consideration meets with my hearty approval, and as soon as circumstances will permit I hope further reduction will be made.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman is not quite so much of a protectionist as I thought he was. He says the proposition for this reduction meets with his approval. What is there here to bind his conscience? What is there to trammel his vote? Has he not the right to vote as his judgment dictates, or is he voting the views of some other gentlemen? If the proposition I make here to-day meets with his approval, as he states it should meet with the disapproval of none—why does he not support it? Why does he not vote for it?

Gentlemen, you are mistaken. You are trying to pass this Mills bill through the House. You are striking at the industries here and there. You take such action as will secure votes enough to pass the bill. Where necessary you will give the protection to any amount to secure the votes required to pass it. I apprehend you will pass it through the House.

A MEMBER. We are right.

Mr. WARNER. Oh, yes, you are right. As one of the leaders on that side said, it was for the purpose of getting votes. As one gentleman, whose pet industry was taken from the free-list and put upon the dutiable list, said to a member on this floor, "Why, if you will vote for the bill, we will put what you want also upon the dutiable list." This is revenue reform!

That is the kind of legislation we have—a kind of legislation which I think the people of this country will not approve. The people will condemn your action in leaving a duty of 68 per cent. on sugar and 100 per cent. on rice, while you put wool, one of the leading agricultural products of the great Northwest, upon the free-list.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ELLIOTT. As to the remarks which have been made on the other side of the House in reference to the sectional character of this bill arising out of its provisions as to rice, I beg to say a word more.

What are the facts in connection with this industry in the State of South Carolina, where rice is grown to a larger extent than in any other State except Louisiana? The product of rice there forms just 2 per cent. of the agricultural products of the State. The product of oats forms twice as much. The product of corn is twelve times as much, and of cotton twenty-five times as much.

There is the status of this industry in South Carolina in comparison to other agricultural products. As to other products in this same connection, I may state that the product of cotton-mills is five times as much as rice; the product of the lumber, which is on the free-list, is five times as much, and the product of commercial-fertilizer factories twice as much.

Now, all this outcry has been raised of a sectional character over an industry which occupies a comparatively insignificant position in regard to the agricultural products of a State which, with one single exception, is the largest rice-growing State in the Union. That points to what a slight foundation, or in fact to the utter absence of any foundation on which is based the charge that has been so frequently made on the floor, that this bill is prepared in the interest of the South.

But the gentleman spoke of the conditions that confronted us in reference to this subject. He asked the question, and I answered by way of response, in the first place, that the duty now of 2½ cents per pound on cleaned rice was a condition; that is the status which this committee found. They have made a large reduction. Why should it all be cut off? Why should the duty be abolished on this agricultural industry, where labor forms at least two-thirds of the entire cost of production; where, in certain sections at least, the industry is not remunerative; where there is no trust or combination to keep up prices, and where, under the general downward tendency of values, the price of American rice has been diminishing year by year? As has been shown, the great mass of the rice imported for food is consumed by the Chinese, and the duty paid by them is probably about the only contribution made by them towards the support of the Government.

The granulated rice or rice-meal imported, amounting to 48,526,723 pounds last year, is used entirely in the manufacture of beer, and upon that, as in case of other material entering into manufactures, the duty has been placed very low, 15 per cent. ad valorem. Taking the home production of 156,000,000 pounds, and the amount imported for food, about 44,000,000 pounds, the consumption per capita is less than 4 pounds per annum. It is absurd, then, to speak of it as a necessary article of food in this country.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman please state what it costs to raise an acre or a barrel or a bushel of rice?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I was just coming to that point. I am speaking now of the cultivation of rice upon the rivers, which comprises the great bulk of the product of the South. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] speaks of the upland rice, which costs much less to produce, yields less, and the price of the product is less.

But upon these plantations built up on the water courses of the South the conditions are very different. One inevitable condition is that the land must be where there is a tidal flow, and altogether of fresh water, because the slightest infusion of salt water destroys the crop. The plantations must be reclaimed from the swamps, and the dams or embankments constructed, and canals and ditches dug, at a cost of from $75 to $200 per acre, according to the locality. These dams must be thrown entirely around swamps over which the water flows at every high tide. These are the original outlays. In addition the cost of cultivating an acre of rice upon plantations of this character is estimated at not less than from $25 to $30.

The great difference between this industry and all others lies in the fact that improved machinery can not be employed to any extent in it; and this brings about a sharp competition between the class of labor that is employed in the South upon it, the colored labor, and the labor producing the foreign rice, which receives as compensation an average of from 50 cents a month, not a day, but from 50 cents a month to 6, 7, or 10 cents a day. And that is the labor you wish to make the colored labor of the South come in sharp competition with. As I have said, you can not employ machinery. Improved machinery is of no possible use there. It is pretty much all labor and labor in its most primitive form.

Mr. GEAR. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Certainly.

Mr. GEAR. Do you not cover in that statement not only the cost of the irrigating ditches, but the labor as well?

Mr. ELLIOTT. No, of course not. The ditches are dug at the outset. The plantations then have to be kept up and repairs made, and ordinary repairs are included in this cost.

Mr. HOLMES. Now please state what it costs here by way of labor to produce rice by the barrel, bushel, or acre, so that we may have an opportunity of comparing it with the low-waged product to which you have referred. This labor is very cheap abroad, as the gentleman states. Now let us know what it is at home.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on this amendment.

Mr. HOLMES. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then let us see if we can not arrive at some understanding as to the time when the debate shall close. I ask unanimous consent that all debate be closed in five minutes on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment is a formal amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. I mean the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I ask that it be fixed at ten minutes.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will accept that.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from South Carolina for five minutes longer.

Mr. HOLMES. What I was about to ask the gentleman from South Carolina was to give the labor cost in his State in raising rice. He has stated the cheap character of the labor abroad producing the imported rice. Now, what is it paid here? What do the colored men of the South who labor in the rice-fields receive, and what is the cost per bushel, per acre, or per barrel? These are facts that will be interesting to the committee. What do they get per day or per month?

Mr. ELLIOTT. There is no rate per day or month in this industry. It is not employed on that basis, but it is altogether task labor. So much is paid for so much work. The work may be completed at any period during the day, 12, 1, or 2 o'clock, according to the skill of the workman and the character of work.

All the statistics that have been given relative to the cost of labor in the rice industry in South Carolina are utterly misleading. Ordinarily no men are employed by the day and none by the month. It is in the power of the laborer to make such pay as he chooses, according to the amount of work he does. So far as cutting rice is concerned, it has to be done with an old-fashioned reaping-hook, not with improved machinery. It must be all cut by hand, and must frequently be taken out of the field upon the head of the laborer. The price for reaping is $1 per acre, showing an enormous increase in the cost of reaping an acre of rice over what it would cost to reap an acre of wheat.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Is it not true that the average pay of laborers engaged in the culture of rice is less than 50 cents per day; and is it not also true that, as a rule, they are paid in store orders and not in cash?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Not at all, as a rule.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Then the gentleman has not been informed correctly

Mr. ELLIOTT. It is not true. I will undertake to say that nowhere in the world is there a better feeling existing between employers and their laborers than those engaged in the rice industry in South Carolina.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. What are they paid per day?

Mr. ELLIOTT. The cultivation has diminished at least 50 per cent. and has thrown out of employment a great number of laborers. If it were not for the kindly feeling existing between the employers and the employés in that section of country, and the care the rice planters have for their laborers, it would be impossible for the colored race to exist without verging upon starvation. I will explain further. The invariable custom is that on these plantations laborers have their houses free of rent; they have as much land as they care to cultivate free of rent, and fuel and everything of that sort free; they are charged for nothing. The only condition of these favors is that whenever their labor is required they shall give it at the usual price for that character of work in cash.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to inquire if you are in favor of protection?

Mr. ELLIOTT. As an original proposition I would not set out to protect any industry merely for protection; but we find this condition attaching to this and other industries, and the question is how much to reduce the duties and thereby diminish the revenues. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. SPOONER. That is the condition which confronts you?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes. We have cut down the duty on rice 18 per cent.; more than twice as much as the general cut on dutiable articles.

Mr. HOLMES. If I understand the gentleman, he can not tell what it costs to raise an acre of rice.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Certainly I can. It costs from twenty-five to thirty dollars an acre. Here is another difference. When you produce your wheat the farmer gathers the wheat and is done with it. What is done with rice? It has to be prepared for market by being sent to mill to be pounded and put in barrels, all of which is charged to the planter; then it is put upon the market.

I state upon my personal knowledge that after the planter has run all the risks of that cultivation, furnished the land and the capital, risked the gales and freshets, after the rice has been thrashed by machinery, more or less expensive, and is loaded for transportation to the mill, the cost from that time until it is sold is frequently 20 per cent. of the gross proceeds of the shipment.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Do not all of the expensive conditions of producing rice which you state apply to the production of foreign rice with which you compete?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Not at all. As I understand it, they are not subject to the great risk of absolute annihilation—not injury, but annihilation in a single night—of an entire crop and almost the ruin of a plantation worth $40,000. Instances have been known where an equinoctial gale has so wrecked such a plantation that it had to be sacrificed for five or six thousand dollars.

I have spoken of the abandonment of many valuable plantations because the industry is not remunerative. When this occurs it must be borne in mind that, in consequence of the artificial character of the plantations, dams, trenches, and floodgates, the value of the property is soon entirely destroyed and the land lapses back into its original valueless condition. Nor has any other crop yet been found that can be cultivated on these lands.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I ask to append a table of prices.

Lowest and highest price of rice per 100 pounds in each year in the New York market from 1825 to 1886, inclusive.

[American Almanac for 1888.]

Year.	Lowest.	Highest.	Year.	Lowest.	Highest.
1825	$2.00	$4.00	1856	$3.62	$4.87
1826	2.00	3.87	1857	3.25	5.37
1827	2.50	4.00	1858	2.75	3.75
1828	2.50	4.50	1859	3.00	4.50
1829	2.50	3.75	1860	3.00	4.62
1830	2.00	3.50	1861	3.00	7.25
1831	2.50	4.00	1862	6.62	7.75
1832	2.75	4.25	1863	3.75	8.50
1833	2.75	3.75	1864	7.00	15.50
1834	2.25	3.62	1865	9.75	14.00
1835	2.75	4.50	1866	11.50	15.25
1836	3.00	4.25	1867	8.50	12.50
1837	3.12	5.00	1868	8.25	11.25
1838	3.25	5.37	1869	7.25	10.00
1839	3.00	5.06	1870	5.50	9.50
1840	2.75	4.00	1871	6.75	9.75
1841	2.87	4.12	1872	7.50	9.50
1842	2.00	3.31	1873	7.00	9.50
1843	1.87	3.00	1874	6.75	10.00
1844	2.25	3.62	1875	6.50	8.50
1845	2.62	4.75	1876	5.00	7.50
1846	2.87	4.50	1877	5.00	7.00
1847	8.25	13.75	1878	5.50	8.00
1848	7.75	13.00	1879	5.50	7.25
1849	2.25	3.50	1880	5.50	8.00
1850	2.25	3.37	1881	5.00	7.75
1851	2.75	3.12	1882	5.25	8.50
1852	2.75	5.00	1883	4.00	7.25
1853	3.37	4.50	1884	4.50	6.50
1854	4.12	4.62	1885	3.25	5.38
1855	2.50	5.87	1886	3.00	5.00

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber ought not to be surprised at the attitude which gentlemen on this side take on this question, although they seem to be. While we are all protectionists and believe in protecting all of the products, North and South, East and West, that need protection, we still are not such extreme protectionists as not to find in some cases the possibility of a tariff being too high. It is simply that, and that alone, which has called for the suggestion of the amendments that have been made in reference to the two items of sugar and rice. Now, sir, if rice is not over-protected by this bill I am in favor of the bill as it stands. If sugar is not protected more than it need be under all the circumstances I am not in favor of any reduction upon that list.

But, on the other hand, we think we have a right to say that we are surprised at the argument which we hear from the other side of the Chamber. I have listened to the general discussion all through when I could be present, and when I could not be present I have read the speeches from that side of the House. I have found them in spirit, in soul, in intellect, and in sentiment opposed altogether to protection as protection. I hear that a tariff is a tax equal to itself, not only upon the articles imported, but all that are consumed. I hear it in every speech on that side of the House. I hear it continually week after week. Now, when the question of sugar comes up and the question of rice comes up, the very argument that we make for wool and for other products of other parts of the country is urged by these same gentlemen, who have ignored the principle of this argument heretofore in the general discussion, and will ignore it when we come to those specific things.

They will take the article of rice and insist that it shall continue to carry a duty of more than 100 per cent. They complain that we of the North are striking deadly blows at the industry of the South when we propose to bring this duty down to 50 per cent. In a few days, or a few hours it may be, we shall reach the great Northern production of wool, which stands protected now by a duty of not over 30 per cent.; and they will strike off the entire protective tariff on that article, not heeding any complaint that we may make that they are giving a deadly blow to one of the productions of the North. They will do this without a single qualm of the inteilect or the conscience, if there can be a qualm of intellect. They have so misdirected their minds in regard to this matter—so thought and so continued to think—that they do not believe intellectually there is any inconsistency in striking down wool and in holding up rice, although wool for the present is protected, as I say, by a duty of only 30 per cent.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the answer may be made to this that wool is a necessity of all the people. I have heard that over and over again. So it is; but it is not more needful than food. There is not a man on the other side of the House who can give a good reason for protecting sugar and rice which is not an equally good reason in my mouth in favor of protecting wool, and I defy any man to undertake it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Has the entire time for debate on this subject expired?

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto is now closed.

Mr. BOUTELLE. As most of the ten minutes seem to have been occupied in discussing something not very germane to the pending amendment, I hope I may be permitted to close the debate on this question by asking the members of the Ways and Means Committee, as a matter of justice and logic and good sense, to correct the error in this case, as they corrected the error into which they found they had fallen in regard to glue. They replaced the duty on glue. I ask that they now unanimously consent to put the duty on potato-starch back to 2 cents a pound, and fix the duty on gum substitute as proposed in my amendment, which will be a proper and relative proportion of duties.

Mr. McMILLIN. We have no authority to accept the gentleman's proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto is now closed. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] If there be no objection, the formal amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Maine; which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 377 insert:

"Dextrine, burnt starch, gum substitute or British gum, 3 cents per pound."

The amendment was rejected; there being—ayes 56, noes 77.

The Clerk read as follows:

Raisins, 1½ cents per pound.

Mr. VANDEVER. I move to amend the line just read by striking out "one and one-half" and inserting "two," so as to make the duty on raisins 2 cents per pound. Mr. Chairman, the rate of duty upon raisins under the existing law is 2 cents a pound; this bill proposes to reduce it to 1½ cents. In submitting my amendment I desire to call attention to the fact that raisin production, commercially, is of comparatively recent origin in the State of California. Three years ago the entire raisin production of that State was about 300,000 boxes of 20 pounds each. Last year we produced about 800,000 boxes. This year there are in the State of California about 15,000 acres devoted to the cultivation of raisin grapes. The season having been favorable, there is a larger acreage than ever before. Those 15,000 acres of raisin grapes will, it is estimated, produce probably a million and a half boxes of raisins this year—20-pound boxes, representing a value of not less than $3,000,000.

The raisin-producing portion of California is the only part of this country that seems to come into competition with the foreign production of raisins, which come from Portugal and Spain. In the State of California, our soil and climate being so peculiarly favorable, we have demonstrated a capacity to supply the entire home demand for raisins. The bill before us proposes to reduce the duty one-half cent per pound, which, upon the product of the raisin-producing portion of California lying wholly, I believe, within my district, will amount to something like $150,000. The duty upon imported raisins last year under the existing law was about $800,000. It is estimated that if the change of duty proposed in this bill from 2 cents to 1½ be made, the duty will amount to about $600,000.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, to the members of the committee that there may be a policy in that. If this proposed rate in the bill under consideration becomes a law it strikes a blow at that raisin industry in the State of California which will almost entirely annihilate the production of raisins there, and to supply the deficit in the consumption we must import it from abroad. The reduction of one-half cent a pound will operate as a protection to the imported article, and a discrimination against the domestic article; and I am sorry to say so, and to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this change in the duty on raisins is not exceptional, because so far as that part of the country is concerned, and under the operation of this Mills bill, many of its most important and leading industries are sufferers to a large extent. And in the region of the country where I live, where these raisins are produced mainly by small landholders, householders, people look around upon these flourishing fields which their industry has built up and contemplate the fact that under the provisions of this bill a blow will be struck at them which is like striking a blow at their very homesteads.

Sir, it is worthy of the consideration of this committee to determine whether they will inflict this wrong upon that section of country, and follow up the rigors of this bill, which have already passed under review, placing articles on the free-list which concern directly the interests of so many persons on that side of the continent.

I submit these observations for the consideration of the committee. But there is much more to be said. I will only add in conclusion, that if an ocean to-day rolled between the State of California and the Halls of this House, and in the Hall of this House the ruling majority, which supports the Mills bill, and which has the indorsement of the Executive of the United States, was in power, they could not assume a more unfriendly attitude to the people of the Pacific coast than they do under the operation of the bill. If there is any discrimination in the provisions of the bill under consideration in regard to this great industry it is in favor of the foreign product and against the producers of our own country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McKENNA. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be adopted, and I do not utter an idle hope. Nor, sir, do I despair of its adoption, notwithstanding the experience we have already had. And, sir, I think I can call upon my Democratic colleagues to support this amendment. I do not do this to make them conspicuous, nor to put them in a distinct and offensive position toward it, but to invoke their support for it.

I know, sir, that a man must stay with and go with his party in most cases. One would perform but a weak and desultory part alone. But, sir, I believe they can and ought to support this amendment.

They can do so and still be consistent and loyal to their party, and I ask them, therefore, and through them all Democrats, to support it. You have greater inconsistencies in your bill than this. I do not say this tauntingly. My own side of the Chamber has convinced me that there can be inconsistencies. It may be, sir, wise inconsistencies. General truths are not always carried out to the extent that they are capable of in logical illation. We assert universal liberty to all, but we give it to none. Its very perfection might become its vice. Therefore if I can concede wise inconsistencies to this side of the Chamber, I can also concede wise inconsistencies to the other side of the Chamber. But I pause to remark that there must be some limitation in this, both to tariff reformers and to protectionists. I shall not now stop, sir, to define what that limitation is. I say, and speaking as a protectionist, and of protection, if some pluck out the gray hairs and some pluck out the black hairs, the animal in time will be completely shorn.

But, I repeat, there may be wise inconsistencies, and therefore I ask you Democrats to concede us this amendment. You claim to be conservative and temperate to some industries. Be so to this industry. It needs it. It is a new industry and a struggling one. What that means I need not dwell on; what of trouble and expense and, may be, misfortune, I need not dilate upon. New soils must be found and tested; experiments must be made, their results often discarded, others tried; ways and means must be devised; markets must be found and conquered. It takes time to do this. It takes capital to do it, and capital is often sunk in doing it.

The tax of 1½ cents or a tax of 2 cents is no special protection to raisins, sir. I hold in my hand a wholesale price-list of raisins, which I obtained from one of the grocery stores of this town, which shows that the wholesale price ranges from 7 cents a pound to 40 cents a pound. I will insert here a table giving the prices. It is as follows:

Raisins.

Finest Dehesa layers, 6 crowns, 22-pound boxes	$8.00
Finest Dehesa layers, 5 crowns, 22-pound boxes	7.50
One-fourth box, finest Dehesa layers, 6 crowns	2.25
One-fourth box, finest Dehesa layers, 5 crowns	2.10
One-fourth box, finest Dehesa layers, 4 crowns	1.90
London layers	3.25
London layers, flat, half box	1.70
London layers, flat, quarter box	.90
Loose Muscatels, 5 crown, 22-pound boxes	3.50
Loose Muscatels, 4 crown, 22-pound boxes	3.25
Loose Muscatels, 3 crown, 22-pound boxes	2.75
Loose Muscatels, 2 crown, 22-pound boxes	2.00
Ondara, Layers, finest	.08
Valencia, finest	.07
Sultanas, finest	.12
Sultanas, good quality	.09

California raisins.

Loose Muscatels, 3 crown, 20-pound boxes	2.25
Loose Muscatels, 2 crown, 20-pound boxes	1.60
London Layers, 3 crown, 20-pound boxes	2.90

The import value of the raisins at the custom-house is 5½ cents a pound. Now, raisins worth 40 cents a pound, and surely they are luxuries, under the principles of this bill and under the principles asserted by everybody, ought to bear a higher duty. A higher tariff tax, if it be a tax, than 2 cents should be imposed even for the privilege of the market if not to secure protection to a home industry.

The raisin production of California is very great. Attention has been called to it by my colleague [Mr. VANDEVER], but I desire to show how it has increased in the last few years. In 1873 it amounted to but 6,000 boxes, while in 1887 it was 800,000 boxes. Sixteen million pounds of raisins was the product of the last year, equal to 58,000,000 pounds of fresh grapes.

This year it is estimated that we will produce 1,500,000 boxes of raisins, or 30,000,000 pounds, consuming in their manufacture at least 105,000,000 pounds of fresh Muscat grapes. But that is not all. Connected with this industry there are other industries, and these also will be injuriously affected by the reduction of the duty.

Now, I will ask the gentlemen of the Ways and Means Committee, I ask my colleague [Mr. BIGGS] who sits before me, whom I know believes every word I utter, why not restore this duty to 2 cents? Why is not this a "condition" as in other cases there are "conditions?" But I urge nothing of that sort now, Mr. Chairman. I wish to urge upon the Democrats of this House the concession of half a cent. If I dared to talk politics to them, Mr. Chairman, I would say more Democrats than Republicans are interested. I do not mean to say those Democrats will leave their party on account of the bill or stay in it on account of the amendment; but they would have kinder feelings for their party and better hope for the party if the amendment should be adopted.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. Debate on the amendment is exhausted. The question is on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from California, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk reported the amendment.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I move to strike out the last word.

I will state, Mr. Chairman, that the committee that formulated this bill and have undertaken to strike out half a cent a pound on raisins have not been very consistent when they come to consider the difference in the price of raisins and rice to which they have added 100 per cent. You must remember the average price of raisins in this country is 10 cents a pound. The duty of 1½ cents a pound on raisins makes 15 per cent. protection. You have on the one side raisins and on the other side you have rice, which you raise in the South. On that we have supported the duty and are willing to stand by the duty of 2 cents per pound. That makes 100 per cent. you have on rice which you raise in the South. Now you are going to begrudge the people in California the paltry sum of 15 per cent.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman is incorrect as to the price of South Carolina rice. He is referring to foreign rice. The price of Louisiana and South Carolina rice is 5 and 6 cents a pound. That is the price in London.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Let me tell the gentleman from Arkansas that if that imported rice came in free the South Carolina rice would sell at the very same price it does. I am a dealer in rice, and have dealt in it for twenty years. I know all about it. It will not bring a quarter of a cent more in the open market to-day.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We export a considerable amount of rice abroad, and that rice sells in the London market at not less than 5 cents a pound. Those are the official facts. If the gentleman can furnish any information——

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. You may have some little dainty articles fitted up for some of the nabobs in London, but the people of this country are not that kind. They are satisfied with the plain domestic rice. The Chinese rice has no foothold in this country. It is the East India rice that it comes in competition with.

We have given them 100 per cent. on rice, and now they offer us 15 per cent. on raisins. The raisin industry is a new industry. It has sprung up within the last five years. Five years ago you could find nothing of it, but now you find it. There is hardly a store in the Western States but what sells these California raisins. If this industry is left to itself and protected as it should be, the time will come when foreign raisins will be driven out of the market and California will supply our whole country with raisins.

But if this duty is reduced every year or two, as you propose to do, the result will be that less and less raisins will be raised, and the market will be left open for foreign products to come in.

Our friends on the other side contend that the reason they want to protect rice and the reason they want to protect sugar is because these products come into competition with the pauper labor of India and other countries. That is true. They are right in that respect, and that is just what we claim for all the other industries in the North. They want to put lumber on the free-list. Some one said it is true they want to put lumber on the free-list, although lumber is a product of the South. But that lumber does not come into competition with the lumber of the North. The whole country from the East to California on the border-line of Canada will be affected for two or three hundred miles into the interior by the reduction of lumber, while the South, Tennessee and Georgia, will feel no affect of it whatever. Why? Because the freight is so heavy on lumber that they can not ship it into the interior without the transportation costing more than the difference of the duty.

Therefore you gentlemen in the South can well afford to say "we have put lumber on the free-list," because putting it on the free-list will never affect you, but it will affect us up in the North; and so it is with salt, and so with other industries. [Applause.]

Mr. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman, before I begin my remarks I want to make an inquiry. I understand that the question under discussion is raisins. Am I correct in that?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the pending paragraph.

Mr. BIGGS. Well, sir, I was somewhat surprised when my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. WHITE], in discussing this paragraph, went back to the rice question. I rise here not for the purpose of discussing the rice question, or the lumber question, or the salt question, because all those have been disposed of. I rise for the express purpose of saying a few words on the raisin question. The distinguished gentleman from Indiana rose to make some remarks in favor of restoring the duty on raisins to 2 cents a pound, but he forgot his subject and went back to lumber and rice, and even to the question of free salt. I do not think there was any force in what he said, but I suppose that, for courtesy's sake, I must admit it was an argument.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of protecting every infant industry in this country. I stand here and say that I am in favor of protecting the raisins and everything that we produce, not only on the Pacific Slope, but throughout the entire length and breadth of this country.

Yes, sir; I want raisins protected; I want all the protection I can have for them and for our other industries; but, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I say without fear of successful contradiction that raisins are as well protected under this new bill as they were under the old, and now I propose to produce the proof. The duty under the old law was 2 cents a pound. Under that law there was a damage allowance of 10 per cent. on the invoice price if any case or box was damaged in the least. Under this bill there is no damage whatever allowed. The raisin industry is one of the great industries, not only of the Pacific slope, but of the whole United States, and it ought to be properly protected; but I say that under the 10 per cent. damage provision of the existing law the duty was reduced to about the rate at which it stands in this bill, and leaving that damage provision out of the bill practically restores the duty to what it is under the existing law.

Mr. VANDEVER. Will my colleague allow me a question?

Mr. BIGGS. With pleasure.

Mr. VANDEVER. Who pays the damage?

Mr. BIGGS. The shipper or the importer pays the damage, not the consumer. It is paid into the Federal Treasury as revenue collected by the people.

Mr. VANDEVER. Then how does the present bill affect the question of damage?

Mr. BIGGS. There is no damage allowed under this bill, and I say that that change will make the duty on raisins the same as it is now, 2 cents a pound.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Do you want this bill passed?

Mr. BIGGS. Yes, sir. We want all the protection we can get on every industry in California. I tell you that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will you not give us a little in Ohio, on wool?

Mr. BIGGS. Yes; I will give it to you if you can get it. [Laughter.] But I am not discussing the wool question now, or the salt question, or the rice question; I am discussing raisins. My colleague [Mr. MCKENNA] made a very correct statement of the number of boxes shipped, and of what we propose to ship in the future, and I tell you that we propose to supply not only the United States, but we expect that inside of twenty years we shall be exporting our product to all parts of the world where they want a choice quality of raisins.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. MORROW. I renew the amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask the gentleman to yield while I make a request that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. MORROW. I do not feel that I have any control over the matter, but so far as I am concerned I shall not occupy more than five minutes.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask unanimous consent that debate on the pending paragraph and amendments be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. FELTON. I object.

Mr. MORROW. Say fifteen minutes.

Mr. McMILLIN. I accept the gentleman's suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The request is made that the debate be limited to fifteen minutes.

Mr. VANDEVER. I object. There has been unlimited time allowed on other questions. We now have before us one of vital interest to our State.

Mr. McMILLIN. What time does the gentleman desire?

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, my colleague [Mr. BIGGS] has given to this bill a character that I had not before heard attributed to it—that it is a bill for the protection of the industries of this country. My impression, from the discussion I have heard on the other side of the House, was that the purpose was to reduce the duties upon the various items mentioned in the bill; and in accordance with that principle I understand it is the purpose to reduce the tariff on the article of raisins. It has been said over and over again that it was proposed to reduce the tariff in order that the consumer of the various articles on which the duty falls might obtain them at a cheaper rate. I do not know that such would be the result; I doubt it. But that has been the argument presented in support of the bill. Now, I understand from the statement of my colleague [Mr. BIGGS] that the reduction of the rate of duty is for the purpose of securing greater protection. This is not the purpose of the bill, as I understand it, and it will not so affect our industries, in my judgment.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that upon this article of raisins the other side of the House can very properly vote with us for the amendment proposed by my colleague [Mr. VANDEVER] to make the duty 2 cents a pound, the same as it stands in the existing law; and for this reason; the production of grapes for raisins, as stated by my colleague, is a new industry in this country. It is one in which a large amount of capital has been invested. It is an industry requiring time for development. The growth of a vineyard producing grapes for raisins requires two, three, four, and in some cases perhaps five years. During this time the vineyardist, of course, has no income; hence, almost inevitably, before his vineyard makes any return he becomes indebted to his banker or to his friends for money with which to carry on his enterprise. In this way many of the vineyardists of California are now more or less in debt, and will so continue until their enterprise is fully established and returns secured.

Now, if you reduce this duty half a cent per pound at this critical period what must be the result? The vineyardist, who has been borrowing money to carry him along till the time when the business will produce an income, will be informed by his banker that he can have no more money, because this bill will destroy the small margin of profit which he would otherwise receive on his production. I am afraid serious loss will be the result of this action now.

We have just had under discussion the duty on rice. Gentlemen on the other side of the House have explained why a protective rate of duty should be continued on the rice industry of the South equivalent to more than 100 per cent. ad valorem, and they have had the power to continue the rate. But now the very next article in the bill is that of raisins, on which the duty is 2 cents per pound, equivalent to 35.40 per cent. ad valorem, and it is proposed by this bill to reduce the duty to 1½ cents per pound. At this last rate the duty will be equivalent to an ad valorem duty of 26.55 per cent. Is this discrimination against our raisin industry to be accounted for by the fact that rice is an industry of the South and the production of raisins an industry of another section of the country?

The action of the majority in discriminating against raisins appears peculiar and incomprehensible when we come to consider the proposed change in detail. The present duty on cleaned rice is 2½ cents per pound, or the equivalent of 113.03 per cent. ad valorem. The rate in this bill is a reduction to 2 cents per pound, or the equivalent of 100.47 per cent. ad valorem. This is simply a reduction of only about 11 per cent. on the ad valorem duty. The present duty on uncleaned rice is 1½ cents per pound, or the equivalent of 71.52 per cent. ad valorem. The rate in this bill is a reduction to 1½ cents per pound, or the equivalent of 59.50 per cent. ad valorem. This is a reduction of about 16 per cent on the ad valorem duty.

The duty on granulated rice or rice meal is not changed, but continued at 20 per cent. ad valorem. The present rate of duty on rice paddy is 1½ cents per pound, or the equivalent of 134.50 per cent. ad valorem. The rate in the bill is a reduction to 1 cent per pound, or the equivalent of 107.60 per cent. ad valorem. This is a reduction of exactly 20 per cent. on the ad valorem duty.

Now, let us see how this bill treats raisins. The present duty on raisins is 2 cents per pound, or the equivalent of 35.40 per cent. ad valorem. The rate in the bill is a reduction to 1½ cents per pound, or the equivalent of 26.55 per cent. ad valorem. This is a reduction of 25 per cent. on the ad valorem duty.

You tenderly remove the duty from the different grades of rice to the extent of 11, 16, and 20 per cent., leaving granulated rice untouched, and you then at the very next blow remove 25 per cent. from the duty on raisins. Now, I ask is this a fair proposition under any possible state of facts relating to the assumed necessity for a reduction in the rates of duty? Your complaint is against the high rate of ad valorem duty on articles used in general consumption, yet you continue rice at a rate the equivalent of more than 100 per cent. ad valorem and strike 25 per cent. from the duty on raisins, reducing this article to 26.55 per cent. ad valorem.

These two articles come before the House with somewhat similar claims, though I contend that raisins present a much stronger claim for protection than does rice. As suggested to me by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ALLEN] both rice and raisins are necessary for a good pudding, and in this respect I suppose they have something in common, but apart from that it is proper that, with a view to the interest of labor, there should be a certain percentage of protection on both articles for the benefit of the home industry; but there is no good reason why raisins should be less protected than rice. Again, in California the vineyard industry is very different from the rice-fields of the South. In the South the production of rice is by owners of large tracts of land, securing crops from the first year. In California the vineyards are generally small, and the whole industry represents a great number of people, many of whom are poor, but who must patiently wait for returns. This industry is struggling into existence, and is obliged to compete with the cheap labor of Spain and Portugal.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McMILLIN. If the amendment of the gentleman from California should be adopted and this bill become a law, the effect, taken in connection with other paragraphs of the bill, will be, not to continue the duty on raisins as at present, but to increase it.

Mr. McKENNA. There ought to be an increase; and this would not be too much.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am not going to argue that question now. I simply desire to point out that the amendment would not simply retain the duty as in the existing law, though the House might probably suppose such would be the effect, judging by the face of the amendment.

Now, section 2927 of the Revised Statutes, which I will now take the time of the committee to read, provides that there shall be a reduction made on imported goods, wares, and merchandise for damages which may occur, whether as in this case through leakage or what not. There would be a reduction of the rate of duty in proportion to the damage sustained by the merchandise. But this bill, under section 19, changes that law and repeals it. So that very fact of itself is a protection to those who are engaged in raising the production in this country.

Again, under the existing law and the construction placed thereon by the courts, there is no change made or duty on the package containing these articles. But under the bill which we have under consideration the packages have to pay duty at their value. Those two sections themselves are an addition to the present rate of duty on articles where there is no change made in the existing law. Hence I say the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from California would be to increase the rate of duty upon the present rate rather than to leave it at the present rate.

From the best information I am able to get as to the amount of damage and waste and destruction from various sources the amount is something over 5 per cent. I am not prepared to say that it would be 8 or 9 per cent., the reduction proposed by the present bill.

Mr. MORROW. The amount of protection arising from the repeal of the provision of the present law would be infinitesimal. The damages to raisins in the course of transportation do not amount to anything.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am not prepared to state what it would amount to. Whatever it is it would amount to an increase of duty. The amount of revenue was $813,000; outside the additions made to which I have referred would be about $200,000. The only comment I have to make on that is to say that there is no place where revenue is less needed than in the vaults of the Treasury of the United States. There is no one on the continent which needs it less than the United States. We felt, therefore, the reduction was one proper to be made.

Mr. McKENNA. In consideration of the fact that foreign raisins are sold in the United States at wholesale at a price from 7 cents to 40 cents, why could you not make a reduction of the revenue somewhere else?

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes, perhaps we could; but every time we went to do it somewhere else, without one single exception, gentlemen on the other side said that was the wrong place.

Mr. McKENNA. But I have voted steadily against any reduction

Mr. McMILLIN. That is it. Where we have attempted to place it we have not had the co-operation of our friend from California.

Mr. McKENNA. That is not an answer to my question.

Mr. McMILLIN. Where else will the gentleman place it?

Mr. McKENNA. I think now you could afford to concede this much to that struggling industry, could you not?

Mr. McMILLIN. There might be other things which would sustain the reduction as well. I do not pretend to say there are not, but at the same time the reduction here is not an improper one.

The informal amendments, by unanimous consent, were withdrawn.

Mr. FELTON. I move to strike out the last word. Now, Mr. Chairman, if there is any other gentleman who desires to discuss this question, I will give way to him and let him do it, as this item has been very thoroughly discussed, the ground well thrashed over during the debate in its connection; but, sir, during the course of the long debate upon the pending bill I have listened with great attention to parts of it, and have noticed that very much has been said on both sides of the House in regard to the depressed conditions of the agricultural interests of the country, the deplorable condition of the tillers of the soil; that their capital and labor were unremunerative by reason of the low prices of their productions. As a reason for this existing state of affairs gentlemen differ; some attribute it to one cause, some to another, such as the restriction of the circulating medium, the demonetization of silver, heavy taxation. But as a rule by the gentlemen upon the other side, the tariff is held responsible.

Now, sir, while they may be factors in the case, I believe the great reason, the fundamental reason underlying the whole subject to be the keen competition between those engaged in these pursuits. I believe it to be much keener than in many, perhaps in any, of the manufacturing industries of the country. To comprehend this, one has but to look at the vast area of acreage now under cultivation, its wonderful fertility of soil, the rapid strides that have been made in it during the last quarter of a century—made possible by the wonderful transportation facilities which have grown up—the vast area of arable land still awaiting the husbandman and to be had almost for the taking. The result has been a production greater than the domestic wants of the country, and being practically without an export market for our surplus—certainly so at remunerative figures—as we are unable to compete in foreign markets with the cheap labor and cheap land of India, Southern Russia, Australia, and the Argentine Republic, also by the protection afforded those industries in other countries by the protective laws of their respective governments.

Sir, I regret that in the brief time allotted to me I shall be unable to elaborate as I would desire to do this part of the question, but will say if gentlemen upon the other side of the House are sincere in their desire to protect the farmer and his waning interests and the people throughout the country generally, here is the opportunity to assist an infant industry. Gentlemen upon the other side of the House may smile at this expression, but it is essentially true, and if this interest is fostered but for a short time, for a few years, repeating the remarks made by myself on another occasion some little time since upon a kindred item in this bill, such will be the production of this article and such will be its perfection as to drive from the market all foreign competition and make it, though now a luxury, within the reach of every man, however humble and straightened his means. And, sir, for this reason, had I been present, I would have voted for the duty upon sugar as presented in the pending bill, and I now say to gentlemen on both sides of the House that if its protection is maintained I believe, and I have scarcely a doubt that within seven years from this time this country will provide its own sugar and save to the nation and its circulating medium $100,000,000 in value per annum.

Now, sir, much has just been said in regard to the duty upon rice. I am in favor of a fair duty upon this article in order to protect the industry, and I say to gentlemen upon the other side of the House you have the negro element down South; it is largely increasing in numbers, and your first concern is how to furnish them with labor by which they can maintain themselves; and in my opinion to do so you will require all of the industries of which your soil is capable to be fostered—sugar, rice, and every other industry possible—and even then you may find it difficult.

Sir, I am a protectionist. I believe in the principle, and that it should be general and pervading our whole industrial pursuits, and that the tariff must exist as a whole or it must sooner or later be discarded. It is asking too much of human nature to have granted to one section what is denied in another.

Now, sir, this industry, for the present at least, needs encouragement and protection. Those engaged in it are mainly small farmers who have their all involved, and are just upon the eve of receiving the benefits of years of labor and at the expense in many instances of lost capital, provided protection is not denied them.

My distinguished colleague from one of the Northern districts who has just taken his seat has been the subject of some criticism in regard to his acts and votes upon this question. He is a good man, a clever man, and he tells us he is in favor of protection. Now, sir, it occurs to me that his great difficulty is that he is on the wrong side of the House and in the wrong party for a protectionist. [Applause.]

Mr. VANDEVER. Mr. Chairman, I want to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] for a few moments. He says that under the present law there is a drawback allowed upon damaged articles of raisins imported into this country from abroad which perhaps is a protection to the domestic product. He gives no items making up the amount to which he refers, but admits that the damage allowed upon the product imported is insignificant and hardly worth mentioning in the course of this debate. He shows a partiality upon his side of the question, and upon the part of my colleague from California on this side.

He favors this product coming in here from abroad. That, I think, is a great mistake to our own people.

Now, I want to say that if you restored California to the jurisdiction of the Spanish flag perhaps the interests of California might fare better than at the hands of some of these gentlemen on the other side; and I make that observation from this fact, that at the opening of this Congress a circumstance I alluded to the other day in a few remarks took place, and to which I then referred, when we were flooded with petitions from Portugal and Spain—producers of raisins—appealing to the Congress of the United States to reduce the tariff upon this product. They had already become aware of the fact that the competition between the raisins of California and the raisins of Spain and Portugal was threatening that industry of theirs, and they appealed to the Democrats of this country, for they had read the utterances of the President of the United States, Grover Cleveland, upon the general question of tariff upon imports, and understanding the attitude that gentlemen on that side of the House were taking, they appealed to them for a change of this tariff. They knew in that appeal they were appealing to their friends.

Now, gentlemen, the question comes home to us to-day in the shape of the amendment that has been offered, and it must be remembered that California does not appear here as a suppliant for anything that she is not entitled to. She is a component part of this great Republic, and holds out now in the near future the prospect of being one of the dominating States of this great Union. We can not forget the fact that she puts bread into the mouths of our friends upon the Eastern seaboard, and that she puts gold into their pockets, and that to-day there is an exemplification of the force and energy of the American character displayed upon the Pacific coast that you will be unable to find in any other part of the land.

This is one of our infant industries now rising in successful competition with all the world. Be just if you can not be generous to the people; and remember that when you come to California she always extends to you a liberal hand of welcome, an open and hospitable hand, and do not forget to be just in dealing with her. I venture to say that there is not a man within the sound of my voice to-day but that is closely and intimately associated with numerous persons upon the California coast.

We are here in the house of our friends, and we ask you to consider our interests in this Congress, and in connection with that great raisin industry, in preference to the people who live upon the other side of the roar of the Atlantic. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the formal amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. VANDEVER].

The question was put; and the Chair was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. VANDEVER. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 77.

Mr. VANDEVER. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from California [Mr. VANDEVER] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 77.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GUENTHER. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 378 insert: Eggs, 5 cents per dozen.

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Chairman, I yesterday received a numerously signed petition from farmers in my State, in which, among other things, they asked that eggs should be placed upon the dutiable-list at 5 cents per dozen. In my speech which I delivered some weeks ago upon the tariff I called attention to the fact that in the three months, October, November, and December, 1887, we imported 6,594,672 dozen eggs, at a value of $1,115,725, nearly four and one-half million dollars' worth of eggs per annum. One of my friends on the other side said in his tariff speech that he could see no good reason why the American hen should not be able to supply the demand for home consumption. I think, Mr. Chairman, in all seriousness, that the American hen ought to be encouraged to supply the demand for the consumption of our eggs, and I think that this amendment will do it. I only said in my speech that I wanted a duty of 3 or 4 cents per dozen on eggs, but in obedience to the instructions received from the farmers in my State

I offer this amendment that eggs shall be placed upon the dutiable-list at 5 cents per dozen.

The Chair put the question on the amendment, and was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. GUENTHER. I call for a division. I want to see the friends of the American hens.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 73.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GUENTHER. I offer the amendment which I now send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed after line 378 to insert:

"Vegetables in their natural state, or in salt or brine, not otherwise specially enumerated or provided for, 10 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. McMILLIN I make the point of order that that subject has already been disposed of, and is now out of order.

Mr. GUENTHER. I do not think that point of order is well taken. When this subject was up before it was in connection with the free-list, and it was impossible then to offer an amendment placing a duty on these vegetables.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman's remedy was by moving to strike the article out of the free-list. The paragraph will be found on page 6, after line 132.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already decided this question on a former occasion. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GUENTHER. Then I submit the amendment I now send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 378 insert:

"Beans, pease, and split pease, 20 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Chairman, 20 per cent. ad valorem is the present duty.

Mr. McMILLIN. To save time I make the same point of order on that amendment as I made on the other. On line 148, page 7, the Chair will find this matter disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Peanuts or ground beans, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound; shelled, 1 cent per pound.

Mr. YOST. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 379 and 380.

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has already been elaborately discussed and decided by the Chair on a former occasion.

Mr. GUENTHER. Have the farmers of the Northwest no rights——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not desire to hear further argument on the point of order nor to reopen the question. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. YOST].

Mr. YOST. Mr. Chairman, I do not see how the proposed change can possibly benefit any one; certainly not the consumer of the peanut. On the other hand, its tendency is and must be to very seriously affect the producer of the peanut. I therefore ask that the clause be stricken out entirely and the duty be restored to the present rate.

The Chair put the question, and was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. YOST. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 74.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mustard, ground or preserved, in bottles or otherwise, 6 cents per pound.

Cotton thread, yarn, warps, or warp yarn, whether single or advanced beyond the condition of single by twisting two or more single yarns together, whether on beams or in bundles, skeins, or cops, or in any other form, valued at not exceeding 40 cents per pound, 35 per cent. ad valorem; valued at over 40 cents per pound, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend as follows: Strike out all of lines 383 to 389 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Cotton thread, yarn, warps, or warp yarn, whether on beams or in bundles, skeins, or cops, or in any other form, valued at not exceeding 25 cents per pound, 10 cents per pound; valued at over 25 cents per pound and not exceeding 40 cents per pound, 15 cents per pound; valued at over 40 cents per pound and not exceeding 50 cents per pound, 20 cents per pound; valued at over 50 cents per pound and not exceeding 60 cents per pound, 25 cents per pound; valued at over 60 cents per pound and not exceeding 70 cents per pound, 30 cents per pound; valued at over 70 cents per pound and not exceeding 80 cents per pound, 35 cents a pound; valued at over 80 cents per pound and not exceeding $1 per pound, 45 cents per pound; valued at over $1 per pound, 45 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I offer, with one or two exceptions, places cotton thread, yarn, warps, or warp yarn at the same rate of duty as at present. There are in my district and in that adjoining, represented by my colleague, Mr. McADOO, four firms manufacturing cotton thread. These employ thousands of hands. The reasons for the adoption of this amendment are the same that have so often been given during the consideration of this bill. The cost of the plant of a cotton mill is at least double that of the cost in England and Scotland. The price of the material for the construction of the factory is double; the wages paid to the carpenters and masons are nearly three times those paid on the other side; the wages of those employed in our factories are from two to two and one-half times greater than the highest wages paid in England. This enables our mechanics who are employed in these factories to live better, to educate their children, and in a few years, with proper economy, to accumulate a sufficient amount to build neat and substantial cottages. The present duty is about the difference in wages paid here and those paid abroad. Should this bill become a law it will compel a reduction of wages, and thus hurt those whom it should be the policy of this Government to protect. But, Mr. Chairman, it will not result in any benefit to the consumer. The present cost of a spool of cotton at retail is 5 cents, and six spools are sold for 25 cents, or 4 1-6 cents a spool.

The passage of the Mills bill will have the effect only that the middlemen, the merchants, after its passage, instead of selling, as they do now, the American thread, will import more largely the foreign-made article, for the reason that it will yield to them a larger percentage of profit, and thus compel the American manufacturer to reduce the price to them, which he can only do by the reduction in the cost of manufacture. Hence the result will be no benefit to the consumer but the enrichment of the merchant at the expense of the wage-worker. To this I most earnestly protest, and ask for the adoption of my amendment. I shall also offer an amendment to lines 391 and 392, making the duty specific by placing spool-thread of cotton at 6½ cents per dozen spools. This is a reduction from the present rate.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment. I send my amendment to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cotton thread, yarn, warps, or warp-yarn (not wound on spools), whether single or advanced beyond the condition of single, by twisting two or more single yarns together, whether on beams or in bundles, skeins, or cops, or in any other form:

Valued at not exceeding 25 cents per pound, 10 cents per pound.

Valued at over 25 cents per pound, and not exceeding 40 cents per pound, 15 cents per pound.

Valued at over 40 cents per pound and not exceeding 50 cents per pound, 20 cents per pound.

Valued at over 50 cents per pound and not exceeding 60 cents per pound, 25 cents per pound.

Valued at over 60 cents per pound and not exceeding 70 cents per pound, 33 cents per pound.

Valued at over 70 cents per pound and not exceeding 80 cents per pound, 38 cents per pound.

Valued at over 80 cents per pound and not exceeding $1 per pound, 48 cents per pound; and ten per cent. ad valorem additional.

Valued at over $1 per pound, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. I will state that this simply puts back into the bill the existing law with respect to cotton yarns and warps, making a specific instead of an ad valorem duty; except that upon three grades of the finest yarns it increases the duty in a small degree. Upon that point I desire to occupy a few minutes in explaining to the committee how closely the present tariff is pared down upon those fine yarns, so that in many cases a similar product is brought in from abroad in spite of the duty; and I suppose I can not explain that in any better way than by illustrating from a practical example how these yarns are made. It happened that only a few years ago in one of our New England cities there was built a modern mill, modern in every respect, built according to the best plans of the best mill architect that could be found. That mill was equipped with the best and most modern labor-saving machinery known to cotton manufacturers. It was intended to produce a fine fabric, which would employ the highest skilled labor. In every pound of this fabric there was consumed a quantity of Sea Island cotton which cost 45½ cents per pound of cloth; the wages paid were 87¾ cents per pound of cloth; the taxes and other incidental expenses were 32½ cents per pound of cloth; making an aggregate of $1.65¾ per pound, or 12¾ cents per yard. Now, under our present tariff, that fabric was imported at 13 cents a yard, and the quarter of a cent margin did not suffice to pay interest on the investment, so that this mill, which was built at large expense and equipped in the most elaborate manner for the express business of producing this fine fabric, struggled along for a time in competition with the foreign article, and at last was compelled to give up the business of producing the fine fabric and go back to the production of coarser yarn.

Now, the interest which the people, and especially the working people, of this country have in the production of these fine fabrics is this, that every woman of the wealthy classes who buys 10 yards of these fine goods pays as much in wages as thirty women would pay who each buy 10 yards of standard sheeting. This case illustrates the difficulty of competing in this country on fine yarns and fine cloths under the present tariff.

There is another thing I want to mention, and that is the backward step taken by the committee in making the duties ad valorem instead of specific, as they are under the present law; and upon that subject I can do no better, I am sure, than to have read from the Clerk's desk a compilation of quotations from that excellent administrative officer of the present Administration, the late Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Daniel Manning, who, as a business man, was brought into such close relationship with the practical difficulties in the way of collecting duties under a system of ad valorem rates, where undervalutions were the rule, that he never hesitated upon every public occasion in his official reports, as well as upon private occasions, to express himself upon that subject in language which can not fail to be understood. I send these quotations to the desk to be read, and I commend them to the attention of the majority of this committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

SPECIFIC AND AD VALOREM RATES.

[Extracts from Senate Ex. Doc. 72, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, "Report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the Revision of the Tariff," by the late Hon. Daniel Manning.]

Page 36. "Whatever successful contrivances are in operation to-day to evade the revenue by false invoices, or by undervaluations, or by any other means, under an ad valorem system, will not cease even if the ad valorem rates shall have been largely reduced. They are incontestably, they are even notoriously inherent in that system."

Page 40. "One advantage, and perhaps the chief advantage, of a specific over an ad valorem system is in the fact that under the former duties are levied by a positive test which can be applied by our officers while the merchandise is in possession of the Government and according to a standard which is altogether national and domestic. That would be partially true of an ad valorem system levied upon 'home value;' but there are constitutional impediments in the way of such a system which appear to be insuperable. But under an ad valorem system the facts to which the ad valorem rate is to be applied must be gathered in places many thousand miles away, and under circumstances most unfavorable to the administration of justice. One hears it often said that if our ad valorem rates did not exceed 25 or 30 per cent., undervaluation and temptation to undervaluation would disappear; but the records of this Department for the years 1817, 1840, and 1857 do not uphold that conclusion."

Page 41. Consigned merchandise. "The sending to New York of merchandise by foreign manufacturers and presenting it there for sale, or the taking in this country of orders, on samples, of merchandise to be delivered in New York at duty-paid prices arranged in our currency, is a growing fact which this Government must face in selecting and prescribing rates of duty. Just as manufacturers in other States of our Union send their merchandise on consignment to their agents to sell in New York, so do, and so will, European manufacturers. The ledgers of commerce and trade will more and more be written and kept in that city, and laws of taxation, State or National, immediately probable, are not likely greatly to impede or change the current. As buyers in New York do not go to New England to buy her staple manufactures, but find all the elements of buying in New York, so it will naturally be with European productions. If that is to be the case I do not think our existing ad valorem rates can in the future be honestly or satisfactorily worked under the existing conditions of our invoice law, our appraising law, and the force of consular and appraising officers we now have.

Respectfully yours,

DANIEL MANNING, Secretary.

To the Honorable THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. LEHLBACH. In view of the fact that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ALLEN] is substantially the same as that offered by myself, I ask unanimous consent to accept the gentleman's amendment, and have it considered pending in lieu of my own.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey will be withdrawn, and that of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ALLEN] will be considered as pending in its place. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph now under consideration proposes to reduce the eight classes in which these products are now placed by existing law to two classes only. It proposes to reduce the duties provided by the present law—not to a very large extent, as appears by reference to the duties on an ad valorem basis; but by reason of the change from specific to ad valorem duties there will be created a difficulty which has not existed under the administration of the existing law. The amount of this class of manufactured goods imported during the last fiscal year illustrates clearly, as it seems to me, the fact that the rates of duty imposed under the existing law are not too high, for the importation of these threads and yarns during the last fiscal year has amounted in value to nearly $1,000,000.

I very earnestly commend the position which has been taken by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ALLEN] in favor of the retention of specific duties. The amount of duty levied under existing law upon this class of manufactured goods is not so high by something like 50 per cent. upon the average as that imposed by the present bill upon rice, which received the support of the entire Democratic side of this House. Gentlemen on the other side, in advocating the retention of high duties—amounting to something like 100 per cent.—upon rice, have to-day called attention to the large amount of capital necessary for the preparation of their fields and for carrying on that industry; yet here is an immense industry which has grown up in this country, in which a vast amount of capital has been invested, in which the highest class of skill is engaged, and which gives support to a very large number of laborers. It is the leading manufacture in my own State and in large sections of this country, and has produced goods competing more and more, nearly in all classes, with those of foreign production, as our ability and the perfection of our machinery have increased under the protection of the tariff, until to-day the manufacturers of cotton goods in this country are able to compete in many respects and in many classes of goods with the foreign manufacturers, and actually export considerable quantities of American-manufactured cotton goods to compete, even in England, with the cotton manufactures produced there.

Yet gentlemen must not forget that in the finer classes of these goods the amount of labor involved is very largely in excess of that involved in the manufacture of the coarser grades of yarns and cotton cloths, and that the necessity for protection is particularly evident as touching those classes of finer yarns and cotton cloths which fail to receive under the provisions of this bill that protection which they absolutely need for the continuance of this class of manufacture in this country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts, it was rejected; there being—ayes 50, noes 72.

The Clerk read as follows:

On all cotton cloth, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to amend by striking out the paragraph just read, and inserting what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On all cotton cloth not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, and not exceeding fifty threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, per square yard	2 cents.
If bleached	2½ cents.
If dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed	4 cents.
Exceeding fifty and not exceeding one hundred threads to the square inch	2½ cents.
If bleached	3 cents.
If dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed	4 cents.
Provided, That on all cotton cloth not exceeding one hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 8 cents per square yard:
Bleached, valued at over 10 cents per square yard; dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 13 cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty per cent. ad valorem	35 per cent.
Exceeding one hundred and not exceeding one hundred and fifty threads to the square inch	3 cents.
If bleached	4 cents.
If dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed	5 cents.
Provided, That on all cotton cloth exceeding one hundred and not exceeding one hundred and fifty threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 8 cents per square yard:
Bleached, valued at over 10 cents per square yard; dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 13 cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty per cent. ad valorem	40 per cent.
Exceeding one hundred and fifty and not exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch	3½ cents.
If bleached	4½ cents.
If dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed	5½ cents.
Provided, That on all cotton cloth exceeding one hundred and fifty and not exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 8 cents per square yard:
Bleached, valued at over 10 cents per square yard; dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 13 cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty per cent. ad valorem	45 per cent.
Exceeding two hundred threads to the square inch	4½ cents.
If bleached	5½ cents.
If dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed	6½ cents.
Provided, that on all such cotton cloth not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 10 cents per square yard:
Bleached, valued at over 12 cents per square yard, and dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 15 cents per yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of per cent. ad valorem	45 per cent.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Ways and Means, in the bill before us, have set aside all the classifications of cotton goods provided by existing laws, and have adopted one sweeping basket clause, covering all kinds of cotton goods, which imposes an ad valorem duty of 40 per cent. It must be evident to every member of this committee that so sweeping a change as is here proposed is calculated to have a most important effect, and can not fail to produce evils which, it seems to me, the Committee on Ways and Means have not fully considered.

It is, in the first place, a complete transfer of the cotton schedules from specific duties to ad valorem duties, and a complete change in this respect from the policy of the Government. It is inexplicable that so sweeping a change as this should be made in the face of the report of the late lamented Secretary Manning, showing conclusively that specific duties are necessary in order to carry out the will of the legislative branch of the Government with reference to the imposition of duties; that ad valorem duties invite frauds—frauds which it is beyond the power of the administrative officers of the Government to avoid—and that ad valorem duties are practically, in the textile list, a premium upon frauds. It is certainly surprising that the Committee on Ways and Means, in the face of the advice of the Executive Department of the Government and of the official who is set specially to administer our tariff laws, should have brought in a proposition to adopt exclusively ad valorem duties for all cotton goods.

Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but the plan which is proposed is one that must inevitably tend to largely increase importations of the class of fine cottons which we are endeavoring to manufacture in this country, and which now come into competition in such a large degree, even under the present tariff, with the finer imported goods.

And a greater difficulty arises from the proposed change for another reason. Gentlemen are aware of the fact that within a few years new classes of cotton goods have come into use, printed, colored, and highly finished, and being in their character almost equal to silk. Now it is proposed to impose upon such goods as these goods, which we are just attempting to manufacture in this country, an ad valorem duty of only 40 per cent. This is done in face of the fact that they are that class of commodities that are used in the main by the wealthy, and may be considered as luxuries. I invite the attention of gentlemen in this connection to the report of the Treasury Department for 1887 upon this class of goods, in which it is said—and I refer to the report of the Bureau of Statistics, page 25:

There are numerous articles of cotton which are so liberally manufactured and ornamented as to become more articles of luxury than any articles of silk which are classed as luxuries.

The inevitable effect of this wholesale transfer from the specific to the ad valorem duties must be to greatly increase the difficulties encountered by our manufacturers in making all these finer classes of cotton goods, to invite and encourage the importations of such goods from abroad, and enlarge rather than diminish our revenues. We may indeed safely make the duty upon the coarser grades of cotton goods lower than the committee proposes in this bill, 40 per cent. ad valorem, provided it is made specific, so that these cotton goods which the poor man buys may have a smaller duty than they do now.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. I call the attention of the committee also to the fact that an ad valorem duty of 40 per cent. in textiles is equivalent to not more than 30 or 32 per cent. specific, because of the undervaluations which are practiced by British, German, and French exporters. Therefore when the Mills bill seems to make but a small average reduction as expressed in an equivalent ad valorem duty, yet practically by transferring the schedules from specific to ad valorem duties and abolishing the classification it makes a reduction on cotton goods of more than 10 or 12 per cent. And while this would do no harm in coarse cottons, yet in the fine grades which we are endeavoring to manufacture, and of which last year goods invoiced at $29,000,000 and worth much more were imported into this country, all of which we ought to have made ourselves, the result would be, by the change from specific to ad valorem duties as proposed in the Mills bill, the $29,000,000 imported last year would the very first year show an increase of ten to fifteen million of dollars, thus increasing the revenue, and at the same time working a serious injury to all mills engaged in the manufacture of such goods to an extent the committee could hardly have appreciated.

When gentlemen of the committee contemplate the practical working of the proposed cotton schedule, especially in the light of the report of Secretary Manning upon the effect of ad valorem duties, and read the statistics—which I will print in connection with my remarks—as to how even under existing law fine manufactured cottons are struggling under great disadvantages against the highly finished fine goods imported, in which there is so large a proportion of labor, they ought to see good reason for hesitating in the step which they propose to take, and indorse the amendment that I have presented, which embodies the schedule recommended by the Arkwright Club, composed of gentlemen thoroughly familiar with all the operations of cotton manufacture. The amendment proposes to make the duty on coarse cottons lower than the existing law, on medium cottons substantially the same as now, and to make a slight increase on the finer goods. If this should be done, we should have the interests of the great body of the people of this country subserved, and at the same time we would encourage the manufacture of the finer and better classes of cotton goods now so largely imported from Europe.

Mr. Chairman, I will print in connection with my remarks certain statistics presented by the Arkwright Club.

The statistics are as follows:

Importations of cotton cloth, in yards, under present tariff.

Description of goods.	1883, before present tariff.	1884.	1885.	1886.	1887.	Totals.
BROWN.
Not over one hundred threads to square inch	140,434	28,780	62,121	245,835	160,118	496,854
One hundred to two hundred threads to square inch	34,600	68,377	129,241	776,915	1,229,612	2,204,045
Over two hundred threads to square inch	5,040	694,312	174,833	328,264	653,403	1,850,802
Exceeding two hundred, valued 10 cents or less	.....	380,605	316,175	100,794	134,825	932,400
Exceeding two hundred, valued over 10 cents	.....	397,808	53,454	56,892	98,678	606,872
	180,074	1,569,813	735,824	1,508,700	2,276,636	6,090,973
BLEACHED.
Not over one hundred threads	9,776,320	751,524	1,081,269	1,401,586	1,325,342	4,539,721
One hundred to two hundred	151,976	6,835,378	8,065,116	6,715,489	4,389,972	26,105,955
Over two hundred	70,852	1,147,584	1,659,688	3,164,109	1,861,345	7,832,706
Exceeding two hundred, valued 12 cents or less	.....	2,360,000	1,842,903	1,610,419	1,304,760	7,118,082
Exceeding two hundred, valued over 12 cents	.....	1,359,972	4,826,889	1,878,114	731,649	8,796,624
	9,999,148	12,454,438	17,475,865	14,769,717	9,616,068	54,316,088
COLORED.
Not over one hundred threads	390,906	655,622	1,047,404	1,535,646	1,493,152	4,731,784
One hundred to two hundred	10,970,270	3,293,516	2,901,359	3,815,872	4,536,834	14,547,851
Over two hundred	896,152	1,609,828	1,993,647	4,452,263	6,418,606	14,473,744
Exceeding two hundred, valued 15 cents or less	.....	1,428,278	1,153,800	2,418,308	2,184,598	7,184,984
Exceeding two hundred, valued over 15 cents	.....	5,893,483	6,299,050	3,616,413	3,502,375	19,311,321
	12,257,328	12,880,727	13,395,260	15,838,472	18,134,965	60,249,424

Table showing the duties prior to 1883; the reductions made in 1883; and the changes in the cotton schedule proposed by the Arkwright Club, 1883.

	Duties prior to 1883.	Reductions made in 1883.		Changes proposed by Arkwright Club 1888.
				Reduction.		Total.
Not exceeding 50 threads to square inch:		Cents.	Per ct.	Cts.	Per ct.	Per ct.
Brown	5 to 6 cents	Now 2½	55	2	20	75
Bleached	5½ to 6½ cents	Now 3½	42	2¼	28	70
Printed, etc	5½ to 6½ cents and 10 per cent.	Now 4½	30	4	11	41
50 to 100 threads:
Brown	5 to 6 cents	Now 2½	55	2½	10	65
Bleached	5½ to 6½ cents	Now 3½	42	3	14	56
Printed, etc	5½ to 6½ cents and 10 per cent.	Now 4½	30	4	11	41
100 to 150 threads:
Brown	5 to 6 cents	Now 3	46	()	()	46
Bleached	5½ to 6 cents	Now 4	33	()	()	33
Printed, etc	5½ cents and 20 per cent. to 6½ cents and 15 per cent.	Now 5	29	()	()	29

* No change.

Table showing the duties prior to 1883; the reductions made in 1883, etc.—Continued.

	Duties prior to 1883.	Reductions made in 1888.		Changes proposed by Arkwright Club 1888.
				Advance.		Total.
150 to 200 threads:		Cents.	Per ct.	Cts.	Per ct.	Per ct.
Brown	5 to 6 cents	Now 3	46	3½	16½	28½
Bleached	5½ to 6½ cents	Now 4	33	4½	12½	20½
Printed, etc	5½ cents and 20 per cent. to 6½ cents and 15 per cent.	Now 5	29	5½	10	19
Over 200 threads:
Brown	5 to 7 cents	Now 4	33	4½	12½	20½
Bleached	5½ to 7½ cents	Now 5	23	5½	10	18
Printed, etc	5½ cents and 20 per cent. to 7½ cents and 15 per cent.	Now 6	25	6½	12½	12½

Reductions in six clauses equals 15.66 per cent.
Advances in six clauses equals 13.05 per cent.
No change in three clauses.

Importation of yarns into the United States.

Value.	Rate.	1885.	1886.	1887.	Total.
	Per cent.	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.
25	10	6,000	113,000	209,000	328,000
40	15	173,000	300,000	624,000	1,097,000
50	20	111,000	157,000	477,000	745,000
60	25	240,000	277,000	322,000	839,000
70	33	72,000	44,000	41,000	157,000
80	38	43,000	50,000	32,000	125,000
100	48	26,000	79,000	60,000	165,000
Over 100	50	277,000	163,000	118,000	558,000
Total		948,000	1,183,000	1,883,000	4,014,000

Bleached cotton goods—in million yards.

	Yards.
Imports in 1883	10,000,000

American machinery was being introduced to make this class of goods, the demand for which goods was increasing.

	Yards.
Imports in 1884	12,000,000
Imports in 1885	17,000,000
Imports in 1886	14,000,000
Imports in 1887	9,000,000

The American mills are gradually gaining in supplying the market.

Fine colored cotton goods—200 threads and over.

	Yards.
Imports in 1883	5,000,000

American machinery being introduced.

	Yards.
Imports in 1884	9,000,000
Imports in 1885	9,000,000
Imports in 1886	10,000,000
Imports in 1887	12,000,000

Notwithstanding the duty and domestic production, imports are increasing. These goods are of the class referred to in the Treasury Department Annual Report (1887) of Bureau of Statistics, page 25, thus: "There are numerous articles of cotton * * * which are so elaborately manufactured and ornamented as to become more articles of luxury than many articles of silk which are classed as luxuries."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

The question having been put, the Chair was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 64.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

On all cotton cloth, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to strike out the paragraph and insert:

"Spool thread of cotton, containing on each spool not exceeding 100 yards of thread, 6½ cents per dozen spools; exceeding 100 yards on each spool, for every additional 100 yards of thread or fractional part thereof in excess of 100 yards, 6½ cents per dozen."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to state that this makes the duty specific, as the law now stands, and makes a reduction of one-half a cent on a dozen spools of cotton. I would like to ask some member of the Ways and Means Committee if he would be willing to state for the information of this House what actuated them in making the duty on spool-thread cotton ad valorem instead of a specific duty, as it now is? I hope some member of the Ways and Means Committee will give the House the explanation if he can why the rate was made ad valorem instead of a specific rate of duty.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will state to the gentleman that in the judgment of the committee a specific rate worked very great inequalities in the cotton schedule. While the matter is not so material in spool thread as it is in some other features of the schedule, still it worked an inequality there; and therefore, both to simplify the tax and reduce the tax as it bears at present upon certain grades of thread, it was deemed wise and proper to make the change. The gentleman is too familiar with the details to make it necessary for me to go into everything.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I could not hear what the gentleman said, but will read the explanation in the RECORD.

Mr. KEAN. I desire to have printed in the RECORD a protest in regard to this change of duty; also the cost of imports under the proposed tariff bill, with the per cent. of wages paid in this country and in Scotland.

The protest and tables referred to are as follows:

NEW YORK, March 9, 1888.

COST TO IMPORT UNDER PROPOSED TARIFF BILL, ALL CHARGES, FREIGHT, INSURANCE, AND COMMISSIONS EXCLUDED, FROM GLASGOW.

One dozen of 50 best six-cord thread: In hank "gray," unbleached.

		Per dozen.
One pound of 50-100 gray, cost January 16, 1888, 3*s.* 10*d.* sterling, net	$0.9227
Duty proposed, 40 per cent	.3731
1 pound 100 equals 5 dozen thread, per pound	1.3058
Cost		.2612
To finish—bleaching and dyeing	.02
Loss in weight, 5 per cent	.01306
Hank winding, spooling, ticketing, etc	.1000
Dozen box, packing, etc	.015
		.14806
1 dozen imported in gray, and finished here, costs		.40926
1 dozen No. 50 best 6-cord thread, boxed, 200 yards on spool (price in Glasgow January 16, 1888), per gross, 15*s.* sterling	$3.65
Less trade discount, 10 per cent	.365
	3.285
Duty proposed, 40 per cent	1.314
Per gross	4.599
		.38325
In favor of importing finished on spools		.02601
If duty was 50 per cent. cost of 1 gross as above, net	$3.285
Duty 50 per cent	1.6425
	4.9275	.4105
1 dozen imported in hank, as above		.40926
If duty was 6½ and 6½ per 100 yards, cost of gross, as above	$3.285
Duty 6½ and 6½	1.56
	4.845	.400375

Comparison of wages paid for finishing hank thread at Paisley, Scotland, and Pawtucket, R. I., for year 1887, by Messrs. J. & P. Coats.

[Pound sterling=$4.86.]

For one week's work.	Paisley (56 hours).		Pawtucket (60 hours).
	English currency.	United States currency.
	s. d.
Cop spoolers	14 6	$3.51	$8.32
Twister tenders	9 9	2.37	6.87
Reelers	14	3.39	8.47
Inspectors	12 6	3.03	7.12
Skein spoolers	11 6	2.79	7.67
Spoolers	11	2.67	8.76
Gross parcelers	17 3	4.20	9.51
Second and section hands	30 4	7.37	13.50
Bleachers:
Women	9 4	2.27	6.00
Men	23 10½	5.80	12.00
Dyers, men	22 9½	5.53	9.06
Total		42.93	97.27

AVERAGES—CALCULATED ON PAY-ROLLS OF 5,000 EMPLOYÉS.

In America (per week of sixty hours)	$6.52
In Scotland (per week of fifty-six hours) 12*s.* 9*d*	3.06
Messrs. J. & P. Coats pay higher average wages (per week of sixty hours) by	3.86

(Or, say, 126 per cent. higher) for labor in America to finish hank cotton thread.

Yours, truly,

AUCHINCLOSS BROTHERS,
Agents for J. & P. Coats, of Paisley, Scotland.

Subject: Proposed duty on "cotton thread on spools" by Committee of Ways and Means bill is 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Manufacturers ask and require equivalent of 50 per cent. ad valorem, or a specific duty of 6½ cents per 100 yards, and 6½ cents for each additional 100 yards.

NEW YORK, March 9, 1888.

DEAR SIR: The tariff bill as proposed by your honorable committee contains an inequality in its provisions that seriously affects the vested interests of the spool-thread manufacturers of this country.

It proposes to place the duty on "spool cotton on spools" at the same ad valorem rate as "cotton thread, yarn, warps, or warp yarn, etc.," namely, 40 per cent., and take away all protection formerly afforded the labor employed in finishing the goods in this country; at the same time, by adopting an ad valorem rate, it opens the public to the common danger of fraud by "short lengths" and other deceptions practiced largely in foreign markets.

The making of six-cord thread of best quality from the yarn and hank is a large industry in this country.

It employs about 9,000 operatives and $14,000,000 capital.

It paid, in duties, to the Government in 1887, $423,759.58 on goods "not on spools," yarns, etc.

The importers of thread "on spools" in same time paid but $51,222.12 for duty.

About 26,000,000 dozens were manufactured and finished in this country last year as against imports of only 731,744 dozens on spools.

To illustrate our point we sketch herewith memorandum account of cost to import a dozen of six-cord thread in "gray" and finish it under your proposed bill, also cost to import, by your schedule, the same dozen all "finished on the spool," showing over 2½ cents per dozen in favor of the British manufacturer—all charges for importing and selling being excluded in both cases.

A proper equality between the manufactured article and its semi-manufactured state (on the present basis of labor) requires, for a parity, the equivalent of a duty ad valorem of at least 50 per cent. on the former, if it is considered necessary to reduce the duty on goods in gray to 40 per cent. as you propose.

We would respectfully urge on your honorable committee the wisdom of retaining a specific rate per 100 yards on "cotton thread on spools," for the greater security it affords, both to the Government and the public, from frauds in length, and that this specific duty be a rate equivalent to 50 per cent. of net cost in Glasgow, say not less than 6½ cents per 100 yards and 6½ cents for every additional 100 yards, the unit of commerce being a 200-yard spool.

We would respectfully ask that you give this matter your fair consideration, in view of the magnitude of the interests at stake and the very apparent injustice the proposed bill would inflict upon the labor employed in this special branch of our cotton industries.

Yours, very respectfully,

J. & P. COATS,
By AUCHINCLOSS BROTHERS.
THE CLARK THREAD CO., of Newark, N. J.,
By WM. CLARK, Manager.
THE MILE END SPOOL COTTON CO., Newark, N. J.,
By THOS. RUSSELL, Treasurer.
THE WILLIMANTIC LINEN CO., Willimantic, Conn.,
By THEO. M. IVES, Agent.

Hon. ROGER Q. MILLS,
Chairman Ways and Means Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

[Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

The amendment was rejected—ayes 56, noes 70.

Mr. McMILLIN. I send an amendment to the Clerk's desk, to come in after the paragraph shall have been disposed of.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 392 insert:
"Flax, hackled, known as dressed line, $10 per ton."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Brown and bleached linens, ducks, canvas, paddings, cot bottoms, diapers, crash, huckabacks, handkerchiefs, lawns, or other manufactures of flax, jute, or hemp, or of which flax, jute, or hemp shall be the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for, 25 per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That cuffs, collars, shirts, and other manufactures of wearing apparel, made in whole or in part of linen, and not otherwise provided for, and hydraulic hose, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, the verb seems to be left out in the proviso, and I move to amend line 401 by inserting after the word "hose" the words "shall pay."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman will find the verb that he is looking for at the beginning of the second section of the bill, which reads that—

On and after the 1st day of July, 1888, in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed on the articles hereinafter mentioned, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following rates of duty on said articles severally.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will ask the gentleman as an expert (because I believe he was one some years ago) whether he thinks the proviso makes good grammar and good sense as it stands.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The language I have read applies all the way through the bill, and it is not necessary to repeat it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But the proviso is an exception which breaks the continuity of the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUCHANAN. They will not even accept good grammar. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Flax, hemp, and jute yarns, and all twines of hemp, jute, jute-butts, sunn, sisal-grass, ramie, and China grass, 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I move to strike out lines 403, 404, and 405. The effect of this amendment will be to leave these articles at the present rate of duty. I understand, and gentlemen will correct me if I am misinformed, that when the Mills bill was first framed they placed these at 25 per cent. ad valorem. In the revised bill we find the duty reduced to 15 per cent. ad valorem. I would like the gentleman who has charge of the bill to state why this has been done. My amendment proposes to continue the present duty—35 per cent.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. LEHLBACH, it was rejected.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I move to amend by inserting after the word "hemp," at the end of line 403, the words "25 per cent. ad valorem," so as to read, "flax, hemp, and jute yarns, and all twines of hemp, 25 per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. Chairman, in examining the existing tariff in connection with the table prepared at the Treasury Department for the use of the Committee on Ways and Means, I find the present duty on this class of articles to be about 35 per cent. ad valorem. I have been in communication with some of the rope manufacturers of this country, especially those in the locality where I reside, and they inform me that a reduction of the duty from 35 per cent. ad valorem, the present rate, to 15 per cent. would be very hurtful to the industry in which they are engaged. I consequently desire to appeal to this committee, especially to the members of the Committee on Ways and Means—the majority who reported this bill—and ask them why they cannot consent to fix this duty at 25 per cent. ad valorem, being 10 per cent. less than the existing duty.

I submit this proposition in the interest of this industry, and because I take as my authority those who are engaged in the manufacture of rope and who use these materials.

Mr. Chairman, we may theorize as much as we please; we may listen to those here and there who think they understand this subject; but coming down to the men who have a practical interest in this question, we get the right status upon which we should fix these duties. I know that those men with whom I have been in communication, and who have large capital invested in this business, would not ask Congress to put on or continue a duty at so high a rate as perhaps to be useless to them and to those whom they supply with the article they manufacture.

But I come here with the best motives in asking this committee to fix this duty at 25 per cent. and not to reduce it to 15 per cent. I would very much like to know why so large a reduction as this bill proposes has been approved by the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means. I hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. LONG. I ask consent that the letters which I send to the desk may be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears none.

The letters are as follows:

BOSTON, April 10, 1888.

DEAR MR. LONG: I suppose you have been written to before regarding the effect of the Mills reduction on the cordage business of this country, but feel it may do no harm for me to state some facts which may make it clearer.

You are aware, of course, that the present duty on manila hemp is $25 per ton; on sisal hemp, $15 per ton; and on rope, etc., 2½ cents per pound. When it was proposed to take off the duty on hemp we favored it, and suggested a corresponding reduction on rope—i. e., make the duty on rope 1½ or 1¾ cents per pound. I favor a fixed duty as heretofore, for in that case it remains the same in all kinds of rope, while with an ad valorem duty the duty on manila and sisal rope would be different, say a third of a cent a pound more on sisal rope than manila, while the duty should be the same on each, as it costs as much to make one as the other. If it is impossible to have a fixed duty, then we believe the ad valorem duty should be 25 per cent., as the bill was first framed, instead of 15 per cent., as is now proposed. The latter would not be sufficient protection, as we pay our help more than twice as much as is paid abroad. It is not safe to base the duty on the present price of hemp, which is exceptionally high, spot manila now selling at about 9 cents and sisal at about 8. A 15 per cent. duty on these prices would be satisfactory, but it is not a fair basis on which to work.

The crop of hemp is very large this year—I should say manila—fully 25 per cent. than ever before, and there can be no doubt but that the prices of fibers will be very much lower in a few months. In fact, not so very long ago manila hemp sold for from 6 to 6¼ cents and sisal from 3¾ to 4 cents per pound, duty paid. Now, let us take a fair average price, calling sisal 4¼ cents; taking off the duty, $15 per ton, leaves it at 3¾ cents, or, to be liberal, 4 cents. Now add 1 cent per pound, at which price the foreign manufacturers will be only too glad to unload the surplus of their mills, and we have 5 cents, at which price rope would be poured into this country. Now, where should we stand? Fifteen per cent. duty on 5 cents means 5¾ cents, a protection of three-quarters of a cent. At this price the American manufacturers could not run their factories, continuing to pay their help same prices as now, but would be compelled to either close their mills or reduce wages to an equality with England and Ireland, and you know what that means. The representative of the Belfast Rope Works, Ireland, told me some time ago his help did not expect to have meat more than once a week, and considered themselves lucky to get it even then. They live on mush and potatoes and live in huts. We pay boys and girls as much as they do able-bodied men.

M. F. WHITON.

BOSTON, April 6, 1888.

DEAR SIR: We understand that under the Mills tariff bill it is proposed to make the duty on rope and binder twine 15 per cent. ad valorem.

The establishment of a duty on rope and twine at such a figure as 15 per cent. simply means disaster and possible ruin to the manufacturing interests in cordage in this country, for we could not compete with foreign manufacturers, who pay for labor less than one-half the wages we have to pay.

Permit us to give you an illustration of this fact. Some time since a representative of the Belfast (Ireland) Cordage Works called upon us. While discussing matters pertaining to cordage manufacture the question of labor came up, and we learned that the Belfast company paid their skilled labor 18 shillings per week, or say four and one-half dollars. We pay the girls in our employ considerably more than this; even boys as new beginners get more, and we pay some of our men as much per day as they pay per week, and many of our men earn in two to three days the amount the Belfast company pay for an entire week.

If the duty is reduced so that the cheap-labor cordage can be brought into our own markets to compete with our manufacturers, what must be the result?

The argument may be made that 15 per cent. upon the average price of cordage for past years, or even present prices, would be protection enough.

This we should deny as a matter of fact, but allow it as an argument. The future prices for manila and sisal hemp must be very much lower than present figures, or those which have ruled for several years.

The production is increasing largely; this year at Manila the receipts of hemp will probably be 25 per cent. larger than any previous year. This of course means lower prices for hemp and cordage, and even if a tariff of 15 per cent. would be protection enough on the average prices of the past—which we do not for a moment admit—with the lower figures which must unquestionably prevail in the future it would not be sufficient, and its passage would simply open the doors to foreign productions.

The duty, in our opinion, should be not less than 25 per cent., and we trust that you will use all your power and influence to the end that the duty shall not be less than this figure.

Very respectfully, yours,

RANDALL, GOODALE & CO.

Hon. JOHN D. LONG,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word upon the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL]. We have in California a large cordage factory which is now supplying the demand of that section, and also, to a large extent, of the East. This establishment employs a considerable number of persons, to whom it pays reasonably good wages. But it comes into competition with a cordage factory in Hong-Kong, China, where the whole work of the establishment is carried on by Chinese, with the exception, possibly, of the superintendent. Now, it will be impossible for that cordage factory at San Francisco to carry on its business, in competition with the Chinese establishment, if the rate of duty is to be reduced as proposed in this bill. I have in my hand a letter from this San Francisco cordage company——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. How will it hurt a cordage factory to reduce the duty on twine?

Mr. MORROW. This factory manufactures twine.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the establishment manufactures cordage it puts twine into the cordage.

Mr. MORROW. I can not hear what the gentleman says.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. A reduction of the duty on twine can not hurt the manufacture of cordage.

Mr. MORROW. I am speaking particularly with reference to twine, which is one of the manufactures of this establishment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Then it is not cordage at all that the gentleman is speaking of, but a different manufacture entirely.

Mr. MORROW. There is a cordage factory in San Francisco; that is the name it goes by, but they manufacture all the articles named in this paragraph. I ask this letter be read in support of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, April 12, 1888.

DEAR SIR: We understand that the Mills tariff bill as originally framed had duty on rope and twine 25 per cent. ad valorem, and the raw material (hemp) free; but as the bill now is the duty is only 15 per cent., which is not sufficient protection to enable us to compete with the rope factory in Hong-Kong, where they employ all Chinese labor at 25 cents per day, except, perhaps, their superintendent; and European labor is only about one-half what we have to pay.

If possible we hope you will be able to amend the bill so the duty will not be less than 25 per cent. ad valorem.

We remain, yours, truly,

TUBBS & CO.

Hon. W. W. MORROW, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. We have the same facts from the establisment in San Francisco. We have the same facts from the establishments of Philadelphia and elsewhere throughout the country. I do not see, therefore, why the Committee on Ways and Means can not take the results of experience from those who know what they are talking about. I appeal to my friends to yield to that amendment. Twenty-five per cent. is not too much to afford proper protection against foreign competition.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.

The committee divided; and there were —ayes 49, noes 72.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Flax or linen thread, twine, and pack thread and all manufactures of flax, or of which flax shall be the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. PHELPS. I move to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty." I purpose to ask the courtesy of the House to extend to me an additional five minutes for the purpose of discussing this paragraph, in which my home interests are indicated. As the hour is late I would be glad to ask the courtesy of the chairman of the committee now in charge of the bill to yield to a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, asking for the return to the House of the bill (S. 1427) granting an increase of pension to Ethathan Meade.

The message also furnished to the House, in compliance with its request, a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (H. R. 3300) to amend an act to enable the city of Denver to purchase certain lands for cemetery purposes.

And then, on motion of Mr. MCMILLIN, in accordance with previous order, the House took a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 8 o'clock p. m.) was called to order by Mr. DOCKERY, who directed the reading of the following communication:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 10, 1888.

I hereby designate Hon. A. M. DOCKERY to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House this evening.

JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK,
Clerk House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is now in session under the special order for the consideration of bills granting the right of way through Indian reservations reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs in cases where no objection is made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PEEL. I ask unanimous consent that these bills be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection that order will be pursued.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

WYOMING MIDLAND RAILWAY.

Mr. PEEL. I call up the bill (H. R. 10028) granting to the Wyoming Midland Railway Company the right of way through the Wind River or Shoshone Indian reservation.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the right of way is hereby granted, as hereinafter set forth, to the Wyoming Midland Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Territory of Wyoming, for the extension of its railroad through the lands in Wyoming Territory set apart for the use of the Shoshone Indians, commonly known as the Wind River or Shoshone Indian reservation; said railroad following the line of the Big Horn River from the northern boundary of the Wind River or Shoshone Indian reservation, and thence following said river and the Middle Fork of said river to Lander, with a branch from a point where the Wind River empties into said Big Horn River, and thence following said Wind River in a northwesterly direction across said reservation to its source in the valley of the Wind River and Shoshone range of mountains, with the right to construct, use, and maintain tracks, turn-outs and sidings.

SEC. 2. That the right of way hereby granted to said company shall be 100 feet in width on each side of the central line of said railroad as aforesaid; and said company shall also have the right to take from said lands adjacent to the line of said road material, stone, earth, and timber necessary for the construction of said railroad; also ground adjacent to such right of way for station-buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turn-outs, and water-stations, not to exceed in amount 300 feet in width and 3,000 feet in length for each station, to the extent of one station for each 10 miles of road.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the amount of compensation to be paid the Indians for such right of way and material, and provide the time and manner for the payment thereof, and also to ascertain and fix the amount of compensation to be made individual members of the tribe for damages sustained by them by reason of the construction of said road; but no right of any kind shall vest in said railway company in or to any part of the right of way herein provided for until plats thereof, made upon actual survey for the definite location of such railroad, and including the points for station-buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turn-outs, and water-stations, shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, which approval shall be made in writing and be open for the inspection of any party interested therein, and until the compensation aforesaid has been filed and paid; and the surveys, construction, and operation of such railroad shall be conducted with due regard for the rights of the Indians, and in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may make to carry out this provision: Provided, That the President of the United States may, in his discretion, require that the consent of the Indians to said right of way shall be obtained by said railway company in such manner as he may prescribe, before any right under this act shall accrue to said company.

SEC. 4. That said company shall not assign or transfer or mortgage this right of way for any purpose whatever until said road shall be completed: Provided, That the company may mortgage said franchise, together with the rolling-stock, for money to construct and complete said road: And provided further, That the right granted herein shall be lost and forfeited by said company unless the road is constructed and in running order within five years from the passage of this act.

SEC. 5. That said railway company shall accept this right of way upon the expressed condition, binding upon itself, its successors and assigns, that they will neither aid, assist, nor advise in any effort looking towards the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their land, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian tribes any further grant of land or its occupancy than is heretofore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

SEC. 6. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act. That this act shall be in force from its passage.

The Committee on Indian Affairs recommended the following amendments:

Strike out, in section 4, "five years" and insert "three years;" also, in the ninth line of the same section, insert "and if not so constructed within three years, as aforesaid, all rights and privileges herein granted shall become absolutely null and void without further action upon the part of the Government, either executive, legislative, or judicial."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was considered, the amendments adopted, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state to the House that these bills are almost exactly alike; the only difference is in the name of the road to which the right of way is granted and the reservation through which it passes. It will promote very much the business to-night if the reading of the bills is not insisted upon, but that if necessary an explanation may be made by the member who calls the bill up. I ask, therefore, unanimous consent that that course may be pursued.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

DULUTH AND WINNIPEG RAILWAY.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 10112) granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railway Company the right of way through the Fond du Lac Indian reservation, in the State of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to considering this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NELSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FORT SMITH, PARIS AND DARDANELLE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HUDD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Indian Affairs the bill (H. R. 9260) with a substitute of the same title granting the right of way to the Fort Smith, Paris and Dardanelle Railway Company to construct and operate a railroad, telegraph, and telephone line from Fort Smith, Ark., through the Indian Territory, to or near Baxter Springs, in the State of Kansas, and authorizing said company to build a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near the city of Fort Smith, Ark.

There was no objection.

The report was ordered to be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. ROGERS. As I understand it, this substitute is an i dentica copy of the Senate bill.

Mr. NELSON. Has the Senate bill been reported?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir, as I understand it. I ask unanimous consent in lieu of the House bill to take up and consider the Senate bill, which is a fac-simile of the House bill just reported by the committee.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to ask if the Senate bill has been before the House committee and has been reported?

Mr. ROGERS. It has not; but the House bill is an exact copy of the Senate bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Have you compared it?

Mr. ROGERS. I have, myself, with the assistance of my colleague.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that this order asked by the gentleman from Wisconsin is scarcely under the technical construction of the order made by the House, but if there be no objection, the report will be accepted and the substitution which he asks made. The Senate bill will be considered, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2644) granting the right of way to the Fort Smith, Paris and Dardanelle Railway Company to construct and operate a railroad, telegraph, and telephone line from Fort Smith, Ark., through the Indian Territory, to or near Baxter Springs, in the State of Kansas, and authorizing said company to build a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near the city of Fort Smith, Ark.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask to offer an amendment to line 4 of section 9 of this bill.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "built," in line 4 of section 9, the following:

"And it shall not be necessary in such case for a forfeiture to be declared by judicial process or legislative enactment."

Mr. ROGERS. I will explain the amendment by saying that this bill is in conformity with the general practice, requiring that this road shall be constructed within a specified number of years. This amendment is prepared for the purpose of providing that this right of way shall be forfeited without judicial process or legislative enactment if the terms of the bill are not complied with within a limited time.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Let the section be read as it will stand if the amendment is adopted.

Section 9 as proposed to be amended was again read.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the amendment adopted, and the bill as amended ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the House bill 9260 and the substitute therefor of the same title will lie upon the table.

There was no objection.

OREGON RAILROAD AND NAVIGATION COMPANY.

Mr. DARLINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration for the Senate bill 2526, granting to the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company the right of way through the Nez Perces Indian reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DARLINGTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVENWORTH AND RIO GRANDE RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. HARE. I call up the bill (H. R. 7186) to authorize the Leavenworth and Rio Grande Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the following amendments of the Committee on Indian Affairs:

On page 2, line 14, strike out "with and" and insert:

"Provided, That if said railway company shall ask or receive from any town or community any compensation, gift, or subscription other than the right of way or grounds for depot purposes in consideration of crossing the Red River into Texas at any particular point, the same shall work a forfeiture of the rights herein granted, and said company shall have."

Also, in line 21 strike out the word "branches."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, does a report accompany these bills?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that a report accompanies the bills in all cases.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would either like to hear the report or a brief statement from the chairman of the committee as to the extent of this line; and also as to the general terms of these bills in regard to compensation for the right of way.

Mr. PEEL. I will state to the gentleman as I did to the House before he came in, that no bill reported to-night grants a single foot of land except what is absolutely necessary for the successful operation of the road. Similar bills have been passed by Congress for the last three Congresses. In all the bills except those in relation to the Indian Territory the compensation is fixed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It was with reference to this particular bill granting the right of way through the Indian Territory, which seems to be a somewhat extensive right of way, that I desired to have the information.

Mr. PEEL. I will state to my friend that all bills granting the right of way through the Indian Territory require the railroad to pay to the tribe $50 a mile for each mile used, and then for every year the road is operated $15 a mile; and to pay to all private persons who have property in the right of way damages for the property taken by the road. If they disagree as to the compensation to private parties, either party may appeal to the district court having jurisdiction. If the tribes disagree as to compensation, they may appeal to the Federal courts and have the matter settled there.

Mr. CUTCHEON. How is it in case of land held in severalty?

Mr. PEEL. That would not be the case in the Indian Territory. In any case where the road goes over land held in severalty the individuals have the right to have the damages assessed, if not fixed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. COBB. I would ask whether in this bill there is a provision for obtaining the consent of the Indians. I do not think there is. I am opposed to the grant of all these rights of way through the Indian Territory by bills that have hitherto been presented and are now being presented to the House. I have steadily opposed them in committee. My reason for opposition is simply this: in bills which are passed granting rights of way through Indian reservations—of course the Indian Territory can not be considered an Indian reservation—there is always incorporated a provision requiring consent of the Indians to be obtained before the parties to whom the right is granted shall take under it.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. COBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. PERKINS. Is not the gentleman mistaken in that statement? Does not the gentleman remember the case of the Billings, Clark's Fork and Cooke City road as to which he reported so earnestly and ably seconded the report on the floor of the House? There was no provision in that bill that the assent of the Indians should be required. I do not remember we have ever passed a right-of-way bill with such a provision. Of course the allotment bills contain that provision. The gentleman may have them in his mind.

Mr. COBB. Perhaps I have confounded the two.

Mr. PERKINS. I think you have; because in the bills for that purpose we always provide that the assent of the Indians shall be required; but in right-of-way bills we have never inserted a provision of that character.

Mr. COBB. I will not insist that is so; although it has been my impression that a provision requiring the assent of the Indians was inserted.

But be that as it may, my position in regard to these rights of way through the Indian Territory is that the consent of the Indians should be required to be obtained in all cases. In all the treaties that have been made between the United States and the five civilized tribes there have been inserted provisions, stringent in their character, by which the Government of the United States pledged itself to secure to those tribes inhabiting the Indian Territory the strictest protection against invasion of any character. The treaty of 1866, the last one that was made, contained a provision authorizing a right of way to the Government of the United States through the Territory for two lines of roads, one running east and west and the other north and south. Now, my contention is that the insertion of that very provision was a pledge by the United States that no other rights of way should be granted except upon the most urgent necessity, made to be manifest as a condition precedent to the grant.

These rights of way have been granted repeatedly, I know, without any special inquiry as to the existing necessity. It is said that commerce demands these grants, but, so far as the general public is concerned and so far as the Government is concerned, there is no necessity made manifest at all. The treaty stipulations are disregarded; the particular rights of the Indians are disregarded, and we are merely yielding to a clamor on the part of these railroad corporations to run their lines at pleasure through a territory that they believe to be in their way in making their connections. Is it right? I do not believe it is.

There is another consideration. It will be observed that I do not controvert the right of the Government to grant these rights of way. I think the Government of the United States has perfect authority and power to exercise over this territory the right of eminent domain; but the question is one of the proper policy to be pursued.

Here is a people under the special protection of the Government of the United States, it is true, but by permission of that Government they are exercising all the rights, powers, and functions of a State government. They have their judicial department, their legislative department, their executive officers, and all the machinery of a State government, although they are not a State.

The Government of the United States permits all this, and, in addition to that, it has guarantied by the most solemn treaties that these Indians shall not be disturbed in the exercise of the privileges guarantied to them under the treaties by any interference on the part of white men. Now, it is very evident that if we go on in this way, granting to every railroad company that may apply the right of entrance into the Territory, it will soon be impossible to execute the guaranty which the United States Government has given to these Indians of absolute protection against the invasion of their territory or any interference with them in the exercise of their guarantied rights.

If they consent, all right. They can give their consent more intelligently than any other Indians on the continent. They have their tribal relations still intact. They have their legislative department, their council, their executive officers, and they themselves are sufficiently advanced in civilization to determine whether or not the entrance of these railroads into their Territory will affect them injuriously or the reverse. If they believe it will be beneficial to them, they will say so. They are intelligent enough to understand the question and to know whether it will be a benefit to them or not. If it will injure them, and we permit these roads to go in without proof of the necessity to the general public, we violate our solemn treaty stipulations.

Therefore, if it is in order, I move an amendment to the pending bill, so as to provide that the consent of the Indians shall be first obtained before the right of way is granted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will please reduce his amendment to writing.

Mr. PEEL. I am sorry that my friend has interposed his objections on this particular bill. I had hoped that he would consent to let us proceed with it. I think I can say that this is the only bill that will be called up this evening granting a right of way through the Indian Territory. The other bills grant rights of way through reservations, and are measures to which I know the gentleman will not object.

In reply to the views the gentleman has presented I have only to say that this no new question.

I am perfectly familiar with the treaty stipulation to which reference has been made in which consent is given for rights of way for two roads through the Territory—one running east and west and the other north and south. Under that stipulation those two roads go through without the consent of Congress being required. As to other rights of way through the Territory the Government proceeds upon a very different theory. I do not think that any lawyer who has considered the question will for a moment doubt that the Government of the United States has the right of eminent domain over that Territory as much as it has over the gentleman's private property or mine, or the property of any other individual. Under the law, as I understand it, the individual holds the title to his real property from the sovereign, the Government; the Government holds the right of eminent domain over it, and a corporation, for the purpose of carrying the commerce of the country, can apply to the courts and have the property condemned, and can force the right of way by paying the damages.

Upon that principle Congress has exercised that right in regard to this Territory. These Indians certainly do not hold any better title to their lands than we hold to ours. Our consent is not asked when it is deemed necessary that a right of way should go through our private property; and it certainly is not requisite to ask the consent of these Indians when we proceed upon this principle and pay the damages.

Mr. COBB. Does the Congress of the United States undertake to run railroads through a State without the consent of the State?

Mr. PEEL. No, sir; because that power is conferred upon the States themselves. But this land under consideration is not within any State or organized Territory; it is simply a portion of the soil over which the jurisdiction of this Government extends; and so long as that is the case we have the right to grant right of way for the purpose of establishing great thoroughfares which are to carry the commerce of this country.

It is not necessary to discuss the merits of this question at length with my friend from Alabama [Mr. COBB], because we can not agree. I know that he feels some scruples in regard to this matter. One bill of this character, giving right of way through the Indian Territory, has already been passed this evening, and this is the only other one, so far as I know, of the same character which will be presented to-night. It is a measure in which my friend from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] takes some interest, and he can state to the House the great commercial necessity for this right of way. It may be that in other cases the necessity is not so great. The gentleman from Missouri is more familiar with these lines of road than I am. I trust that my colleague on the committee [Mr. COBB], when he hears the statement of the gentleman from Missouri, will withdraw his objection and let this bill pass.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to urge strenuously my objection in this case, because I do not believe it would be of any use; and it is certainly not my purpose to stop legislation to-night by my opposition on this point. I believe it is pretty generally understood that the fate of the Indians is fixed; that they are doomed. The trouble is that nobody cares for an Indian, and the majority of the members of this House do not take the trouble to stop and reflect whether the safety and the rights of Indians are interfered with or not. These Indians are an outlying people upon our Western border. Our Western friends here are interested, of course, for their constituents in having these roads constructed. We in the Eastern States have begun to think it does not make any difference how questions of this kind may be determined; that the fate of the Indian is sealed, and therefore it is useless to obstruct the progress of this so-called civilization.

But I wanted to put on record my objections, more by way of protest than anything else. I did not know that this bill was one in which my good friend from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] felt a special interest. I am very much given (I can not help it) to yielding to these private solicitations when they come from such men as my friend from Missouri.

Mr. BURNES. I am very much obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. COBB. I do not know whether it is right or not that I should feel this way; but I can not help it.

Mr. BURNES. I can give my friend from Alabama [Mr. COBB] one satisfaction in return for his courtesy and kindness. I can assure him that this road is being built by one of the strongest and best corporations within my knowledge. It runs through the great city of my friend from Minnesota, Judge RICE. It is now completed from Chicago by way of St. Paul to St. Joseph, the town in which I reside; and the work is now extending beyond my town in the direction of Leavenworth, 30 miles farther, at which point it will strike Kansas and proceed thence to the Rio Grande.

I have no personal interest in the enterprise, but because the road runs through my town the corporation naturally expects, and the people there naturally expect, that I will do what I can to give the road an easy exit to the Rio Grande. Kansas wants this road, the people of the West want it. I might say I believe the Indians would want it if their concurrence were asked, though I do not know that they have been consulted. The intention is in good faith to build the road in such a manner as to hurt nobody, while adding to the commercial facilities of half a dozen States. I believe my friend from Alabama is doing a valuable service in the interest of the public by sacrificing in this matter a little of his prejudices and a little of his fears that we are treating the Indians unkindly or unjustly.

Mr. COBB. I send to the desk my amendment. I will offer it, and let it be voted upon.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the consent of the Indians to said right of way shall be obtained by said railroad company in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe before any right under this act shall accrue to said company.

Mr. WHEELER. Before that amendment is voted upon, I would like to ask my colleague [Mr. COBB] whether he has any information from the Indians that they object to this grant.

Mr. COBB. Yes, sir; though I do not claim that my knowledge on this point extends very far. I have talked with the gentleman who, I believe, is the representative of the Creeks, Judge Steadman, and perhaps one or two others. They have told me that they had repeatedly objected to measures of this kind, but their objections had been disregarded, and they had ceased to make any contest about the matter. They feel aggrieved, however, that these rights of way are being granted without seeking the consent of the Indians, who they think ought, under treaty guaranties, to have some voice in these matters. That is what these gentlemen tell me.

Mr. WHEELER. Have they filed any written objection or protest?

Mr. COBB. They have not.

Mr. WHEELER. No remonstrance has been filed by them against these measures?

Mr. COBB. No, sir.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. COBB, it was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BURNES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MONTANA, KANSAS AND TEXAS RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. PEEL. I yield now to my colleague [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 7223) to grant the right of way through the Public Land Strip and Indian Territory to the Montana, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. PERKINS. In explanation of one provision of the bill it is perhaps proper for me to state that this grants not only the right of way through the Indian Territory, but through a portion of the Public Land Strip. In the judgment of many members of the Committee on Indian Affairs it was not necessary to incorporate into the bill that feature; but in view of the fact that this Territory is in an unorganized condition, that there is no land district, and no way of following any plats, hence it was deemed necessary to incorporate it in this bill and grant the right of way also through that portion of the Strip.

The bill contains all the provisions suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas, and which are generally embodied in such bills.

Mr. ROGERS. What does the gentleman mean by the Public Land Strip?

Mr. PERKINS. I mean that strip of land south of Kansas, and extending west a little along the south boundary of Colorado, known as "No Man's Land."

Mr. CUTCHEON. What is the limit of time for building the road?

Mr. PERKINS. Two years.

Mr. CUTCHEON. And the same provisions as regards forfeiture?

Mr. PERKINS. The bill as originally introduced provided for five years, but the recommendation of the Committee on Indian Affairs is to limit it to two years.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Is the right of way made non-transferable?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir; with the right on the part of Congress to regulate at any time.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Have you any objection to incorporating the same amendment which was submitted by the gentleman from Arkansas a little while ago and adopted to his bill?

Mr. PERKINS. I have no objection whatever; it is possible that it is in the bill now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is on agreeing to the several amendments proposed by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. I now submit this amendment, to come in after the word "built," in line 4 of section 9.

The Clerk read as follows:

And it shall not be necessary in such case for a forfeiture to be declared by judicial process or legislative enactment.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAPAGO INDIAN RESERVATION, ARIZONA.

Mr. PEEL. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] who calls up a bill in place of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] who is necessarily absent.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. I ask consent to consider the bill (H. R. 7843) granting to the Citrous Water Company a right of way across the Papago Indian reservation in Maricopa County, Arizona.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the reading of the bill demanded?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I call for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will first ask if there is objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. If the gentleman will permit me, I will make a brief statement. The report was only submitted to-day.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me say that I have no objection to the bill, but whether it is in order under the special order is a matter of doubt in my mind.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. I will explain this matter in a moment, so I think there will be no objection.

The object is this: Certain gentlemen, farmers in that region, are attempting to reclaim some desert lands by irrigation, and they have worked one ditch for conveying water a distance of 12 miles until they have reached the line of this reservation. At that point they struck an executive reservation with only two Indian families residing in some huts upon it, but living miles and miles away from this point where we are attempting to get water. These Indians are living away up in the high rolling lands on this reservation, a great distance from the point where this canal is to run, and the lands are absolutely unused by these Indians.

The most of the Indians, with the exception of these families, have gone back from this reservation to the old reservation of San Xavier del Bac, which belongs to the same tribe.

These gentlemen write me that this work is being ruined by cattle getting across it and by animals burrowing into it, and the great work has been stopped for months and months simply in order to secure this right of way through that reservation. They did not know it was an Indian reservation until they got to the line.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will call for the reading of the special order under which this session is held to-night.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. They need water out there badly, and I hope there will be no objection to this.

The Clerk read the special order, as follows:

On motion of Mr. PEEL, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that to-morrow at 5 o'clock the House take a recess until 8 p. m., and that said evening session be devoted exclusively to the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs granting rights of way through Indian reservations, in cases where no objection is made to such consideration.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That is broad enough.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. It does not touch this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PEEL. I desire to say to my friend from Indiana, that I do not want to raise the point of order against this bill, but I think that the order, although it does not specify what rights of way are granted, was understood by the committee and by the members of the House to refer to rights for railroads. I suggest, in order that there may be no misunderstanding, that the bill be taken up and passed to-night, but simply making the motion to reconsider and leaving it open until to-morrow morning, when it can be submitted to the House. I prefer that course, as I do not think it comes really within the purview of the order agreed to by the House on the request made by the committee.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. Very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arizona a question. This, as I understand it, is a private corporation?

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. This is a corporation of seven or eight farmers, who are trying to get water on the land they have located.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It is merely for their private benefit?

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. Nothing else in the world.

Mr. CUTCHEON. With that statement, if the chairman of the Indian Committee and his colleagues think it is best to consider the bill under the special order, I shall make no objection, but it does not seem to me it is legitimate under the order.

Mr. PEEL. That is the reason I made the suggestion I did. It is a meritorious bill, and, I think, ought to pass. The best way to dispose of it is as we have agreed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no point of order made on the bill; therefore the Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk reported the amendments, as follows:

It is proposed to add, after "Arizona," in the tenth line, the following: "Provided, That all persons residing along said right of way shall have equal right to water supply at reasonable compensation: Provided further, That said right of way herein granted shall not be mortgaged, sold, transferred, or assigned except for the purposes of construction: And provided further, That unless such canal for which this right of way is granted be completed within two years after the approval of this act, the provisions of this act shall be null and void."

Mr. CUTCHEON. As this bill is out of the usual order, I ask that it may be read in full.

The Clerk read the bill.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is understood distinctly and the RECORD should show the fact that this bill is passed with the understanding that the right to reconsider is reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This motion can be called up at any time during the session. The bill will not be sent to the Senate until it is disposed of.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. I would like to have it called up to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a privileged question, and can be called up at any time.

Mr. PEEL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

YANKTON AND MISSOURI RIVER RAILROAD.

Mr. GIFFORD. I call up House bill 7547, granting the right of way to the Yankton and Missouri River Railway through the Yankton reservation in Dakota. I will cheerfully explain any provision of the bill, if we can in that way dispense with the reading of the bill. The bill has been very carefully considered and conforms with all the requirements. There are no amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUYALLUP VALLEY RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to call up House bill 10113, granting right of way through the Puyallup Indian reservation to the Puyallup Valley Railroad Company, and for other purposes; and ask the House to consider the Senate bill 2807.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has this bill been reported from the committee?

Mr. VOORHEES. I will state to the House that the bill reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs is almost in the same words.

There are very few differences, and the differences do not change the sense of the bill at all. I ask to have the Senate bill considered in lieu of the House bill now on the Calendar and reported favorably from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The special order is for the consideration of bills reported from the committee. When the House bill is reported the gentleman may then ask unanimous consent to consider the Senate bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. Then I call up House bill 10113 granting the right of way through the Puyallup Indian reservation to the Puyallup Valley Railway Company.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. I now ask unanimous consent to consider, in lieu of the House bill, Senate bill 2807, an act to grant to the Puyallup Valley Railway Company the right of way through the Puyallup Indian reservation, in Washington Territory, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask the Clerk to turn to the bill and see whether it contains the self-executing forfeiture clause. If not, I desire to offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have no objection to the amendment.

The Clerk reported the amendment as follows:

Add to the bill the words:

"And it shall not be necessary in such case for a forfeiture to be declared by judicial process or legislative enactment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, House bill 10113 of the same substance and title will be laid on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, with reference to House bill 7843, presented by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], I would suggest that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL], who made the motion to reconsider, withdraw that motion, the result of that action being that any one to-morrow will have the right to move to reconsider in the House. I will ask the Chair if that will not be the effect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). Any gentleman may move to-day or to-morrow to reconsider, unless the motion to reconsider has been previously made and has been laid on the table.

Mr. ROGERS. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the proper way is to rise in the morning to a question of privilege and call the attention of the full House to what has been done, and then, unless some gentleman desires to object or to insist that the bill shall not become a law, to call up the motion to reconsider and have it laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In either way it can be brought before the House.

Mr. PEEL. My object in entering the motion was to avoid any charge that we had acted outside of the order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, we can not make any conditions now that will affect the bill. Only what was done prior to its passage can have any effect. The understanding was that the bill should pass to-night and then, in order that nobody should be taken by surprise, that any gentleman who desired to-morrow could move to reconsider, or call up the motion to reconsider.

That was the understanding. It was not understood that the matter should be left open indefinitely. The bill is passed, but any one who desires to-morrow to move to reconsider can do so.

Mr. DOCKERY. That was exactly my proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Any gentleman can move to-morrow to call up the motion to reconsider.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I can not be made a party to anything that has the semblance of bad faith toward the House. My judgment is that nobody contemplated any proceeding under this order this evening, except with reference to bills granting rights of way to railroads.

I am not a member of the committee, but I do not think that any member of the House should sit here and permit anything to be done that does not comply with the utmost good faith towards the full House. Therefore, if the chairman of the committee [Mr. PEEL] proposes to withdraw the motion to reconsider, I shall renew it. I should have objected to the consideration of the bill myself, but for the statement of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, it is entirely immaterial to me which course we take. The only thing that can guide me is the order made by the House, which brought me here this evening; and as to the suggestion of bad faith, I wish to say that it is with me as it is with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], and in fully as eminent a degree in my case as it is in his, for I place myself second to no man in that respect. But this order speaks of "rights of way;" it does not mention railroads.

The chairman has said that his opinion is, and the opinion of the committee probably is, that bills granting rights of way to railroads were contemplated; but I did not come here to try to get a right of way for a railroad company, but simply to see if I could not get a right of way for an insignificant water-ditch for the benefit of a few farmers to enable them to raise crops there this coming year. I have been working at that bill from the time this Congress met to get it favorably reported, and now I am met with the suggestion that my action is in bad faith because I do not happen to have a railroad behind me. This bill is not for a railroad right of way; it is only for an insignificant water-ditch for the purpose of reclaiming some desert lands. What I object to is, that when we get into this House of 325 members, and any measure, however innocent it may be, which has anything to do with the Indians is brought up, it is sure to meet with this kind of objection.

The railroads have all to be satisfied, but when I happen to call up a bill for the benefit of a few poor men who want to construct a water-ditch, somebody who knows that "Lo" has been imposed upon, lo, these many years, and who thinks that here is an attempt to steal some more lands from him, rises and makes some sort of objection, and the result is that the railroad bills get through, but the others do not. Now, this bill, in my judgment, is entirely proper to be considered under the order, and I do not think that the question of bad faith arises at all, or that any gentleman upon this floor need be so sensitive in his honor as to say that the order of the House does not bind him, that he goes beyond the written word.

I confess that I have not that knowledge of parliamentary law which a longer standing on this floor might give me, and which would secure my rights and the rights of the people I represent in this matter; but, while I confess that, I would like to have this bill left in such a condition that at some time between now and the sounding of the trumpet on the last day these men may have an opportunity to get this poor little water-ditch through a small corner of an Indian reservation where there are only two Indians living. [Laughter.] I do want that simple privilege. If the suggestion of the chairman has that effect, so that I or any one else can call up the motion to reconsider and the matter can be finally settled, that is all I ask; but I do not want to leave this bill in jeopardy and let railroad bills pass granting rights of way through Indian reservations all over the Western country.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I think my friend has let his temper get away with his good-nature and his judgment. In what I said I did not mean to reflect upon him or upon any member of this House. I simply meant to exercise the right which every gentleman here has to construe this order for himself, and, as I said before, I did not and do not mean to be made a party to any transaction which, according to my interpretation of the order, would be in bad faith toward the full House of Representatives. That is all. My friend has not considered this matter fully. Suppose that to-morrow somebody should rise and move to reconsider our action on this bill, on the ground that it was a violation of good faith; then we would have the whole discussion brought upon the question of whether the House at this night session had violated either the letter or the spirit of this order.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. I am perfectly willing to leave it in that position.

Mr. ROGERS. But how much better position is the gentleman in when, the bill having passed, he enters a motion to reconsider, and then to-morrow rises and calls up that motion, thus showing that the action here has been taken in the most entire good faith. On the other hand, suppose two days have elapsed and somebody then rises and raises the question, not only the gentleman himself but every member here present will be put in the position of seeming to have taken advantage of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to reconsider is entered and can be called up by any gentleman.

Mr. PEEL. The motion to reconsider is open, and I can rise in the morning and call it up and explain to the House why this action was taken this evening.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. That is satisfactory to me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the motion of the gentleman [Mr. PEEL] to reconsider will remain as it originally stood.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH FORT HALL RESERVATION.

Mr. PEEL. I now call up the bill which I send to the desk.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8662) to accept and ratify an agreement made with the Shoshone and Bannack Indians for the surrender and relinquishment to the United States of a portion of the Fort Hall reservation, in the Territory of Idaho, for the purposes of a town site, and for the grant of a right of way through said reservation to the Utah and Northern Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. PEEL. While this bill provides for right of way, it does more; and I am not willing that it should be passed this evening without final action being left open for the House to-morrow. But the measure is a meritorious one. The Department has examined and approved it, and desires its passage. The taking of this town-site is in accordance with an agreement made with the Indians by commissioners on the part of the Government, the agreement having been subsequently approved by the Department. The bill grants 600 or 700 acres of land for a town-site, the lots in which are to be laid off by the Government and sold at not less than an appraised value, to the highest bidder; and the money is to go into the Treasury for the benefit of the Indians. These are in general the provisions of the bill, in addition to the right of way. I ask that the bill be considered and passed now, but be left open for reconsideration to-morrow, when I will call the attention of the House to the matter, and if there is a single objection, it shall stop.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I want to make one request of the chairman of this committee. He concedes that there is more involved in this bill than the question of right of way. Now there is on our Calendar another bill from the Committee on Indian Affairs which has been unanimously reported session after session. It involves simply a transfer on the part of the Cherokee Indians to the freedmen of money due them from the Indians. There is absolutely no objection to the measure; the only trouble has been in obtaining recognition to put the bill on its passage. In view of the fact that no person, I am sure, will object to this measure, I ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs whether he can not permit this bill to take the same course as these other measures. This is a matter of humanity.

Mr. PEEL. I would be glad to accommodate the gentleman, but the bill to which he refers has no pertinence to the business of this evening.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. If it is necessary for the purpose of making the bill in order, you can put a right of way at the tail end of it. [Laughter.] I have no objection whatever to an amendment of that kind, in order to get the bill through.

Mr. PEEL. I can not consent to a request of that kind. I ask that the bill which I have sent to the desk be submitted to the House; if there is any objection, all right.

Mr. PERKINS. In addition to what the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] has said concerning this bill, I wish to say that it was draughted by the Interior Department, and I hold in my hand an executive document transmitting it to the House, together with the treaty, and a statement of the equities in favor of the bill and the necessity for its passage. As suggested by the chairman of the committee, it is an important matter, and as it is a right-of-way bill, although coupled with other provisions, it was competent, in the judgment of the committee, to call it up to-night under the order; but it was deemed best to do so with the understanding suggested by the chairman. The gentleman from Idaho Territory [Mr. DUBOIS] is entirely familiar with all the circumstances, and will be glad, I know, to furnish any information.

Mr. DUBOIS. The Utah and Northern Railroad Company already has a completed line in operation running through the reservation. This bill provides that the Indians be now paid for that right of way. Up to the present time they have never received any compensation for the use of their lands for this purpose.

Mr. PEEL. This bill proposes to ratify the agreement which the Indians themselves made.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask the opinion of the Chair upon the question whether this bill is in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). There is no doubt about the bill being in order at this special session of the House.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ST. LOUIS AND SAN FRANCISCO RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. PEEL. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 6612) to grant right of way through the Indian Territory to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The following amendments, reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, were read and agreed to:

After the words "beginning at," in line 30, insert "Rogers on said road, thence west by the way of Bentonville, in Benton County, to."

In line 3 of section 9 strike out "three," before the word "years," and insert "two."

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to ask my colleague [Mr. PEEL] whether this bill contains the self-executing forfeiture clause.

Mr. PEEL. I am not certain, but I think it does.

Mr. PERKINS. The bill contains the following provision at the end of section 9:

Provided, That any violation of the conditions mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeit of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

Mr. ROGERS. That is not sufficient. I move to amend by inserting after the clause just read by the gentleman the following:

And it shall not be necessary in such case for the forfeiture to be declared by judicial process or legislative enactment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MOORHEAD, LEECH LAKE AND NORTHERN RAILWAY.

Mr. PEEL. I yield now to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB].

Mr. NELSON. The gentleman from Alabama yields his time to me, and I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 7261) granting the right of way through certain Indian lands in the State of Minnesota to the Moorhead, Leech Lake and Northern Railway Company.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON. There is an amendment I desire to incorporate in section 9, which I think will perhaps meet the views of the gentleman from Arkansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

That this forfeiture shall follow without any further act or ceremony whatsoever.

Mr. NELSON. That is to say, in the event of a failure on the part of the company to comply with the conditions of the grant of the right of way a forfeiture follows.

Mr. ROGERS. I would suggest to my friend from Minnesota that as bills containing this provision have been approved by the President, and as it was prepared by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee after giving the matter full consideration, it seems to me it would be better to adopt that form.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection; and will accept as a substitute the form suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ROGERS. Then I offer the amendment in the same words as that heretofore adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

And it shall not be necessary in such case for a forfeiture to be declared by judicial process or legislative enactment.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NELSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ABERDEEN, BISMARCK AND NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. PEEL. I now yield to the gentleman from Dakota [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 7964) granting to the Aberdeen, Bismarck and Northwestern Railway right of way across a portion of the Sioux reservation, in Dakota Territory.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. I move to amend this bill in section 5 by adding what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "act," in section 5, "and it shall not be necessary in such case for the forfeiture to be declared by judicial process or legislative enactment."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NEWPORT AND KING'S VALLEY RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. PEEL. I yield now to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN].

Mr. HERMANN. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 5830) granting to the Newport and King's Valley Railroad Company the right of way through the Siletz Indian reservation, and move as a substitute for the House bill the Senate bill 1129 of the same title, which was favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs to-day. I desire to state to the gentleman from Arkansas that the clause to which he has referred in several of the preceding bills is inserted in this one.

Mr. ROGERS. I would inquire whether the bills are substantially the same?

Mr. HERMANN. They are the same practically, and in addition they require the assent of the Indians.

Mr. PERKINS. This bill was considered by the committee this morning and was reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The clerks inform the Chair that this bill is not upon the Calendar.

Mr. HERMANN. The Senate bill was reported from the committee this morning favorably, and the House bill was reported back also, with the recommendation that it lie upon the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1129) granting to the Newport and King's Valley Railroad Company the right of way through the Siletz Indian reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. HERMANN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PEEL. I believe that is the last bill that the committee wishes to call up to-night.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. In regard to this bill No. 5066, to secure to the Cherokee freedmen and others their proportion of certain proceeds of lands under the act of March 3, 1883, I want to ask the chairman if there is not some method by which we can have the bill considered to-night, subject to having it withdrawn in the morning if there is a single objection; in other words, in that way to obtain unanimous consent of the House for the consideration of an unobjectionable measure.

Mr. PEEL. I feel as anxious as the gentleman to secure consideration of the bill, but can not, as chairman of the committee, agree to call up a bill so manifestly outside of the special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would be glad to accommodate the gentleman from Missouri, but does not see, under the order, how this bill could be considered.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs expresses himself in favor of the bill.

Mr. PEEL. I have already said so.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Then he will call it up at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. PEEL. I will.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Very well; I have got him tied to that. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEEL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. CANDLER: A bill (H. R. 10785) for the relief of Mrs. Margaret E. Harnie—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FLOOD: A bill (H. R. 10786) to remove the charge of desertion from Isaac Samuels—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GEST: A bill (H. R. 10787) granting a pension to Richard Ashcraft—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCREARY: A bill (H. R. 10788) for the relief of John Pittman—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LAFFOON: A bill (H. R. 10789) granting a pension to Philip Neuman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10790) for the relief of John Rudy—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. A. C. THOMPSON: A bill (H. R. 10791) granting a pension to Marinda Wakefield Reed—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VOORHEES: A bill (H. R. 10792) conferring authority upon the county commissioners of Garfield County, Washington Territory, to issue bonds—to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10793) to enable the city of Pomeroy, in Washington Territory, to levy special taxes for the building of water-works, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. W. L. WILSON: A bill (H. R. 10794) granting a pension to Phebe H. Sever—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BOUTELLE: Memorial of the general conference of the Congregational churches of Maine, in favor of legislation for the suppression of the liquor traffic—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. FORNEY: Petition of citizens of Cullman, Ala., for an amendment to the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GRIMES: Petition of T. H. Kimbrough, G. A. B. Dozier, and other citizens of Harris County, Georgia, to amend the interstate-commerce act—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LAFFOON: Petitions in the claims of John Rudy and of Thomas Osburn—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LEE (by request): Papers in the claims of Harrison Mills, of Charles Clarkson, of George Clarke, of George W. Goram, and of Henry Vanderhoof—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. POST: Petition of W. L. Wasson and 37 others, citizens of Illinois, for amendments to the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SENEY: Petition of Lester Sutton and 80 others, citizens of Seneca County, Ohio, in favor of the wool tariff fixed by the American Wool Growers and Manufacturers' Association at Washington, January 14, 1888—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SYMES: Petition of citizens of Colorado, concerning the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WEBER: Petition of the Knights of Labor of Niagara County, New York, in favor of amending the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Commerce.

The following petition, indorsing the per diem rated service-pension bill, based on the principle of paying all soldiers, sailors, and marines of the late war a monthly pension of 1 cent a day for each day they were in the service, was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

By Mr. OUTHWAITE: Of H. Warren Phelps and 62 others, soldiers and sailors.

The following petition, praying for the enactment of a law providing temporary aid for common schools, to be disbursed on the basis of illiteracy, was referred to the Committee on Education:

By Mr. HERBERT: Of James M. Davidson and 32 others, of Burton, Ala.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 11, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

OHIO VALLEY CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on the joint resolution (H. Res. 196) declaring the true intent and meaning of the act approved May 9, 1888. The message will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House concur in the first amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution and concur in the second amendment of the Senate to said joint resolution with amendments as follows:

On page 1, line 2, of the joint resolution, strike out the word "passed" and insert the word "approved."

On page 1, line 2, strike out the word "ninth" and insert the word "twenty-eighth."

On page 1, lines 2 and 3, strike out the words "and approved," and change the title so as to read:

"A joint resolution declaring the true intent and meaning of the act approved May 28, 1888."

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

MARY M. BRIGGS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to return to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the resolution of the Senate agreeing to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 889) for the relief of Mary M. Briggs.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the House was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the amendment made by the House of Representatives was agreed to. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. SAWYER. I now move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. SAWYER, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. TURPIE were appointed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 948) for the relief of William H. Tabarrah was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., and a petition of the Manufacturers Club of Philadelphia, Pa., praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the League Island navy-yard; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented petitions of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 553 to regulate and restrict immigration, as follows: Fredonia Council, No. 47, of Philadelphia; Diligent Council, No. 4, of Philadelphia; General Custer Council, No. 206, of Johnstown; Good Will Council, No. 42, of Tyrone; General Putnam Council, No. 125, of Pittsburgh; Ellsworth Council, No. 14, of Philadelphia; Moyer Council, No. 166, of Moyer; Philos Council, No. 188, of Madison; Invincible Council, No. 33, of Allegheny; Wilkinsburgh Council, No. 92, of Wilkinsburgh; Scottdale Council, No. 102, of Scottdale; Middletown Council, No. 156, of Middletown; Warden Council, No. 182, of Stoners; Birmingham Council, No. 26, of Pittsburgh; Black Creek Council, No. 51, of Weatherby; New Tripoli Grand Council, No. 204, of New Tripoli; Bridesburgh Council, No. 135, of Philadelphia; Security Council, No. 168, of Weaver's Old Stand; Dravosburgh Council, No. 141, of Dravosburgh; Winona Council, No. 163, of Germantown; Climax Council, No. 195, of Smithton; Bethany Coancil, No. 155, of Ruff's Dale; General Marion Council, No. 154, of Pittsburgh, and Codurus Council, No. 115, of York.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SPOONER presented a petition of citizens of Pierce County, Wisconsin, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the interstate-commerce act; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL. I present the petition of M. S. Hellman, of Canyon City, Oregon, with accompanying evidence, praying for a rehearing in the matter of his claim for reimbursement for supplies furnished the Quartermaster's Department, heretofore presented to the Senate, and on which an adverse report was made, No. 85, first session, Forty-third Congress. I move that the petition, together with the papers on file in the case, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON presented a petition of 32 citizens of Davis County, Iowa, praying that the schedule of duties agreed on by the representatives of the wool-growers and wool-manufacturers at the city of Washington may be enacted into a law; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Groton and vicinity, in the Territory of Dakota, praying that no change be made in the tariff on flaxseed and linseed-oil, and flax lint; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Doña Aña County, New Mexico, praying for legislation providing for the payment of claims for Indian depredations; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented a petition of 130 citizens of Jefferson County, Iowa, praying for certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Council Bluffs, Iowa, praying for the extension of time of payment of the debt of the Union Pacific Railroad Company; which was referred to the Select Committee on the President's Message transmitting the Report of the Pacific Railway Commission.

CUSTOM-HOUSE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. HALE. I ask, out of order, as I am engaged in the Committee on Appropriations, to submit two resolutions at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire immediate action upon them?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the first resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to send forthwith to the Senate the information relating to employés in the custom-house service in New York city, called for by resolution of the Senate adopted May 1, 1888; also, the information relating to employés on the customs service at Baltimore, Md., called for by resolution of the Senate adopted May 7, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to inquire if there is any necessity to obtain this information from the Secretary of the Treasury. I understand we have had a committee going round and looking into the service at the various custom-houses, and I suppose they have all the information required without troubling the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish a list of all the employés in the custom-houses of the country. It seems to me that it would be unnecessary to call upon him to furnish us with a list of the number of employés and the character of employés when we have a special committee of this body to make pilgrimages to various parts of the country for the purpose of ascertaining that very fact.

I have no objection to anybody having all the information he wants, but when we have a special committee traveling over this country inquiring of everybody, not only in the civil service, but those who have been dismissed from the ervice, everything in connection with the public service in the custom-houses, why should we be making inquiry of the Secretary of the Treasury with reference to the number of employés, the character of employés, and the pay of employés at the various custom-houses of the country? It seems to me to be out of order to be doing any such thing.

Mr. HALE. I do not understand that the Senator objects. I do not think any Senator will object to the resolution.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not know that I want to object. I simply rise to make an inquiry of the Senator from Maine.

The resolution requires an immediate response by the Secretary of the Treasury, which may mean a good deal to him; that is, it may require a very large extra force of clerks in order to give the information that the Senator from Maine desires.

May I inquire whether the necessity of the resolution is based upon some action being taken by the Committee on Appropriations, in appropriating money for the use of the Treasury Department to pay the employés at the custom-houses?

Mr. HALE. No, not necessarily. The Senator will not object to the resolution if he examines it carefully. The information was called for two months ago or more, and this is only to remind the Department that it should send these facts in forthwith. I have not proceeded unadvisedly, and have not been impatient; but it is more than two months since the resolution was first put in, and the Senate is entitled to the information. It is upon a public matter, a matter that has excited public interest. It is information that can easily be furnished, and the resolution is only a reminder to the Secretary of the Treasury of the former resolution, and that the inquiry of the Senate ought to be answered.

Mr. McPHERSON. It is not needed by the Committee on Appropriations in order that they may intelligently appropriate money for the pay of the employés of the custom-houses?

Mr. HALE. No, sir.

Mr. McPHERSON. I would suggest, then, to the Senator from Maine that he modify the resolution and not use the term "forthwith," but say "at his earliest convenience." That would be a reminder.

Mr. HALE. There was one resolution passed in that form more than two months ago. The Senator knows that this not infrequently happens, where a resolution of inquiry to which nobody objects is put in. After the Senate waits a reasonable time it is then customary in a respectful manner to ask that the information be furnished forthwith. "Forthwith" means as soon as possible. It would not, I think, be fitting and courteous to put a first resolution in that way, and I did not. This is only to remind the Secretary of the Treasury, so that we may get the information.

Mr. McPHERSON. I did not object to the resolution when it was originally introduced and passed by the Senate. I do not object to this resolution. I want the Senate to have the information.

Mr. HALE. I do not think any Senator will object. I have not been impatient about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection to the present consideration of the resolution, the question is on agreeing to the same.

The resolution was agreed to.

APPOINTMENTS TO CLASSIFIED SERVICE.

Mr. HALE. I now ask for the consideration of the second resolution which I sent to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Civil Service Commissioners be, and they are hereby, directed to send forthwith to the Senate the information relating to certifications and appointments in the classified service in Washington called for by resolution of the Senate adopted May 1, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine if there be a statute which authorizes one House of Congress to direct the Civil Service Commissioners to send information to that House?

Mr. HALE. If the Senator objects to the resolution, I will let it go over.

Mr. HOAR. I think that should be known. It would put the Senate in an awkward position if such were not the case.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator objects, of course the resolution goes over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts object to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOAR. No; I asked the Senator from Maine a question as to the authority of the Senate to give this direction.

Mr. HALE. I have no idea that there is such an unapproachable majesty about the Civil Service Commission that the Senate may not send a proper inquiry to it.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think that is a very good answer to the proposition made. The Senator from Maine offers a resolution directing a certain public body to inform the Senate. If the Senate has authority to give that direction, that is all right. The Senator knows whether it has or not, or he would not introduce the resolution. If it has no authority to do that, then the question will present itself to the Senate whether it will make such an order. I do not think it is any matter of unapproachable majesty.

Mr. HALE. I am willing to leave it to the Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think the inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts is a very proper one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Unless I can get an answer to the question raised by the Senator from Massachusetts I shall object.

Mr. HALE. Either Senator can object, and the resolution will go over for a day.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I object, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware objects, and the resolution lies over under the rule. It will be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SAULSBURY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3303) amendatory of "An act relating to postal crimes and amendatory of the statutes therein mentioned," approved June 18, 1888, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3159) for the relief of the Oregon Paving and Contract Company, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5222) for the relief of A. M. Anderson and others, reported it without amendment.

He also submitted the views of the minority of the Committee on Claims to accompany the bill (S. 353) for the relief of William T. Crump; which were ordered to be printed.

Mr. VEST. I rose, but scarcely in time, to ask the Senate to consider the bill reported by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], the bill of which I spoke yesterday. It is a mere formal amendment of an act we passed June 18, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3303) amendatory of "An act relating to postal crimes and amendatory of the statutes therein mentioned," approved June 18, 1888. Is there objection?

Mr. DOLPH. The morning business is not concluded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not yet concluded.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the bill take any time?

Mr. VEST. I think not; the mere reading of it will suffice.

Mr. DOLPH. I will let the bill come up, but I ask the Senator to allow me to make a report.

Mr. VEST. It is a short bill.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to make a report from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and then I shall have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive reports of committees.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2854) to execute certain treaty stipulations prohibiting Chinese immigration, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (S. 3304) to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States; which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] asks for the consideration of the bill (S. 3303) amendatory of "An act relating to postal crimes and amendatory of the statutes therein mentioned," approved June 18, 1888. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. What is now the order of business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order of business is reports of committees.

Mr. HOAR. I make no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been this day reported, the Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent for its present consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. PADDOCK. I wish to make some reports from the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is in the nature of an objection.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 10244) granting a pension to Mrs. Betsy Lockwood;

A bill (H. R. 6307) granting a pension to Sarah A. Corson;

A bill (H. R. 24) for the relief of Eliza Russell; and

A bill (H. R. 490) granting a pension to George W. Pitner.

Mr. BLODGETT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8988) to increase the pension of Mrs. Minerva Eagle, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6491) for the relief of Lowman & Co., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 2531) granting a pension to Frederick W. Travis;

A bill (H. R. 6220) granting a pension to John Taaffe;

A bill (H. R. 6783) to place the name of John A. Griffey on the pension-roll; and

A bill (H. R. 8423) for the relief of William H. Porter.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, which was agreed to.

A bill (S. 674) for the relief of Felix Marcinkowski; and

A bill (S. 2429) for the relief of Charles F. Holly.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1661) for the erection of an appraiser's warehouse in the city of New York, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 751) for the relief of the estate of J. J. Pulliam, deceased; and

A bill (S. 992) for the relief of the Sone and Fleming Manufacturing Company, limited, of the city of New York.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8180) to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, Mr. ROGERS, and Mr. FULLER managers at the conference on its part.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 2657) granting an increase of pension to Emily J. Stannard, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MATSON, Mr. CHIPMAN, and Mr. GALLINGER managers at the conference on its part.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 2644) granting the right of way to the Fort Smith, Paris and Dardanelle Railway Company to construct and operate a railroad, telegraph, and telephone line from Fort Smith, Ark., through the Indian Territory, to or near Baxter Springs, in the State of Kansas; and

A bill (S. 2807) to grant to the Puyallup Valley Railway Company a right of way through the Puyallup Indian reservation, in Washington Territory, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1129) granting to the Newport and King's Valley Railroad Company the right of way through the Siletz Indian reservation; and

A bill (S. 2536) granting to the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company the right of way through the Nez Perces Indian reservation.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 123) granting a pension to Mrs. Virginia Grier;

A bill (S. 1173) increasing the pension of Jeptha A. Jones;

A bill (S. 1556) granting a pension to Martha N. Kellogg;

A bill (S. 2274) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine K. Whittlesey;

A bill (S. 2604) granting a pension to Mrs. Loanda Sherman;

A bill (S. 2866) granting a pension to Abel G. Rankin;

A bill (S. 3021) granting a pension to Carrie V. Miller; and

A bill (H. R. 1983) to ratify an act entitled "An act creating the county of San Juan," in the Territory of New Mexico.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 3305) setting apart a tract of land to be used as a cemetery by the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Central City, Colo.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. McPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 3306) granting a pension to Mary K. Richards; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 3307) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of George O. Bradley; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 3308) to provide for gas and electric lights for the city of Washington and the public buildings by contract; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 3309) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth E. Groff; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3310) to place the name of John Tobin on the pension-roll; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 3311) granting a pension to Oscar H. Kimball; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 3312) to authorize the appointment of a sanitary engineer in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 3313) granting a pension to Lewis Dolby; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. DOLPH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2430) explanatory of an act entitled "An act to settle certain accounts between the United States and the State of Mississippi and other States, and for other purposes;" which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CALL, and Mr. WILSON of Iowa, submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION STATEMENTS.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That in the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10340) "making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes," the Committee on Appropriations be authorized to employ a stenographer to take down such statements in regard to items therein as the committee may desire to have reported; and the committee may have such statements printed for its use.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. SAULSBURY, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the petition and papers in the case of Charles D. Maxwell.

On motion of Mr. CULLOM, it was Ordered, That Mrs. Frances M. Wilkinson have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers relating to her petition for a pension, her application having been reported upon adversely.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GEORGE. I move that the Senate resolve itself into open executive session for the consideration of the treaty with Great Britain.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not propose or desire to interfere with the convenience of the Senator from Mississippi, but I ask him to withhold his motion so that I may present a conference report and have it disposed of. It will take about half an hour, perhaps. It is only to meet the convenience of the other legislative branch that I wish to have it considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield for that purpose?

Mr. GEORGE. I do.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9345) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "For compensation to clerks in post-offices for unusual business, as contemplated by Revised Statutes, section 3863, $25,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "year," in line 4, of said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"The Postmaster-General may hereafter allow rent, light, and fuel at offices of the third class in the same manner as he is now authorized by law to do in the case of offices of the first and second class: Provided, That no contract for rent for a third-class post-office shall be made for a larger period than one year, nor shall the aggregate allowance for rent made in any year exceed the amount appropriated for such purpose."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed insert the following: "That hereafter the postage on seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, cions, and plants shall be charged at the rate of 1 cent for each 2 ounces or fraction thereof, subject in all other respects to the existing laws."

And the Senate agree to the same.

On amendment numbered 7, the committee of conference has been unable to agree.

P. B. PLUMB,
W. B. ALLISON,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES H. BLOUNT,
ALEX. M. DOCKERY,
HENRY H. BINGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. PLUMB. There were but few points of difference between the two Houses on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Amendment numbered 1 was a new provision authorizing the Postmaster-General to spend $50,000 as compensation for clerks in post-offices for unusual business. That provision the Senate struck out. The Senate conferees agreed to yield to the House to the extent of appropriating $25,000 for that purpose.

Amendment numbered 2 was a provision for rent, light, and fuel for post-offices of the third class, appropriating $650,607. The Senate inserted in lieu thereof $450,000, and besides added a provision that not more than $300 should be allowed for rent of a third-class office in any one fiscal year, and not more than $60 for fuel and light. The House conferees substantially agreed to that provision.

Amendment numbered 4 was designed to be a permanent provision of law for the payment of rent for third-class post-offices. It was stricken out by the Senate, and the Senate conferees substantially yielded to the House upon that point.

Mr. McPHERSON. I ask the Senator if there was any increase of the rate of rental for third-class post-offices?

Mr. PLUMB. There was not. The Senator will bear in mind that as the law now stands rent can not be allowed for third-class post-offices. The House inserted a provision which allowed the Postmaster-General to award any sum which he might name for that purpose. The Senate amendment limited the amount to be allowed during the present fiscal year, beginning the first day of this month, to $300, designing simply to bring this matter within limits and to see how the provision was going to operate. To that the House conferees agreed.

Senate amendment numbered 6 was a provision reducing the postage on seeds to 2 cents a pound. That amendment was adopted on my motion. I had taken the Senate bill as reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and as passed by the Senate, and I designed to amend it so as to make the rate 8 cents a pound, but by a mistake in the hurry of the moment I made the amendment in the wrong place, and that reduced the rate from the amount contained in the Senate bill, which was 4 cents a pound, to 2 cents a pound. The bill as it passed the Senate was designed not only to reduce the postage on seeds to an amount which was regarded as a fair compensation for carrying them, but was also designed to meet the special circumstances of Canadian competition then in existence and which have since been removed. So, when I came to offer the amendment it was designed to do by the amendment exactly what the Senate Post-Office Committee would have done as an original proposition, that is, reduce the postage one-half, making the rate 8 cents a pound in place of 16 cents a pound, as it is now. The conferees of the Senate and House agreed upon the proposition as it was intended to have been in the Senate, making the rate 8 cents a pound.

The only item of difference remaining between the two Houses, so far as the conferees are concerned, is what is known as the subsidy clause. This amendment, numbered 7, is found on page 6 of the bill, in these words:

To provide more efficient mail service between the United States and Central and South America and the West Indies, $800,000. To promote the purposes of this appropriation the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to contract with American built and registered steam-ships for the transportation of the United States mails to such ports in said countries as in his judgment will best subserve said postal service. Said contracts shall be for a period of not less than five nor more than ten years, at a compensation not exceeding for each outward trip $1 per nautical mile of the distance in the most direct and feasible sailing course between the terminal points as shall be found expedient and desirable to secure the ends above set forth.

The subsequent paragraph requires the Postmaster-General to furnish the schedules of arrivals and departures, authorizing in case of unreasonable failure to depart on those dates to withhold from the contractors a certain sum as a penalty for non-performance. That remains in difference. The conferees agreed upon every other item of difference but that one, and that is still in difference between the two Houses.

I ask for the adoption of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move that the Senate further insist on its amendment numbered 7, and ask a further conference with the House of Representatives upon that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate still further insist upon its amendment numbered 7, and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

Mr. PLUMB. Before that motion is put I wish to say a few words.

There is nothing in this provision which requires the Postmaster-General to spend this money. It is a discretionary fund. I do not mean to say that he can absolutely take off all the service between United States ports and those in South and Central America, but I do say that he practically has control over this expenditure to the extent of saying whether he will expend a small portion of it, one-half of it, or all.

It is a fund designed to give him power to establish a better mail service, a more frequent mail service, a swifter mail service between the ports of the United States and the ports of South and Central America and the West Indies.

The Postmaster-General objects to being endowed with this responsibility; and he says in substance in a communication to a member of the House of Representatives, which is contained in the RECORD of the 4th day of July, that the service as at present carried on is satisfactory. With all due respect to the Postmaster-General, I do not believe a word of it. It may be satisfactory to him, and to that extent, of course, his statement may be entirely correct; it may be satisfactory to the Post-Office Department; but it is not satisfactory to the business public. It is not satisfactory to the persons who use the mails; the facilities provided by the United States, whether they be American or foreign ships, for carrying the mail between these ports, are not satisfactory. It is not a fair arrangement upon the part of the Government of the United States, which is under certain obligations, because it has reserved to itself the right alone to carry the mails of the United States. It is not a fair dealing with the Government upon this subject.

Mr. President, we give every year between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000 for the purpose of carrying the mails or what are called the star-routes of the United States. The Postmaster-General lets contracts for this service, inviting competition therefor by public advertisement, and fixing at his own discretion not only the rate of speed but the number of trips between the various points. It is to the credit of the Department now and heretofore that it never has sought to establish any very close relation between the returns to be received from that service and the expenditure on account of it.

It has been the policy of the American people to carry the mail to American citizens wherever they were to be found on American soil. In the most remote mining camps, in the newer agricultural communities, everywhere where men go for permanent possession or business, the United States Government practically recognizes its obligation to carry to them the mail, and to carry it to them with a frequency and a celerity which has relation not to the amount of revenue paid, but which has relation to the necessities of the situation, and those necessities of course are commercial and social.

If the mails of the United States had only been carried to those communities which paid for them—that is to say, where the revenues of the Department equaled the sum it took to pay for the mail service—there would have been no service west of the Mississippi River to-day practically, or it would have been confined to a few of the larger cities, and the border population of the country would not have been accommodated. But, Mr. President, the United States has adopted an entirely different policy. Where the people are it takes the mails to them. To-day there is a mail on horseback, to-morrow there is a mail in a coach, and the next year the mail is carried on a railroad.

But an erroneous idea prevails about the relation of great places like New York, Philadelphia, and so on, to the revenues of the mail service. It is assumed that all the money which is put into the Treasury on account of mail service by the New York office is entitled to be credited to that place, and we hear a great deal of talk of the amount paid for clerk-hire and things of that kind out of the mail receipts at the New York post-office. There is not a mining camp in the United States, there is not a hamlet anywhere under the flag that does not contribute to the revenues of the New York post-office. By just as much as these agencies of the Government and of civilization are extended, by just that much the mail receipts at large cities are swelled; but they are due partly in every case to the circulars sent out and returned and to the correspondence that goes to and fro between the large commercial center and every village and hamlet in the land.

So, if there be an excess of postal revenue in New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, it is because of the policy adopted by the United States Government of giving to the American people, however remote and scattered, the benefits of the postal service.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator if there has ever been any complaint by American citizens resident in South America in regard to mail facilities?

Mr. PLUMB. I think there has been.

Mr. VEST. I have never heard of any. We had better be perfectly frank about this. The only complaint I have ever heard—and I suppose every Senator is perfectly cognizant of that fact—has come, I presume, from the steam-ship lines in existence. I receive frequently slips calling my attention to the importance of additional mail facilities between this country and South America, but I never heard of any complaint from any citizen resident in those countries.

Mr. PLUMB. I have, and I have heard it very often. Of course, the American people do not go there to permanently reside, and it is to their credit that they do not. They still retain their citizenship. They go there for purposes of domicile in connection with trade, the building of railroads, the selling of goods, and so on. They are to some extent a transitory population. They do not remain there year after year as people do in the West. They go and come very largely, and therefore they do not utter such complaints; they are not heard in the shape of formal petitions as they would be if they were persons who lived there all their natural lives and to whom, therefore, the privation which the policy of the Government has brought to them would be more apparent and more dangerous and more damaging.

But, Mr. President, this is a question of degree and not of kind with the Post-Office Department. I have in my hand a bill which, I violate no confidence in saying, because I am authorized to make the statement, was drawn in the Post-Office Department under the auspices of the Postmaster-General himself and introduced in the House of Repesentatives by the chairman of the Post-Office Committee, who was a member of the conference committee on this bill, which proposes to amend section 4009 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as follows:

But in cases where a contract shall be made in addition to the sea and United States inland postage—

And it will be borne in mind that the maximum compensation now is a combination of the sea and inland postage upon the matter carried. This bill goes on:

But in cases where a contract shall be made in addition to the sea and United States inland postage to be allowed under this section to United States steam-ships plying between ports of the United States and Central and South America and the West Indies, he may, by agreement—

That is, the Postmaster-General may—by agreement with the owners or agents of said steam-ships, at an equivalent consideration therefor,—

That is to say, he is authorized to fix the schedule of departures and the contractors shall name a satisfactory time within which the journey shall be made between the United States port and the foreign port—allow any sum not exceeding three times the sum of said sea and inland postage, for dispatching their vessels without fail upon certain dates, to be specified in schedules covering periods of not less than six months each, to be agreed upon in advance by the Postmaster-General and said owners or agents.

And then follows a provision very much like the one contained in the amendment now under consideration.

So that after all, taking this bill as expressing the true sentiment of the Postmaster-General, it is simply a question of limiting his discretion to a maximum expenditure of $800,000, or the maximum expenditure of an unascertainable amount, which may be three times the sum allowed by the present law.

Now, Mr. President, it may be worth while to know what we are paying for this service, and I have here a table prepared at the Post-Office Department showing it. To the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, for the service between New York and Colon during the fiscal year 1887—the fiscal year which terminated one year ago this month—we paid $15,340.62. We paid the same steamship company, for service between San Francisco and Panama, $1,833. We paid to the New York, Havana and Mexican Steamship Company, for service between New York and Vera Cruz, $399.03. We paid the steamship company that carries the mail between Key West and Nassau—the name of the owners not given—$228.37. We paid to what is known as the "Red D Line," between New York and Laguayra, $4,457.47. We paid the New Orleans and Central American Steamship Company, for service between New Orleans and Port Limon, $195.12. We paid Headley & Co.'s steamers for service between New York and Colon, $23.39. We paid Oteri's line, between New Orleans and Truxillo, $199.55; to the Royal Mail Steamship Company, between New Orleans and Belize, $3,887.77; to the steamships connecting us with the Haytian Republic, between New York and Cape Hayti, $205.30; to the United States and Brazil Steamship Company, for service between New York and Rio de Janeiro, $10,804.35; to the Morgan Line, for service between New Orleans and Vera Cruz, $67.50; to the same line, for service between New Orleans and Havana, $192.81; to steamers plying between New York and Bermuda, $10.79; to the Clyde Line, between New York and San Domingo, $960.08; to Leaycraft & Co.'s steamers, between New New York and Cape Hayti, $30.32; to the steamer Alert, for service between New York and Cape Hayti, $79.42; to the New York and Cuba Mail Steamship Company, between New York and Santiago, $124.88, and to the same line, between New York and Nassau, $331.48. Making a total for all the service between the United States and Central and South American and West Indian ports, $39,371.25.

The Postmaster-General wants the discretion limited to an expenditure of three times that amount, and we are willing to trust him—those who believe in this amendment and have agreed in the reporting of it are willing to trust him—with a maximum sum of $800,000, and to the payment of that sum on a basis of not exceeding $1 per nautical mile on the shortest line to be traveled between the ports named for the carrying of the mails.

This service yields us a profit, that is to say, the entire foreign mail service of the United States, yields a profit to the United States Government of between $600,000 and $700,000 a year, and if we were to appropriate all this money and the Postmaster-General should expend it all, the foreign mail service of the country would still not result in a deficiency.

Mr. HAWLEY. Would not the new facilities tend to increase the receipts?

Mr. PLUMB. I think they would. The Postmaster-General estimates that the increase for the present year was 20 per cent., and I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the aggregate increase of the mail facilities of the United States in the internal business of the postal service is only about 8 per cent. per annum. That is the average. Sometimes it goes below that and sometimes it is as high as 10 per cent., but the average increase during the past two or three years has been only about 8 per cent., while our foreign service has increased at over twice that rate.

I believe following the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut. If we had better communication, if we had swift communication, if we had more frequent communication, and if we had a service under the control of the Post-Office Department in such a way that a schedule of departure could be arranged to be published six months in advance, as provided in this amendment, the business between this country and Central and South America would be much increased. We have been doing this same thing with reference to Cuba. I take pleasure in recalling my own part in that, whereby for the purpose of establishing swift communication between New York, the metropolis of this country, and Cuba we have paid for years 50 cents a mile to the railroads between New York and Tampa Bay, and are now paying more money per annum for one little steamer plying between Tampa Bay and Havana than we are paying for all the service rendered to our postal department by mail steamers to all Central and South American countries put together. As a result our trade with Cuba has been largely increased.

It is plainly to be seen that we are on the threshold of taking commercial possession of Cuba, largely by means of this improved communication. Passengers leaving New York now go in sixty hours from New York to Havana; the parcel business has immensely increased; the post expressage has largely increased; travel has largely increased; the process of assimilation between these countries is going on. Some of these days we shall have Cuba by a perfectly natural process, and without war, as everybody knows. We would not permit the Government of Spain to interfere with that even at the expense of war. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] says "excepting the English Government." That statement is somewhat involved. I leave him to elucidate that.

Attention is often called to the fact that we are in many cases competing with governments that do exactly what is here proposed. There is not a continental power that does not subsidize its steam-ships. Great Britain and Germany are to-day colonizing Africa. The very first step in that colonization, which, of course, is only another means of extending their trade, was to establish subsidized lines of steam-ships between German ports and British ports and African ports. They are doing the same thing wherever their steam-ships go. In other words, they do whatever may be necessary to make it perfectly sure that between the German Empire and between Liverpool and the points to be reached there may be the swiftest and best possible means of communication.

But, Mr. President, we shall take possession in the same way commercially of all these countries if we will only apply to our service between this country and theirs the same rule we have applied at home.

We propose to vest the Postmaster-General with that discretion. He may not exercise it at all; he may decline to do it, and if he declines to do it the money can not be spent. He is in no danger of being overreached; he is under no compulsion to do anything he does not think the necessities of the service require; but we believe, certainly I believe, that if he has this money he will see so many ways of improving the service and shortening communication by making it more frequent and better that he will spend a considerable portion of it, and that the postal service of the United States and the commerce of the United States will thereby be largely enhanced.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I was appointed a member of this committee of conference, although it was well known that I was unalterably opposed to the view taken by the Senate in regard to this subsidy question; therefore I took no particular part in the discussion had in this conference in regard to it. I agreed with my colleagues in regard to all the other differences between the Houses touching the matter pertaining to the Post-Office bill proper, and the Senate having passed the subsidy provision I defererd to their action, of course, as a member of a conference. I will now state, however, that I have no idea that the House of Representatives will agree to it, and further, that I do not believe they ought to agree to it.

It is a subsidy pure and simple, not wanted by the Post-Office Department, not needed by it, not forming a part of its system of carrying the foreign mails at all. As the Postmaster-General very well says, it might as well be given by Congress, without his intervention, to a few men as a bonus or a donation, and leave him unembarrassed by the difficulties that it is now attempted to throw around his administration by placing it in his hands under the pretense that the good of the service will be promoted by its expenditure. All that the Senator from Kansas says about our star routes and steam-boat mail routes is true.

We send our mails to all our people by the best means attainable, whether they pay expenses or not. They go regardless of profit or loss to the remotest parts of the country. Every civilized country in the world does the same thing. We ought to do it; we are under obligation to our own people to do it; we throw restrictions around all the ships in the coastwise trade carrying our mails that are not pretended to be thrown around vessels engaged in the foreign service, and we require them, as we do railroads and stage-coaches, to comply with all postal regulations.

The ship that carries the mail along our coast has to sail and deliver mails at stated periods whether she has any other freight or not; she has to make her trips in a specified time or suffer the penalty, unless there is a reasonable excuse for the delay. That is part of our internal system, and Cuba being within 100 miles of our coast is embraced in it; that is beneficial, as the Senator from Kansas says; but that interior system which the United States and Great Britain, Germany and France, and all other countries that are dealing with their own people, carry on is a very different thing from what is proposed here in sending mails to foreign countries in subsidized lines.

Mr. President, I do not know that I can present the objection to this subsidy scheme in any better way than by reading what the Postmaster-General says in regard to it in his letter to Mr. BLOUNT, of the House. He exhausts the argument. The Senator from Kansas has not attempted to answer it, although he called attention to the letter and has no doubt read it carefully. I insist, with all due respect to him, that neither he nor any other gentleman in this Chamber can answer it.

The Senator is mistaken in saying that the Postmaster-General may do as he pleases with it. He is directed to use the $800,000, and is required to give it to the subsidized steam-ship lines. Two or three years ago, when only the word "authorized" was used in a somewhat similar attempt to subsidize pet lines, and the former Postmaster-General, Mr. Vilas, did not see fit to exercise that discretion, he was denounced on this floor for the position he took and the responsibility he assumed by all advocates of the subsidy. Some of the steam-ships refused to carry our mails altogether for a time, and for days on this floor the action of the then Postmaster-General was denounced in unmeasured terms. The next effort was to add the words "and directed" to the word "authorized," in order to compel him to carry out the designs of the subsidy-seekers. The same language is used in this amendment, which says:

> To provide more efficient mail service between the United States and Central and South America and the West Indies, $800,000. To promote the purposes of this appropriation the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to contract with American built and registered steam-ships for the transportation of the United States mails to such ports in said countries as in his judgment will best subserve said postal service. Said contracts shall be for a period of not less than five years nor more than ten years, at a compensation not exceeding for each outward trip $1 per nautical mile of the distance in the most direct and feasible sailing course between the terminal points as shall be found expedient and desirable to secure the ends above set forth.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the Senator not see that on the question of compensation the words "not to exceed" qualify the whole paragraph?

Mr. BECK. Not to exceed a dollar a mile?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes.

Mr. BECK. I admit that; but he is directed to give it to them at that rate and must make contracts for $800,000 for at least five years if they propose to sail miles enough, as they will whether they carry more than one letter a trip or not.

Mr. PLUMB. Not to exceed that rate; he may give it at a rate less than is paid now if he can get it.

Mr. BECK. Even when Mr. Vilas was only authorized to do it, he was denounced, as I can show by the RECORD, because he did not give it all to them, and gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber day after day could hardly find epithets vile enough to apply to the Postmaster-General because he did not give the dollar a mile that they said he was authorized to give, and it was claimed they were entitled to have it all paid to them whether they performed any real service or not. If they carried one letter, they were to have the dollar a mile for each mile sailed. But I will not go back over that controversy. I repeat that the Postmaster-General settles it in his letter, so that I need not argue the question. No man can answer him, or successfully controvert the truth of his statements. I hope Senators will listen while I read what he says. He recites the subsidy provision which the Senator from Kansas read. The Postmaster-General says:

SUBSIDY.

The remaining provision of the bill is as follows:

7. "To provide more efficient mail service between the United States and Central and South America and the West Indies, $800,000. To promote the purposes of this appropriation the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to contract with American built and registered steam-ships for the transportation of the United States mails to such ports in said countries as in his judgment will best subserve said postal service. Said contracts shall be for a period of not less than five nor more than ten years, at a compensation not exceeding, for each outward trip, $1 per nautical mile of the distance in the most direct and feasible sailing course to secure the ends above set forth.

"The Postmaster-General shall cause schedules to be furnished by the contractors, stating dates of departure of steam-ships from the United States six months in advance, and in case of unreasonable failure of any steam-ships to depart with mails on the date or dates therein stated the Postmaster-General may withhold from the contractor or contractors as penalty one-half the contract price for said trip or trips, and in the event of continued failure to depart on dates stated in the schedule the Postmaster-General may annul the contract or contracts, or the same may be terminated by Congress."

It will hardly be claimed for this legislation that it is either demanded or required, or that it can be utilized for the benefit of the postal service merely. The resources and powers of the Department have proved entirely adequate to afford to the citizens of the United States a foreign mail service equal to, and in most cases superior to, that of any nation in the world. Nine-tenths of our foreign letter mail crosses the Atlantic, and the settled policy of the Department has been to employ the swiftest vessels from week to week for carrying the mails. The Department, at the request of prominent merchants, importers, and bankers of the United States having commercial relations with foreign countries, has endeavored to induce foreign postal administrations to adopt a similar policy to promote expedition and security in correspondence.

Under the present system, on routes other than to European ports, mails have been carried in American steam-ships at four times the rates paid for transatlantic service, although no foreign vessel has ever refused or hesitated to accept the sea postage, or one-fourth the rate paid to American bottoms. Under the present conditions the Central and South American letter mail increases at the rate of about 10 per cent. in weight a year, and the number of sailings to West Indian and Central and South American ports from the three ports of New York, New Orleans, and San Francisco increased in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, from 712 to 831. In addition to the compensation paid in money, all common carriers by water are greatly benefited by carrying the mail. Provision for their benefit in Brazilian ports are as follows: Mail steamers are allowed to immediately discharge their cargoes, preference being given them before any other vessel and before they have been entered at the custom-house, both on week days and on Sundays or holidays.

They may sail at any hour, day or night, after they have received the mail, and can not be detained under any pretext whatever beyond the hour fixed for sailing. Similar benefits are provided for mail steamers at other West Indian and Central and South American ports. While the Department in every case has given the preference to American ships at four times the cost of carriage on competing foreign ships as permitted by law, yet in very many cases because of very much greater expedition or because of the absence of proper facilities in American steamers, or because of very great delays, the other ships offering have been given the business at the lower rate on the principle that the first duty of the Department to our citizens under the law was to give them the best, most expeditious, and certain mail facilities within its resources.

If there shall be superadded to the functions of postal administration that of administering a subsidy or a bounty for the promotion of American shipping interests I can readily see why, in practice, these two offices must so conflict that, so far from being of advantage to and promoter of efficient mail service, such a subsidy, with such a purpose, in the hands of the Postmaster-General must antagonize and overbear the primary object of his office, which is to give to the correspondence of our citizens the best expedition and certain transmission. If the bounty or bonus system is to be revived, it should be done without involving this Department in the complications certain to arise from administering it, and without hampering its fundamental rule of action, which is that the mails must go at all events.

While we granted aid to Pacific railroads, with conditions imposed that the mails should be carried for a credit on the debt, yet the Department was left free to employ better or more expeditious routes in its discretion. The proposed legislation will be in effect a mandate to the Postmaster-General to contract with American-built as well as American-registered steam-ships for the transportation of the mails to the ports of Central and South America and the West Indies for a period of not less than five years and with a compensation for each outward trip of $1 per mile.

He at least assumes that he has no discretion in regard to the compensation, which he says is $1 a mile for each outward trip. Continuing, he says:

There is no condition for advertisement, and, indeed, unlike even the British subsidy acts, competition is not contemplated or permitted, as the contracts are to be limited to American ships, and as to these will be practically limited to those now in existence, between whom there is comparatively no competition because of the number which can be employed in the service.

In the present conditions the proposed lawmight as well have named the few persons to whom this money is to be paid. Even the laws (Revised Statutes, sections 3976 and 4203) under which American ships might be compelled to carry the mails have been repealed (23 United States Statutes at Large, 58), and it goes without saying that the proposed legislation intends the Department to pay the maximum rate provided, i. e., $1 per nautical mile for five years, to these few persons, without troubling them with any negotiations as to terms, and, indeed, as you will observe, without even the lodgment of discretion in the Department to designate from what ports of the United States the mails shall sail. It may be said in passing that presumably the "terminal points" from which sailings will be made, if self-interest, as is usually the case, governs, will be those from which the greatest number of nautical miles may be computed, rather than from those at which the convenience and needs of the service would be suited. It may be noted also that the schedules of sailings are to be furnished by the contractors, and not by the Postmaster-General; altogether, from an analysis of the proposed legislation it would seem to exclude the exercise of any power of any representative of this Government to provide for this mail service in the interest of the people, except after contract, which must be on the carrier's own terms and after the carriers have fixed the schedules according to their ideas of what the mail service should be, to compel them to conform to their own expressed views and decision as to the public convenience and the public interests.

I beg you to believe that in this criticism of the bill I am not commenting unfavorably at this place upon a policy of granting bounties to American ships. I do think, however, that the carrying out of that policy should not be involved in the postal administration. Such gifts should be voted and given directly, if the Government shall determine to pursue a policy of engaging in this branch of private business. With very great respect, however, to the framers of the bill, I do seriously object to that provision of the proposed legislation which places the mail service at the mercy of any firm, individual, or corporation. While, indeed, the subsidized lines might be compelled to carry the mails if tendered, yet the Department should be independent, and should at all times be enabled to send the mails by the most expeditious routes and make use of the best facilities afforded for that purpose from among all carriers offering. The Department should be free to take advantage of all sailings, of increased facilities coming from increased business, of changes for the better wrought by time, extension of commerce, and competition, and should not be tied up for a decade to single lines of communication, unstimulated to improvement and all progress by the existence of a settled, inordinate, and certain income.

Herewith I furnish you two tables marked "A" and "B." From them you will see that the mails of this country were carried to Central and South America and the West Indies for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, by foreign steamers at a cost of $7,936.27 at the single rate, and by steamers of American register at a cost of $39,381.57. The number of miles sailed by the foreign ships employed was 666,448; the miles sailed by the ships of American register employed were 546,758. It will be seen, on the plan of payment proposed, which is fixed without regard to the amount of mail carried, that the service, which cost us in the fiscal year 1887 $47,317.84, would have cost us, if paid for as proposed, $1,213,206. It is estimated that the weight of mails will be for the next fiscal year increased 20 per cent. over these figures, and from what I have before shown it will be seen that the number of sailings will be increased in about the same ratio over the figures given in Tables A and B. The total cost of the sailings under this bill, predicated upon the business of 1887, can be but an approximate standard by which to estimate the cost under a provision of $1 for every nautical mile for each outward trip.

But without regard to the cost, it is perfectly evident, from an examination of these tables and from the experience of the Department in affording the best attainable service, that "American-built ships" alone, with whom the Department can now contract under this bill, and with which it must contract for a term of years, can not perform the service absolutely essential. Heretofore, as I have said, whenever it has been possible and consistent with the best interests of the public which this Department serves, American ships have been employed to carry the mails at four times the rate paid to foreign ships; yet with this policy steadily maintained, to give proper service at all it has been necessary to employ other carriers, as shown by Schedule A. One of the most serious disadvantages from connecting the proposed subsidy with this Department will be that, even in cases where service is not furnished to certain ports by American ships at all, carriers that might be had will hardly suffer the enormous discrimination in compensation for the carriage of the mails. The conditions would certainly predispose human nature to refuse to perform the service at all.

Again, it will not commend itself to our people if, with this enormous compensation, avowedly for the carriage of the mails, frequency of transmission shall be largely curtailed, even to ports touched by American ships, as must be the case where we pay one carrier about two hundred and fifty times as much as we offer for the same service to another. In my opinion the bill would not be advantageous to the service, but the disadvantages would be positive in so far as this Department is concerned; while if it shall become a law, the Department will of course faithfully administer the fund in accordance with the spirit of the act. I feel confident that such administration will result only in a very great pecuniary benefit to a dozen individuals, at the expense and embarrassment of good service, and of inconvenience, injustice, and material injury to the great body of the people, whose money will be used in the purchase of those results.

Considering this as a subsidy pure and simple, unconnected with the postal service, it becomes a question of general policy with which this Department has nothing to do. The subject has been ably and exhaustively discussed in Congress, notably in the Thirty-fifth, Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Forty-ninth. You, sir, and other distinguished members—of the Post-Office Committee as at present constituted, have on the floor of the House presented the learning which the history of the subject, political economy, or the experience of legislation can teach. It has been frequently demonstrated by the experience of this and other countries that to enable one line by Government aid to carry more cheaply and thus to destroy competition, does not promote commerce.* The most successful ocean steam-ship lines of the Continent—those of Hamburg and Bremen—receive no pay from the government other than the moderate postage rates.† The British precedent is not in point and would not be even if Great Britain did not offer her mail service to the carriers of the world. "Her aims are political and not commercial. She must have constant communication with the colonies, and she has spent large sums for this object. She must have an efficient and capable transport service for the protection of those colonies." ‡ The views of that government are stated in Mr. Scudemore's report (Parl. Papers 1867-'8, XII, 113) as follows:

This is addressed to Mr. BLOUNT, of Georgia—

"The question (mail subsidy service) can not be dealt with on commercial principles. * * * For the sake of keeping up such communication with the East as the nation requires they must set commercial principles at defiance, and cost what it may the nation must either pay them what they lose thereby or forego the communication."

Of course England may subsidize lines of ships to open up new markets for her surplus, because she freely exchanges commodities with such markets; and her policy is after establishing the commerce to steadily decrease the subsidy. If the policy of giving bounties to promote commercial relations with other countries be ever adopted again after the failures in our history, it would seem that its adoption should be deferred until closer commercial relations with those countries can be maintained, and are not antagonized by an opposing system of laws.

I hope that language will be considered carefully by gentlemen on the other side when they are quoting what other nations do in order to build up commerce. They met in Chicago lately, and in their platform declared that they are going to keep the American markets for themselves; they propose to build a Chinese wall around the United States to prevent our people from buying anything produced abroad which can be produced at home at any price, in order to protect home industries.

They propose to take no step in the direction that other nations are moving in order to build up closer commercial relations with other countries, but they propose to antagonize trade with other people by an opposing system of exclusion and restriction which destroys the very idea of commerce with other countries. I will not, however, go into these questions now.

*Mercantile marines of foreign countries, Forty-ninth Congress Ex. Doc. No. 172.

†Forty-fifth Congress, second session, Ex. Doc. No. 38. Forty-sixth Congress, third session, House committee report No. 342.

‡Hadley.

The Postmaster-General continues:

Commerce in the very essence of its meaning is exchange. It is not to sell and never to buy.

Never to buy seems to be Republican policy in dealing with foreign nations, according to the Chicago platform, if somebody here has the same things to sell, even if he asks double price for them. He adds:

The individual or nation does not exist that will buy all one has to sell for cash with no reciprocal return in profitable exchange. Cargoes out and cargoes back are needed for the creation of a merchant marine. The cargo out will not be bought unless we buy in exchange, and it will be bought if we are willing to trade. Until these conditions come, subsidies may maintain a line so long as the subsidy lasts and then the line will go down for want of legitimate trade. If, however, the subsidy policy is to be pursued, I venture to suggest the Mexican method. When a ship arrives with a cargo the tariff tax is divided with the ship-owner, the latter taking 50 per cent. of the duty on the goods he brings in payment on account of his subsidy. The trading-ship is thus enabled to remit to the consignor, if he will employ his ship, a portion of the government duties, and thus the ship-owner is indeed enabled to promote trade with foreign countries directly. An improvement upon the Mexican method in the interest of the promotion of trade and of the building of ships to conduct it, would be to enable the owners and the builders to receive at the port of consignment in that country still a greater proportion of the duties imposed by the government upon the cargo.

In this way the Mexican ship would be enabled to get her cargo, charge a fair profit for carriage, and sell to the Mexican consumer at a price at which he could conveniently buy, take out a cargo for exchange, and repeat the process, to the cultivation of much closer commercial relations with foreign countries, and to the maintenance of Mexican shipping. Of course, the Mexican method is somewhat cumbersome, and the same end might be reached without indirection and without the payment of a subsidy by the removal or reduction of the Mexican tariff on imports.

While on the subject of closer commercial relations with South and Central America, for the promotion of which the bill under consideration is doubtless intended, I call your attention to some interesting figures. Our total trade with Brazil for the year ended June 30, 1887, was as follows:

Total imports	$52,955,591
Our total exports to Brazil were	8,137,794
Of the imports we imposed no tariff upon	47,076,473
We did impose a tariff upon	5,876,703

Our total trade with Central America for the same period was as follows:

Total imports	$7,706,978
Total exports	3,006,714
Of the imports we imposed no tariff upon	7,195,705
We did impose a tariff upon	441,916

Our total trade with Venezuela was as follows:

Total imports	$8,444,967
Total exports	5,504,215
Of the imports we imposed no tariff upon	8,248,450
We did impose a tariff upon	12,786

Our total trade with the United States of Colombia was as follows:

Total imports	$4,771,303
Total exports	7,158,235
Of the imports we impose no tariff upon	3,934,559
We did impose a tariff upon	16,594

Our total trade with the Argentine Republic was as follows:

Total imports	$4,104,102
Total exports	6,364,545
Of the imports we imposed no tariff upon	3,347,936
We imposed a tariff upon	752,256

Our total trade with Chili was as follows:

Total imports	$2,863,233
Total exports	2,069,138
Of the imports we imposed no tariff upon	2,634,396
We did impose a tariff upon	228,897

These illustrate the universal rule by which the limitations upon commercial relations and the carrying trade with all the countries of Central and South America may be measured. A comparison of the amount brought into the country free of tariff with what we send in exchange is instructive. It should be noted that of the Brazilian imports free of duty, the large proportion value is the item of coffee, after deducting which the lesson on exchange of trade as bearing on closer relations with all these countries is the same, and the universal one.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

DON M. DICKINSON,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. JAMES H. BLOUNT,
Chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, House of Representatives.

I agree with the Postmaster-General that we must take what the people we seek to trade with have got to sell if we expect them to buy from us. That is what all the leading commercial countries of the world are doing to secure trade and cargoes for their ships both ways. Does any man suppose that the world will buy from us unless we buy something from them? Is it good policy to close our markets against the world? If so, is it not good policy for them to close their markets against us? Can we sell to everybody and buy from nobody? I think not. That, however, involves, as I said, other questions which we can discuss by and by.

All I have to add now is that the Postmaster-General demonstrates that from the time we began with the Garrison subsidy, followed by the Roach subsidy, and the subsidy to the Pacific Mail, that brought so much scandal, we have built up no trade of any consequence, except in goods admitted free of duty. We can build up none by subsidies. This subsidy will not build up trade, but it will seriously embarrass existing postal regulations by giving a subsidy to a few men at the public expense, to the detriment of the public service and to the injury of every tax-payer in the country.

Mr. CHACE. Mr. President, I have forgotten the figures, and I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas how much the amount was that our Government has been paying for the foreign mail service?

Mr. PLUMB. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, the last returns, the Department puts the total amount at $39,375.31.

Mr. CHACE. And what is the Department willing to expend? Do I understand that to be $100,000?

Mr. PLUMB. The bill prepared in the Department and introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. BLOUNT, of Georgia, the chairman of the Post-Office Committee, provides for giving the Department authority to increase the expenditure to three times that amount.

Mr. CHACE. That would be a little over $100,000.

Mr. PLUMB. About $115,000.

Mr. CHACE. I want to read here, so that the figures may go into the RECORD, in order that all men may see by an absolute comparison what this Government pays and what foreign governments pay for the same service; and after that I shall have a very few remarks to make in regard to the letter of the Postmaster-General.

While we pay $39,000 for this service, France pays $5,152,388.88; Great Britain pays $3,206,766.67; Brazil pays $2,223,958.10; and little Japan $241,250——

Mr. PLUMB. With the Senator's permission, I wish to make a correction. On looking a little more carefully at the provision of the bill to which I referred I find it practically provides for the payment of four times as much, because upon a fair construction of the language—and I understand that to be the Departmental construction—they may not only allow the sea and inland postage, but they may allow three times that much for expedition, which makes about four times, or say $150,000.

Mr. CHACE. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars. That is a trifle more than the little bit of a government of Belgium pays. Belgium pays $134,793.32, and there are any quantity of States in this country with a larger population than Belgium, which has a population, if I recollect aright, of about 2,000,000.

I was about saying that Japan pays $241,250, and the Netherlands pay $101,975.60 for this service.

I felicitate the Postmaster-General upon having embraced this opportunity to make a tariff speech to the Congress of the United States, and I was somewhat interested to see that my friend the honorable Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] realizes constantly his own impulses so fully that he can never make an address upon any subject in the Senate of the United States without making a tariff speech.

Mr. BECK. Does the Senator think I made one to-day?

Mr. CHACE. The Senator made the Postmaster-General's speech for him, and it was a very good one, too.

Mr. BECK. I thought it was.

Mr. CHACE. We were very happy to have a little variation. It was not the old speech of the Senator.

Mr. BECK. I think the Senator and his associates who are so much protected personally by a high protective tariff do not relish it.

Mr. CHACE. Now, Mr. President, there are one or two very weak spots in this tariff speech of the Postmaster-General. The Senator emphasized, repeated, and varied in all sorts of ways the doctrine set forth by the Postmaster-General. This idea that you can not trade with foreign nations unless you buy of them is a favorite theory of free-traders. The Senator himself said—I quote his language—"you can not sell unless you buy; the Central American and South American people will not buy our goods unless we buy their goods." Then he quotes the following figures: He says we import from Brazil $52,000,000 in value a year and we only sell her $8,000,000. It seems to me that the boot is on the other leg. We are buying some six or seven times as much of Brazil as we are selling to her. So of Central America. We buy of Central America $7,000,000 and we only sell them $3,000,000. The argument of the Senator fails there, because we are buying more than twice as much of Central America as we are selling them. We are buying of Venezuela $8,000,000 per annum and we are only selling them $5,000,000. We are buying of Chili $2,800,000——

Mr. BECK. The Senator will please observe——

Mr. CHACE. I am quoting the Senator's figures as he read them.

Mr. BECK. And all we buy are things that we allow to come in free, with a very few small exceptions.

Mr. CHACE. Yes, but the Senator announced the doctrine that these people will not buy of us unless we buy of them.

Mr. BECK. Certainly, and we do buy from them such things as we allow to come in free of duty.

Mr. CHACE. Yes, and we buy from them five to eight times as much as they buy of us.

Mr. BECK. Free goods.

Mr. CHACE. The argument is utterly futile and unavailing.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] very well suggests to me that we bought the same kind of goods of them when we were levying a duty on them. We bought coffee, we bought the hides from Venezuela when we were levying a duty upon them. But it makes no difference; people buy what they want and sell what they have to sell. That rule applies universally and everywhere, and the argument the Senator makes is against him instead of for him. We buy $29,000,000 of the people of some dozen different governments in South America, twice and a half as much of merchandise as we sell to them every year; and yet the Senator rises in his place and says, "You have got a villainous system; you can not expect people to buy of you unless you buy of them," and all the time we are buying of them from two to ten times as much as they buy from us.

But, Mr. President, what is the reason we do not sell to these people? One of the most important reasons, one of the most serious impediments to our trade with Central and South America grows out of the fact that we have not ample and ready mail communication with those countries. Merchants in this country exporting goods to South America are constantly sending their invoices by way of Great Britain.

The Postmaster-General talks about sending the mail by foreign steamers. We had a fine illustration of that only two years ago, when the predecessor of the present Postmaster-General made a contract for carrying the mails with one of the English lines of steamers. That steamer took the mail as far as Para, South America, at a price which would hardly pay for carrying the mail from the dock to the post-office in the South American port. He took the mail to Para, and when the captain found he could make a better charter from there to London, he dropped the mails on the wharf and left them there. A steamer of the Brazilian and South American Mail Steamship Company coming along and seeing the mails there took them up and carried them through, and when she got to the South American port where they were to be delivered, because of their delay, because of their being delivered behind time, she had to pay a fine for the delay in the delivery of them.

Mr. President, this is in line with the whole policy of the Democratic party—the party of repression of industry of every kind. It is in contravention of what is an established rule of every civilized nation except our own, that we should encourage and build up our own industry.

The Postmaster-General makes a very disingenuous argument. He says this money might as well be paid to a few persons named in the bill. Now, every man knows that the provision is simply that these contracts shall be let after advertisement, and not only so, but he may contract with one, two, three, or one dozen parties. But how is it with our inland transportation? Why will not the same argument prevail in relation to that? You make provision for the carriage of your mails by railroad. The Postmaster-General might object to the carrying out of that law for the same reason, because every man knows that the mail between New York and Buffalo is carried over a certain railroad this year and will be the next year. The argument would apply with equal force to that appropriation as to this. That is not the purpose. The Democratic party is the party of reaction, of retrogression. They are opposed to all enterprise, to the building up of the industries of this country. They have inherited from the Southern Confederacy, the old slaveholding Confederacy, the idea that there shall be nothing done by the Government to benefit the business of this country.

One more remark, and then I shall stop. We read in the newspapers a few days ago some speeches made by some very eminent lights of the Democratic party at a meeting in Tammany Hall. Every one of them made haste, and they almost tumbled over each other, to declare and attempt to prove that the Democratic party was not a free-trade party. Now, I suggest to them that they had better send to Tammany Hall this letter of the Postmaster-General. What does he say? He says that it is your fiscal system, your system of laws that is in the way of the increase of trade with South America. What does he mean? He means your system of collecting duties upon imports. He means that free trade is the shibboleth of the Democratic party. There is the real doctrine of the Democratic party. He wrote that letter before he had heard from Oregon. I wish to call the attention of the country to the fact that occasionally we get a fair and candid announcement of what the real opinion of the Democratic party is in regard to this matter.

Mr. PLUMB. I am willing now to yield to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. REAGAN. Before the Senator does that I should like to make a remark. I do not want to occupy time.

Mr. PLUMB. This will come up to-morrow, and we shall have plenty of time to discuss it then.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not want to occupy ten minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], by the usages of the Senate, is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say to the Senator from Mississippi that if I had understood fully the situation exactly as it is, I should not have trespassed upon his good nature by asking him to yield. I did not understand that this matter would take so much time. I now yield that he may go on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of the fisheries treaties in open executive session.

Mr. GEORGE. Several Senators here have expressed a wish that another bill shall be taken up and considered, and it is immaterial to me whether I go on to-morrow or to-day. At their request and their suggestion, I withdraw the motion I have made, and I give notice that to-morrow, at the close of the morning business, not the morning hour, I will renew the motion and submit some remarks about the fisheries treaty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had directed him to return to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 1427) granting an increase of pension to Elnathan Meade.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 1430) to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. STONE of Missouri, and Mr. PAYSON, managers at the conference on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 671) to provide for the sale of the site at Fort Omaha, Nebr., the sale or removal of the improvements thereof, and for a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon;

A bill (S. 1540) granting a pension to Hannah Babb Hutchins; and

A bill (H. R. 10628) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Clay County and Jackson County, Missouri, at a point to be selected consistent with the interests of river navigation between Kansas City, Mo., and a point within 5 miles below said city.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH INDIAN TERRITORY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2644) granting the right of way to the Fort Smith, Paris and Dardanelle Railway Company to construct and operate a railroad, telegraph, and telephone line from Fort Smith, Ark., through the Indian Territory, to or near Baxter Springs, in the State of Kansas; which was, on page 7, line 19, after the word "built," to insert:

And it shall not be necessary in such case for forfeiture to be declared by judicial process or legislative enactment.

Mr. BERRY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH PUYALLUP INDIAN RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2807) granting to the Puyallup Valley Railway Company the right of way through the Puyallup Indian reservation, in Washington Territory, and for other purposes; which was, on page 5, line 22, after the word "act," to insert:

And it shall not be necessary in such case for a forfeiture to be declared by judicial process or legislative enactment.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. Before the question is put I desire to say a word.

The Senate has taken notice, I presume, this morning of the number of bills that have come into the Senate from another quarter, authorizing the construction of railroads through Indian reservations. I desire, if it may be proper, to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that almost the entire legislation of this session in reference to Indian affairs will be summed up in the authorization of railroads to be constructed over Indian reservations. Whatever is necessary for the administration of Indian affairs, or at least the most pressing measures, some which have passed this body, some which have been long ago sent elsewhere, have for some reason or other, elsewhere than in this body, been laid aside for legislation authorizing the construction of railroads through Indian reservations. The Senate has been remarkably liberal itself in authorizing these roads, not more so, however, than the public good demands; but the complaint which I make in the name of the administration of Indian affairs is that most important measures of legislation are laid aside elsewhere for the sole purpose of authorizing the construction of railroads through these reservations.

While the Department itself, in the necessities of administration, is pressing upon the committee of this body, and is pressing elsewhere, for absolutely necessary legislation, in other bodies by unanimous consent the time is set apart for the Indian Committee to make reports exclusively of bills authorizing railroads to be constructed through these reservations, while such pressing measures as pertain to the healthy and wise administration of the Indian Department can not find opportunity to be presented for action. That I felt it my duty to call the attention of the Senate and the country to, so that the lack in Indian administration this year will find its explanation in the remarks I have made this morning.

I move concurrence in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

ELNATHAN MEADE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Ordered, That the Clerk be directed to return to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 1427) granting an increase of pension to Elnathan Meade.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the vote on the passage of that bill be reconsidered, and that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the vote by which this bill was passed may be reconsidered, and that the bill be indefinitely postponed. It is so ordered, if there be no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the thirtieth amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10233) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, and agreed to the same.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8989) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the motion submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] that the Senate further insist on its seventh amendment to the bill (H. R. 9345) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives thereon, on which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PLUMB. I yield to the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas yielded to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], who withdrew his motion for an executive session. The question now recurs upon the motion of the Senator from Kansas that the Senate further insist upon its amendment, on which the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] asked the question why it was that we could not sell as much as we bought in South American and Central American countries, and answered it by stating that the main reason for that was that we did not subsidize steam-ship lines. He did not use the word "subsidy," but I use that word as conveying the idea which I understood he intended to express. I did not expect to discuss this question, and I do not propose to enter into the discussion of it to any extent, but I felt unwilling that that statement should go without a further remark.

The real reason why we do not sell as much as we buy is a very different one, in my judgment, from that suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island. It is because by our revenue legislation we have so increased the cost of materials, the cost of rents, the cost of living, the cost of clothing, the cost of every element that enters into manufactured fabrics, that we make them cost so much that we can not sell them in competition with those of other countries which make them at less cost, and there is no subsidy within the bounds of reason to ships that will enable us to reduce our prices so as to sell our commodities in markets when they cost so much more here than the like commodities cost in other countries.

Mr. DAWES. What are those articles?

Mr. REAGAN. All the articles which constitute elements of the cost of manufactured fabrics, labor, living, rents, clothes, food, and everything else. I mean in general terms to say that by our revenue system we have put the whole policy of the country in this respect upon stilts. We have got it up so that we can not compete with other countries, and gentlemen do not seem to think of liberalizing our policy as a means of extending our trade, but, like the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE], and like my friend who has just risen [Mr. DAWES], they think the only way to extend our trade is by still further subsidies.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will specify the particular article, we could determine by the figures whether we had increased the price of it by duties.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not propose to take up the subjects now in detail, and the Senator can get the benefit of what I say and controvert it at his leisure. What I meant to say and did say was that by our revenue policy we make our general merchandise manufactured in this country so high that we can not compete in the markets of the world with like commodities made in other countries, and no amount of subsidy that is within the range of reason can enable us to compete in those markets. Subsidy will not bring down the price of our commodities. If it does, then the manufacturers of those commodities must lose, and the gentleman had better understand that.

The Senator talks about the Democratic party being the party of reaction. I understand it to be the party of liberal views. I understand that the policy which would restrict the trade of the country, which would build up a Chinese wall, so to speak, around this country, which would prevent the commerce of the country being carried on with other nations, is the great difficulty under which we labor. That is Republican policy, not Democratic policy.

Why, sir, we have gone on giving subsidies to manufacturers until we have induced investments in machinery and manufacturing establishments to such an extent that it is impossible that these establishments can run on constant time during the year. What is the result? One of the results is that the capital invested in these manufacturing establishments lies idle and unproductive during the period that it can not be employed.

A more fatal and more evil result is the fact that for large portions of each year these manufacturing establishments have to suspend operations and turn thousands and tens of thousands of laboring people out of employment, and to starvation and to strikes, and to the business of being tramps. That comes from a system of subsidies, an unnatural system for securing an unnatural investment of capital beyond the needs of the country, coupled with the fact that, while we are doing that, the same policy increases the cost of our manufactured articles, so that we are limited substantially to the sale of them in our own country and can not take them to foreign countries; and yet the Senator from Rhode Island talks about the Democratic party being a reactionary party because it refuses to go further in the line of subsidies, because it refuses to fetter the commerce of this country, and it seeks to liberalize that commerce, it seeks to let capital take its natural course, to let it be invested where it can find constant and useful employment, not by an artificial stimulus to induce investments that will employ a large number of people a short time and then turn them out to starve for the balance of the time when commodities can not be sold.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. REAGAN. In a moment. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] calls my attention to a paragraph, which I will read, from the Philadelphia Ledger, which says:

The Manufacturers' Association some time ago resolved to shut down for a month in order to prevent the glut of the market. For the past two or three years this has been the annual custom.

Mr. GRAY. "The annual custom!"

Mr. REAGAN. It is the habitual custom. We all know it and have known it from year to year. The difficulty has been that we have gone too far with subsidies, either for the benefit of capital or for the benefit of labor, and we have gone so far in this direction as to increase the cost of our manufactured fabrics so as to limit their sale to our own country and prevent us from having the benefit of the world's markets.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator permit me to ask a question before he sits down?

Mr. PLATT. I have been trying to ask a question for some time. I want to ask the Senator from Texas this question, without any design at this time to enter into a discussion of the protective system: I ask why he supposes it is that in that country which does not adopt the protective system, but adopts the system which he thinks, I suppose, should be adopted for this country, it is found necessary to subsidize the vessels which carry the mails to South America to the extent of something over $3,000,000 a year?

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I do not feel prepared to answer to my own satisfaction the question which the Senator has presented, and certainly would not be able to answer it to the satisfaction of others now, but if I should offer an off-hand answer, it would be this, that the countries which subsidize steamers and try to outrival each other in subsidies, are monopoly-ridden countries that suffer in their general business for the promotion of particular interests, just as the policy of the Republican party would and does make the body of the people of this country suffer for the promotion of the interests of a few persons.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The question I wanted to ask the Senator was this: He calls attention to the fact that factories close down. That I presume is because of the want of demand for their goods.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate at this hour the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 62) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses.

Mr. MCPHERSON. In other words, in a protective country where foreigners can not sell their goods——

Mr. BLAIR. I rise to a point of order. The Chair having laid before the Senate the unfinished business, I suppose it should be informally laid aside or some action taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is now before the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. The chairman of the committee who reported that bill, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], is temporarily absent and desires it to lie aside without losing its place. I have no doubt he will agree to that being done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, it will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. McPHERSON. Am I now in order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has the floor, but yields to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will begin again. In a protective country which keeps out foreign manufactures, when overproduction takes place at home, as a matter of course the factories must close. Does not the Senator think if in addition to our own market we had the entire markets of South America as well for our products, it would give labor here steadier employment?

Mr. REAGAN. I do think that, and I think we ought to pursue a policy and could pursue a policy, if we acted wisely and properly, that would effect that very purpose; and that is by liberalizing our commerce, by reducing our protective system; but it can not be done, as I said awhile ago, by subsidizing ships, because no subsidy we can give to ships will reduce the cost of our commodities in foreign markets.

Mr. McPHERSON. All commerce is barter. We can not expect to continue commercial relations with a country unless we barter with that country. But take, if you please, one of the principal commodities of the Senator's own State, the cotton industry. There is no tariff upon raw cotton. There is no country in the world that produces raw cotton to the extent we do, and we export it to the extent of thousands and tens of thousands of bales. It goes abroad. Why can not the labor of this country, in addition to supplying its own market, its protected market, make cotton goods for South America, even if the laborers work at less than protected pay on that particular class of cotton goods that go to South America? If the manufacturers and laborers jointly should adopt such a policy, the factory need not close at all, and if it should it demonstrates the fact that even the policy of absolute free trade would not help us to secure foreign markets.

Mr. REAGAN. The statement I have made makes the best answer that I can give to the question the Senator propounded, that we have invested so much capital in manufactures that we are able to manufacture, if the factories were run on full time, twice as much as this country can consume. We have by increasing the cost of material, the cost of clothing, the cost of food, the cost of rent, and by increasing the cost of all the elements that enter into the creation of our fabrics, made them so high that we can not sell them in foreign markets, and therefore we can not avail ourselves of those markets so as to keep our capital and our labor employed; but if the Senator and others will consent to a reduction of the tariff to a reasonable standard, a revenue standard, not looking to that protection which seeks the exclusion of commerce from this country——

Mr. CHACE. Mr. President, I want to assert——

Mr. REAGAN. Let me proceed. If it will be allowed that we shall adopt a policy that will enable us to manufacture as other people manufacture and at the price at which other people manufacture, and that will not stimulate the investment of more capital than can be profitably and constantly employed, the evil will be remedied.

Right here I wish to suggest, in the line of the question of the Senator from New Jersey, that we have pursued this exclusive policy, this policy of striking down our commercial relations with other countries, of abdicating our trade as far as we could with other countries, until the great agricultural interest of this country, the food-producing interest, the meat-producing interest, the cotton-producing interest, is threatened by Germany, by France, and by Great Britain with a retaliatory policy. Remember that the great body of our exports are agricultural. I forget the proportion, but I think about four-fifths or more are agricultural, coming mostly from the Middle and Western and Southern States. This policy of a high protective tariff, excluding commerce, is being felt by those governments, and all who are familiar with what has been going on in them for the last two or three years know that they threaten a retaliatory policy, so that they will not buy to the extent they have our food supplies, our meats, our cotton, whatever we have of productions of that kind, and from year to year the suffering, the inconvenience, and the loss of the country in this respect will go on until the people by poverty, by distress, are at last driven to understand that the great body of the people of this country is being impoverished and pauperized in order to make millionaires of a few men engaged in manufacturing and other monopolistic pursuits.

Mr. McPHERSON. I entirely admit the argument the Senator makes that high duties are a hinderance to commerce. No country can compete as a manufacturing country with another one which admits all raw materials for use in its factories free. I admit that. I also admit that no line of steam-ships that we can run to-day, even by subsidy, to the South American states can compete with an English line of steam-ships that takes the product of those states to England when they are received into that country free of duty.

But we are reforming our revenue laws. A bill is now pending elsewhere which undertakes to place raw material upon the free-list. Therefore, if the bill becomes a law, our factories will occupy an entirely different position, and as to the question I raised with the Senator from Texas about the cotton industry, certainly his plea of high tariff does not apply to that. If we can grow cotton in this country cheaper than it can be raised anywhere else, and we do, can we not export the cotton product to South America and undersell other countries? The Senator answers in this way: that that can not be, simply because the cost of living and of labor is higher and rents are higher here. Am I mistaken in my statement? If I am not, then after our home market is supplied labor can only find employment in its willingness to meet the world's competition in foreign markets. And when we give up the South American markets we surrender the only spot of discoverable country on the globe which will in the future absorb our surplus products.

Mr. REAGAN. I only want to say that South America is not a cotton market; it is a cotton-producing country.

Mr. McPHERSON. The same applies to other cotton manufacturing countries, and a great deal of the exports of this country that go to South America are cotton goods. The English send cotton goods to South America as well. The South American states are not manufacturing states, and although they raise cotton do not manufacture largely. I used cotton as an illustration because the American product stands in respect of cost precisely with the English product, except the increased cost of labor; and our labor is far better than English labor. Why, then, do we not export cotton to South America?

Now, Mr. President, the question that I put to the Senator he has failed to answer, unless this be his answer, that because labor is higher here we can not send goods to South America. Which is better for labor to do, to become absolutely and entirely idle by closing up the factory when the home market is overstocked, or to labor for a time at less wages in order to enable us to export the goods to South America and compete with English goods? If cotton goods could be manufactured in the cotton region of this country and sent to South America at 1 per cent. profit, after paying a reasonable sum to labor, the manufacturing industry would prosper.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to ask the Senator whether cotton raised in the Southern States could profitably be manufactured in this country and sent abroad, sent to Brazil and other South American states. I ask him this question: If, with a tariff on cotton goods of about 30 or 35 per cent., with the duty added to the price of cotton goods imported into this country, if you had every farthing of cotton manufactured in the United States under your protective system, so as to exclude all other cotton without paying 35 per cent. duty, does he believe the manufacturers of this country would consent to send their cottons free of duty to the South American republics, when they were charging the American consumer 35 per cent. by means of the tariff duty?

Mr. McPHERSON. Most assuredly, and I want to say that 50 per cent. of all the manufactured products brought into this country from England, Germany, France, Belgium, and the other manufacturing countries of Europe represent nothing more than the cost of production. They send their surplus goods to this country and sell them for money or what is to them the equivalent of money. The surplus of their factories is turned into money at once, at some price, and this is the only country which speculates on the future. Anything, at all times, will find a money purchaser here if the price is made low enough.

Let me illustrate. I met an iron-monger from Glasgow coming to this country to sell a quantity of iron. I asked him this question, "Why do you come to the United States to sell it?" He said, "I am obliged to sell it for money, sir; and when it reaches the port of New York I want to sell it for what it will bring. I intend to pay the duty on it and take what there is left." Thus it is with the surplus goods of every country in Europe. Their mills do not close up; they have a market all over the world, and they use their markets to the best possible advantage.

Now, Mr. President, one word more and I have done. I have never voted in the Senate for a subsidy for anything; for steam-ship lines, railroads, or anything in the world in the shape of a subsidy that I know of. I am opposed to subsidies in the abstract, but I want to say here and now as to this South American trade that with me it is an exceptional case. These great republics of South America are a part of our own continent, being like us and with us in interest, in sympathy, in everything that goes to make up a republican form of government, desiring to trade with us, doing everything in their power to encourage and increase the trade with us. Here are Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and many other of those states which have even granted subsidies to American steam-ship lines themselves to enable them to get commercial relations and postal relations with the United States of America. Here is the Roach Line that a few years ago was granted a subsidy of $100,000 a year by Brazil, but when it was found that the Government of the United States would not aid it at all the result was that the Brazilian Government withdrew its subsidy.

I do not call this a subsidy. It grants $1 per mile to a steam-ship line for carrying the United States mails to the Central and South American states. I think it is only a just and fair compensation to induce lines of steam-ships to be rapid in their movements and capable of doing the commerce both ways quickly.

I think it is the very best investment the Government of the United States can possibly make. Here are steam-ship lines owned to-day by the British Government, by the German Government, which admittedly have almost three-fourths of the trade of Central and South America, that are subsidized by those governments. There is not a single steam-ship line running down the coast of South America to-day that is not a subsidized line by a foreign government except our own steam-ships. Now, then, I notice in the very excellent letter which the Postmaster-General has sent us, that he, unwisely I think, stops exactly where I want to begin.

Mr. REAGAN. I did not yield to the Senator for a speech.

Mr. McPHERSON. I suppose the Senator will permit me to finish my statement. I notice that the Postmaster-General stops just exactly short of where he should have stopped. He makes the admission that he is giving the very best postal facilities possible to be given with the resources at his command. Now, what are the resources? Why, sir, he is dependent upon the subsidized steam-ship lines of foreign governments to carry the mails, and they are a part of his resources. Supposing those resources should be withdrawn, and the postal relations between the United States and Central and South America should then be one-half what they are now, the simple admission that for all that postal trade during the entire year the cost was only $39,000 is to me a sufficient admission that we are not giving good postal facilities, or that we are robbing the steam-ship companies that carry the mails.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey thinks I have not answered his question. I am not sure that I know what it is, and I will not repeat what I have stated on the subject, but leave the record as it is made for others to determine whether my position is sustained, or whether he has put a question to me that I have not answered. All the object I had in view in rising was to make the statement that the purpose of the subsidy—I call it a subsidy, the Senator does not, but I do not care what name you call it by—the purpose of the increased pay will not effect the end which it is said it is intended to effect, that of increasing the commerce of the country to any perceptible or valuable extent; and I say that, for the reason I have stated two or three times, our manufacturing establishments are surrounded by conditions which make it impossible for them to manufacture goods and put them into the markets of Central and of South America and of Mexico in competition with the goods of other countries, that make them cheaper and no amount of increase of mail pay, as you call it, no amount of subsidy to steam-ship lines, if you take it in that shape, can aid us in that difficulty. If we want to increase the ship-owning of the country, if we want to encourage ship-building, then the granting of money may aid in that, but it will not change the condition of commerce between this country and those countries. It can not do it, and it is easy to see that it is impossible by a mere increase of the number of ships and the trips of ships to lower the price of commodities manufactured in this country so as to enable them to compete with commodities manufactured in other countries. That is all I have to say about that.

Mr. McPHERSON. Would they not have some traffic beside the mail?

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator asks me if they would not have some traffic besides the mail. If we want traffic we must adopt the conditions which will give us traffic. We must enter upon a liberal policy of commerce with the rest of the world, and buy where we can buy cheapest and sell where we can sell dearest, a principle recognized by all the writers on political economy so far as I know, and it is the correct principle. We never can accomplish the end of increasing the commerce of this country with those countries by subsidies so long as we render it impossible for our manufacturers to put their commodities in those markets in competition with those of other countries.

Mr. HAWLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to say a single word, if the Senator from Connecticut will bear with me a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HAWLEY. I want to say a few words. I give way though.

Mr. McPHERSON. As I said to the Senator from Texas, the steam-ship would require some other traffic besides the mail, even if it had a subsidy. The steam-ship lines that are already running between the United States of America and the South American states have stations established along the Atlantic coast. One of the lines after making its headquarters at New York and taking on cargo, comes down to Norfolk, where it has an agency established. It receives freight at Norfolk and it goes to Central and South America, where it has its agencies established also for the sale of goods. In other words, when the steam-ship lines are established they of necessity are compelled to establish commercial agencies, and in that way they aid and encourage commerce between the two countries. That is the condition of things as it exists to-day, and it would exist to a much greater extent if the number of ships was only increased.

As I said before, I am unwilling to undertake to change the whole revenue and fiscal policy of our Government for the sake of getting the trade of Central and South America, but I claim it would not be necessary. A certain modification of our revenue laws, which would allow our factories to obtain control of the raw material at the lowest possible price, taken in conjunction with intelligent American labor to put that material into the different products, would enable us to take possession of every one of the South American markets. I am unwilling, for one, to allow any European government to get control and hold of the markets of that country through its agencies, its commerce, its subsidies, and everything of that kind, to the extent of driving out American industry and keeping it out.

I want a line of steam-ships from the Pacific coast, plying between the South American States and the Pacific coast. I want a line of steam-ships, or a dozen of them, on the American coast, plying along the coast of South America, and carrying the products of the North to that southern hemisphere. I demand that as a right, and I care not by what process it may be reached. If the Government of the United States have a surplus of $600,000 as a profit in carrying the foreign mail, I will gladly contribute that $600,000 toward the opening and the holding of those markets. It is true the Post-Office Department can secure postal facilities, such as they are, at less rates than this bill proposes, and we might continue this policy until we had no need of postal facilities with South America at all. Our rivals would have so intrenched themselves commercially that we should be compelled to admit that while the most progressive of all the nations we could not supply even the wants of our nearest neighbors. No foreign nation shall ever occupy any portion of these American States, either to influence their policy or enjoy a monopoly of their commerce, at least with my consent, until after the United States shall have exhausted every means at its command to prevent both these catastrophes.

Nowhere else on earth would I venture to go in the same manner, but as to South America I would have and I would hold that market against all comers at all cost. Whether it can be done by subsidies I know not, but I do know that capitalists desiring investment in steam-ship lines have said that they would build steam-ships and run them between the ports of the United States and the ports of South America, and run faster lines and do everything in their power to encourage and increase commerce, provided the Government would pay them the subsidy that the British Government are paying to lines already engaged in the same trade. I am willing to trust them and to try it. I am willing to try it for a single year, and I am not willing to postpone the effort a single hour longer.

I regret that I have been forced into this debate to-day without a single moment of preparation. I hope, however, it will be postponed, and that I may have opportunity of presenting my views more fully upon this important question.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understand the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] to simplify the tariff question somewhat by declaring unequivocally that it is necessary to reduce wages in this country in order to extend our foreign trade.

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator does not understand me that way, I hope. I have not said anything of that kind.

Mr. HAWLEY. He confessed our inability to sell goods in certain countries through our inability to produce cheaply enough.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir; but there are many elements that enter into the production of goods besides labor; the cost of material and living of every sort and all the elements I mentioned enter into it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then he would reduce the cost of living. Is that it?

Mr. REAGAN. I would reduce the tariff to a revenue standard, so as not to put the business of this country upon stilts and disarrange our whole financial and commercial system.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is very difficult to understand what the revenue standard is upon some goods. If there is next to nothing coming in of a certain article that is produced here and it is produced abroad, then the duty is practically a prohibitory one; but to reduce that duty would be to invite importation and to increase the revenue. So it is extremely difficult, I say, as to many articles, to know what is exactly a revenue standard.

But the Senator puzzles me in another respect. He says we have given such encouragement to manufacturers that capital gluts the market; that there is too much capital employed in manufacturing; and that we are producing goods too rapidly and have a surplus, and therefore have to stop. In the first place, there is no imaginable system under which you can escape an occasional glut of the market. There is England, the paradise of the Democratic party commercially, politico-economically the paradise, that has, more nearly than any other people, except it be the Turks or some equally mistaken people, a free-trade tariff; and yet it is everlastingly said in the English papers that they are suspending here and there because the market is glutted. Yet raw materials go in there free, and everything else goes in free, except certain large classes of articles that the poor man consumes as much as do the rich, and on those they have their tariff.

They get their whole hundred millions out of four or five articles of almost universal consumption, while we get the larger part of ours out of luxuries and things of that sort. We encourage the establishment of manufactures here, and at the same time we tax for the support of the Government the people who are best able to pay. They say to us that free trade—for that is what they are all aiming at confessedly; Watterson says the man is an imbecile who denies it—they say to us that free trade is proper, and yet this free-trade nation of Great Britain has as much difficulty as anybody else with glutted markets.

The gentleman makes another mistake in supposing that higher wages necessarily imply a greater price and costlier production. I can show him the statistics of an English statistician who points out distinctly the fact that the American laborer produces more per capita than any other laborer; that a hundred Americans produce as much as one hundred and five, or one hundred and ten, or one hundred and fifteen—I can not furnish exactly the figures, I do not remember, but a measurably greater amount than the English laborer produces. Why? He gives the reason. Because he is better fed and better clothed and more intelligent, and will not live in the cabins those people are in.

But the free-trader turns around and points to the fact that the cost of rent is higher here than in Great Britain; and the English free-trader thinks he has made a point when he shows that workmen have to pay more for rents here. It is because they will not live in the manner these people live. They will have meat more than once a week; they will have a better house and better surroundings; they will have a piano or a melodeon; will put on good clothes for Sunday; and we could not make them live here as they do there.

The free-trade doctrine these gentlemen preach here—I shall not undertake to go into the subject generally—is simply a deliberate determination to reduce the cost of manufacturing in this country by reducing the rate of wages, and they might as well admit it too, and go into the Presidential campaign accordingly.

I say, on the other hand, that the well-fed and well-clothed American mechanical operative can produce more goods than anybody else per capita, and he does it by his better physical condition, being more active, intelligent, and capable; also because he has something to hope for and something to live for in this country; and he has better machinery. It pays to pay higher wages. By paying higher wages you get a more rapid and a more excellent production, and in no case does it tend to lower prices.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HAWLEY. With great pleasure.

Mr. BUTLER. If the proposition be true that the American laborer produces more than the English or European laborer, is not that the reason for this increase of wages that he gets, and will not that increase of wages and higher wages go on if there is a reduction of taxation?

Mr. HAWLEY. He will save something there undoubtedly. I see what the gentlemen are aiming at. Throw off these duties and let goods freely come in at cost with a small percentage added. How does the laborer there live? Read the innumerable books, or go yourselves and see how he lives. Wages will be somewhat higher in this country anyhow because of the scale of living, perhaps, but take the duties off, put these men, then, upon an even plane of competition, the one man with his meat once a week and insufficient clothing and insufficient education, and the other man well fed and well clothed.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not want to cause cheap labor; I am very much opposed to it. I think that the admission of the Senator is a complete answer to his own argument, that the fact that the American laborer produces more accounts for the increase of his pay.

Mr. HAWLEY. It does not wholly.

Mr. BUTLER. So that higher wages in America would go on notwithstanding a reduction of taxation, because the American laborer is more intelligent, the Senator says. I think he is. Because he lives in a better house. I think that is true. Because he has better machinery. I think that is true; and because he works longer. That is true. Therefore he gets more wages, so that the reduction of taxation does not necessarily involve the idea of a reduction of wages according to the Senator's own theory.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator had better take the floor. We shall have this out by and by, some other time, when it will be more satisfactory. It is a very inviting subject indeed; but just let me finish what I was going to say, and you may have the rest of the afternoon.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not want any part of the afternoon. I was simply putting in my oar as the Senator is putting in his.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have the floor in my own right. I am not putting in an oar.

Mr. BUTLER. I beg pardon.

Mr. HAWLEY. All right; the Senator is perfectly welcome.

I find the excess of production in behalf of American workmen either 5, 10, or 15 per cent., but the difference in wages is anywhere from 20 to 100 per cent. So if you take off the duty you do not remit the men to an exact equality. You may do it so long as their political institution, whether gotten from the vice or ignorance of the present or inherited from the vice of ages, it makes no odds——

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator——

Mr. HAWLEY. Please do not. I could not repeat the alphabet or the Lord's Prayer when you interrupt me that way. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. HAWLEY. Of the condition of wages and life over there, whether it results from vicious and stupid legislation now, or by the misfortune of centuries of precedent, ignorance, and stupidity, I know the particular consequences so far as our economic questions are concerned. Their condition is far below ours, and they can compete unfavorably.

The Senator from New Jersey said they send their goods here at cost in order to get rid of them, and keep their factories running at odd hours. Our manufacturers know all about that. Our people are familiar with that dodge. But he spoke as if they habitually send their goods here at cost. They can send their goods here at cost and pay 25 or 30 per cent. duty and still compete. Take your 25 or 30 per cent. duty off, and what becomes of competition then? They have to simply combine and glut the American market with goods, to sell under cost, and burst up a large number of our newer establishments.

One single remark more and I will go away from this debate, which is just a little bit out of place on this bill. We make a mistake in thinking so much of foreign markets. Sometimes we overlook certain facts that ought to be taken into consideration. We have almost as much as we can do to keep up with the growth of the United States, and feed and clothe and manufacture for it.

Mr. DAWES. We could do it all.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, and have 30 per cent. over.

Mr. BUTLER. Would it bother the Senator now if I should ask him a question?

Mr. HAWLEY. It would bother me ever so much. Our growth in this decade will increase to the usual 30 per cent. or more, that is to say, it is, economically speaking, Spain annexed to the United States in this decade, a country just about equal to Spain. If we had had in these ten years sixteen or seventeen millions included within our outline, we should have said we had greatly added to our markets. If we could take to ourselves in South America 17,000,000 people on that eastern coast and say we will furnish them with that trade (and right here at our own doors we have annexed it), we should think it a fine increase, and yet we are bringing right in by our natural growth and by immigration an addition of 30 per cent. in this decade, and there must be an addition of 30 per cent. to our manufacturing facilities in order to supply those people. Now, why be so hungry about a foreign trade?

Mr. STEWART obtained the floor.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the Senator from Nevada allow me a moment?

Mr. STEWART. I want to say a few words before the debate closes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. STEWART. I will yield for a few moments.

Mr. REAGAN. I listen habitually to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] with a great deal of pleasure, but I was surprised to hear the statement he made that in the free-trade country of England, as he calls it, they levy their taxes upon the necessaries of life while in this country they levy their taxes upon the luxuries of life; that is, England levies her principal duties upon whisky, tobacco, and rum, necessaries of life, while we levy our principal duties upon such luxuries as iron and steel, and the products of iron and steel, upon clothing and the things we can not live without. So it seems to me there is some mistake in that.

I know the habit of talking about free trade; I know how persistently we are to have false issues forced before the country; but I do not propose myself to be led off by them. Free trade is a term that I do not know exactly how to define. I suppose the Senator would define it to be a trade without taxation upon imports. That is what I would call strict free trade. If he means that, notwithstanding his statement I venture to say that there is not one in a thousand of the American people who propose any such thing or contemplate the possibility of any such thing.

There is another term in which we speak of England as a free-trade country. They adopt the policy of liberalizing their commerce.

Others suggest that a free-trade country is a country where a tariff is levied for revenue only, and where commerce is liberalized as far as it can be liberalized consistently with the collection of the necessary revenue for the support of the Government. If that is what the Senator means by free trade, then I am a free-trader, and I take it that most of the Senators on this side of the Chamber are free-traders of that kind; that is, free-traders in the sense of simply levying duties enough to furnish revenues for the support of the Government economically expended.

But the Senator from Connecticut made a remark (and I hope the Senator from Nevada will allow me to refer to it; I will only detain him a moment) to the effect that this country would do a good business if it supplied its own people with manufactures, and a Senator near by him suggested, "And all its own people require," and that seemed to be assented to by the Senator. I invoke the attention of the Senator and the Senate to the proposition: Suppose we adopt the policy of manufacturing for our own country, to the exclusion of the manufactures of all other countries, is not that an absolute destruction of commerce with other countries? If we do that, what is to become of the millions of dollars' worth of corn, of wheat, of flour, of pork, of beef, of cotton which we export to other countries? If we devote the whole energies of this country to building up millionaire manufacturing corporations, and in doing that strike down the agriculture of this country, which is the pursuit of five-eighths of its population, this being essentially and eminently a country of agriculture, what sort of statesmanship, I ask, is that to be?

Mr. STEWART. If I had been a free-trader at the commencement of this running debate, I think I should have been by this time in favor of protection. One idea has been developed more clearly than anything else in the course of the debate, that about the best thing that persons engaged in a manufacturing industry can have is a market. The great struggle is for a market. The main thing to encourage manufacturers is to give them a market. That is what England subsidizes ships for, and other countries do the same. It is to get a market for her manufactured goods. She has not a sufficient home market and she wants a foreign market.

We have a pretty large home market which we are not allowed to supply altogether by reason of our laws. England has it so arranged that she supplies pretty much all her market except the few things that we now make better than she can. We supply her with scythes and with some farming utensils, with axes and things we can make better than she can. Otherwise she has her home market of 35,000,000 people, besides considerable of her colonial markets, and she has arranged her laws so as to keep those markets.

We have a large market which we are striving to keep. It is worth twice as much as England's home market, because we have twice as many people and our demands for living are greater. Here each individual consumes more than the Englishman. We have a greater capacity. Our market is growing, and if we had that market we should have no strikes in this country; we should have all our people employed if we could have our home market to supply.

Mr. BUTLER. While the Senator is discussing the question of home market, may I ask him if it is not equally important to have a market for our agricultural products as well as for our manufactured products?

Mr. STEWART. That is the very point. The more people we have, the more manufacturing goes on, the more home market we have for our wheat, our cotton, and our other home products; and that is worth four times as much as all your foreign markets. The foreign market is a mere bagatelle. Why give away your home market? Without your home market farming would have to stop; all would have to go into farming, and so would starve.

No, it is this valuable home market of ours that England is striving for by the aid of the Democratic party, and which we are trying to preserve. They tell us that we could manufacture much cheaper if we did not have any home market. If we had free trade and would allow foreign countries to break down our home market, we could manufacture, it is true, what we could sell to other peoples. But that is not my experience in observing operations of that kind. The more we produce the cheaper we can produce it. The larger the scale of manufacture the cheaper we can manufacture. That is universally the case. The more, I say, we have to do in that line the more we can do. It will develop machinery, it will develop the talent of the country. It has been proved in every part of the country that the more we manufacture the cheaper we can manufacture.

If we take off the tariff we can not manufacture as cheaply as we can now, because we should have the country swarming with tramps; we should have our industries broken up; we should have no market; we should be deprived of that market which enables us to manufacture on a large scale. These sixty millions of people with the resources of this country, with the products of every clime in abundance, if we utilize them, could manufacture in a short time cheaper than any country in the world. That keeps this people above the starvation line.

What shall we do with our surplus wheat? Those people will not buy it unless they are hungry, and if they are hungry they will buy it. There are many articles that we can supply the South American countries with as cheaply as England, if we do it on a large scale.

Why is it that England has got to subsidize all her steamers in order to trade there at all? She has free trade. That does not enable her to carry on trade with the South American countries without a subsidy; and if it will not enable England with her advanced state of manufactures, with her low wages, to control those markets without a subsidy, how could it enable us to do so?

There are many articles that we manufacture of a better quality than other countries. Many of our cotton goods go to China, and England is counterfeiting our marks in order to compete with them, and they have to wash and weigh the goods so as not to be deceived. Our cotton is better and heavier. If you will give us the same chance, by subsidizing our steam-ships, we can carry our products to many countries in the world. We have an abundance of raw material, and we can afford to put better raw material in the articles and make better goods, as we are doing, in many commodities. But you deprive our people of the same means of communication with other countries that England has, for you deny the subsidies and you cut off our market there.

I agree with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] in what he said, and I am glad to agree with him in something. I approve of his speech. When I find him saying anything that I believe is sound, I want to acknowledge it, and I want to acknowledge it right here. If we had additional mail facilities with those countries, we have many articles that we could send to them, and the balance of trade in those countries ought not to be against us, as it now is. A vast balance of trade is against us in the South American countries, where we ought to cultivate trade. Inasmuch as England and France find it necessary in order to have trade with those countries to have subsidized mail lines, let us try that experiment and see if our people will not manage to supply those markets and prevent a vast balance of trade in those countries against us. We are importing into this country between $700,000,000 and $800,000,000 of commodities each year.

Mr. PLATT. Twice as much as the whole South American trade.

Mr. STEWART. Yes, that is twice as much as the whole South American trade. Of that $700,000,000 or $800,000,000 there is not more than $100,000,000 of it, not more than 25 per cent. of it at all events, that we could not produce in this country if we had the opportunity. Tea and coffee and some other things we have to import, for those we can not raise, but the great majority—three-fourths of that $800,000,000 worth—we might produce in this country, and give employment to our people.

Supposing we had the supplying of a market of $500,000,000, which would be the very least we might supply, nobody would suffer from anything abroad. Suppose there were $500,000,000 additional market for the people who are unemployed in this country, and they were called upon to manufacture articles and to raise products to supply that $500,000,000 of market which we give away to others, do you not believe that the country would be more prosperous?

I deny that charging people for coming into our markets as a tax upon articles makes our people idle by depriving them of labor. It is a tax upon other countries. We charge them for the privilege of coming in here and taking labor from our people which they want to do themselves. Who feels this tax the most? Where does all the effort come from to remove this tax? Does it come from the American people? Do the petitions come from American people? Are the pamphlets that are written on this subject from American people? Was the organization that seeks to open our markets to England and to all the world to cut down the tariff, and which manages this thing, created in the United States? Does it not have its headquarters in England? Is it not the Cobden Club? Is it not the Cobden Club that is giving prizes to each one of our colleges nearly, and teaching our young men to write in favor of the interests of England and bringing them up free-traders, so that it takes them some years after they come out of college to learn something of the interests of the United States.

Why does the Cobden Club raise money and send it here to distribute pamphlets? Why does it give prizes in our colleges? Is it for the purpose of benefiting our education, or is it for the purpose of benefiting their commerce? Is it for the purpose of building up America, or is it for the purpose of giving employment to English laborers?

If we must cheapen manufactured products in this country by bringing down labor, by giving up our markets to others in order to have foreign trade, we had better have no foreign trade. But that is not necessary. The more we retain of our own market the more manufactures we have, the cheaper our people will manufacture, and the more they will have to sell to others. I believe that the American people have a right to the American market. They have a right to supply those markets, and we have no right to take it from them and give it to others, for it is a mere gratuity when you give it away.

Our opponents will not say that they will have a revenue tariff. We have not got a revenue tariff yet. We are raising $118,000,000 from war taxes, from internal revenue, because we have not tariff enough to raise the revenue needed to support the Government. It has been a favorite theory of the Democratic party from the beginning that they would raise enough duties on imports to support the Government. We have not got it. They propose to postpone the day when they will get back to a revenue tariff.

The peculiar fancy of the Democratic party was to have a tariff for revenue. We hear them talking about it sometimes yet; but still they hold on to internal revenue war taxes to prevent a tariff for revenue, and they would have approximate free trade. Let us have a revenue tariff, abolish your internal revenue, and raise your revenue from duties on imports. If properly levied they will protect home industry and develop a market here, and enable our artisans to compete with all the world, because we should have such a market at home as no other country could have.

That foreigners are in favor of free trade with this country is not to be wondered at, because there is no such market on earth. There is no people who live as well, no people who buy as much, no people who need as much as we do. If you take away our market and make our people tramps for the purpose of manufacturing cheaply to gain a few thousand dollars' worth of trade with South America, it can not be accomplished by that means, because the more you break down our industries the more "trusts" you will have in Europe. Senators talk about "trusts" at home. You know there are no importers in the United States properly speaking. Every importer here is the agent of a foreign manufacturing establishment.

Mr. PLATT. Almost.

Mr. STEWART. I think every one. I do not think there is one who is not. No general merchandise, no general trade can it be. He is the agent of a foreign manufacturing establishment, and how is it done? Some twenty years ago I had occasion to examine this subject to a certain extent, and I found this to be the mode: Mr. A. T. Stewart in former times would ship English gloves or silks or any other article, but before he would do it, as he had a manufacturing establishment, he would take the goods from that establishment and would expose them in Paris, or in London, or in Liverpool as the case might be, for sale at auction in certain broken quantities. Of course there would be no purchasers, nobody could go into that line of trade, and the goods would be sold remarkably cheap, and the consul would certify that that was the market price.

Besides that, you have your ad valorem duties, and then comes the matter of expert grading. In that way an agent of a foreign manufacturing establishment would get his goods in competition with the people of the United States. They have their trusts and their combinations, and they have them through Europe now. Take off the tariff and there will be nothing but trusts. Every important merchant will have his trust, and he will fix the price of the article by selling a few broken lumps. So you can not avoid trusts. There are trusts and combinations on every article. When those trusts are broken up the prices are lowered. That is why they are so much lower now than they were. Take the article of borax, for instance. That rated over 30 cents a pound, although it could be produced in India in unlimited quantities for 2 or 3 cents a pound. We put a tariff on that article; the industry was built up here, and now the price is down to 6 cents a pound. It has broken up English trusts; it has broken up the trusts in India. I could cite numerous cases of that kind.

I am opposed to trusts, but if we are to have trusts, I would rather they should be American trusts, which we can deal with, and not foreign trusts. If you break down your American markets you will have foreign trusts, as you always have had, represented by agents here called agents of foreign manufacturers. I believe in protecting our own industries, not only from foreign labor, but from foreign trusts. If we are to have trusts, we should have them at home; and then we could have committees to examine them. We could do something with them here.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few brief remarks to the Senate upon the subject of the conference report on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and gave my assent to the provision in the bill providing for an expeditious and regular mail service. I think this discussion to-day has been entirely foreign to that amendment and to the objects which it has in view; but as I propose to sustain the report of the committee by my own vote, I wish to state the grounds which will govern my judgment, differing as I do from the great majority of those upon my own side of the Chamber.

The question presented in this provision of the Post-Office appropriation bill is not in any wise connected with the subject of a tariff in its good effects or its bad effects, nor with the subject of labor, except in so far as the laborer shares in the general prosperity or adversity of the country. The question presented is simply this: Is it desirable that the mails to foreign countries shall be carried in American ships, manned by Americans? Is it or is it not a desirable object to be encouraged by public policy or to be discouraged? I apprehend there can be but one answer to that question.

Whether they shall be carried in American-built ships or American-owned ships is another question altogether, resting upon different considerations; but upon the proposition that this great Republic, representing sixty-five millions of the most advanced and prosperous people upon the face of the globe, should be represented in foreign countries by the ordinary instruments of commerce which contribute to the civilization of mankind and the improvement of the race, there can be but one opinion. How far that result can be reached by a mail service induced and encouraged by Government aid is the question to be considered.

If there were no commerce, if there was nothing but that intercourse between the different nations and peoples of the earth which is a necessity of our nature, there would be but one answer to the question, whether so large a portion of the human race, occupying so conspicuous a position in its political, its scientific, its inventive mind and progress, should be represented as other nations and peoples are, with equal dignity, by their own ships, whether built or owned in their country, sailing under their own emblem of national power.

Mr. President, there can be but one answer to this question.

Is it desirable as a public policy that the foreign mails should be carried in American ships, manned by American seamen? If so, it is because there are reasons why it should be an established public policy of the people of the United States, and these reasons can be discovered, analyzed, and tested to ascertain their force and effect. What, then, are these reasons?

1. Because the mails can be carried as expeditiously, safely, and successfully, looking only to the efficiency of the mail service, as on a foreign ship.

2. When a desired public object can be attained in two ways equally as well, and one way will also attain other desirable objects of public policy, it is plain that the way which will produce the greater number of desirable results is the proper one to be selected.

What, then, are the other proper and wise ends of public policy to be attained by the carriage of foreign mails in American ships?

The ship is the only means of communication across the ocean, except the electric telegraph.

It is the only means by which the personality of a people may be made known to the people of another country. It is the representative and emblem of the national power and prosperity and advancement. The effect of the exhibition of superior power and enterprise upon a people is favorable.

3. It offers an easy, safe, and expeditious method of transportation for passengers, trade, and commerce. This is a desirable object, and is the first step in a foundation for commercial intercourse between peoples of different countries. It gives employment to and opportunity for American seamen and develops a taste for maritime service. This also is a desirable object. It furnishes native seamen familiar with seamanship for service in time of war and for the enrichment of the people in time of peace. None can truthfully or reasonably deny these very evident propositions. If they are true, it follows as a necessary consequence that if the mails can be carried as safely and as expeditiously in American vessels as in foreign ones that it is a wise public policy to have them so carried. Neither can it be denied that these results are worth paying for, unless the cost be too excessive and burdensome to the people.

Upon that point it is evident that if these results should be attained they will pay back to the people the cost and far more.

Another object which results from the carriage of the mails in American ships, either partially or wholly, is that the people are thus made to contribute their part as a people to the improvements and the inventions and the progress of the age in naval construction and in the means of communication by ocean transit.

But it is denied that the mails can be carried as expeditiously in American as in foreign ships, and the reason given is that in contracting with a ship to carry the mails without being bound to one line the authorities may make selections of the ships engaged in ordinary commerce, and that the interests of commerce always demand, obtain, and furnish the greatest possible amount of expedition, safety, and promptness of delivery, and that the mail service can be thus performed in the subsidized ships of foreign countries; but this is obviously an unsound proposition even regarded from this standpoint alone. In whatever may be the rates of speed and the degrees of safety and comfort now obtained by the subsidized ships of foreign countries and under the ordinary incentives of commerce, the proposition ignores all the probabilities of further improvement by American enterprise and skill and invention. It is further unsound because it can only be applicable when an established and large commerce gives steady employment to fast ships, and does not relate to those countries where there are no established commerce of sufficient value to give such employment and where the possibilities of future commerce rest in wise policies of encouragement and development.

Again, it is an unusual proposition, because it is not true that if you give a particular subsidy to American ships to carry the mails, you can not also give employment to foreign ships to carry the mail in the interval of their trips. Again, it is said that this aid from the Government gives such ships a monopoly of the carrying trade, and enables them to prevent competition from other ships, carrying through the aid of the Government bounty at rates ruinous to other ships, until they drive them out of the trade. The objection is made that this is a subsidy in money; but the Constitution in providing that Congress shall have power to establish post-offices and post-roads, expressly provides for the payment of a subsidy in money, and every payment made by the Postmaster-General for the domestic and the foreign mails is a subsidy in money, and precisely in all particulars and in all respects the same as this amendment, the only difference is in the amount and the person to whom it shall be paid. No human intellect can point out any difference.

When the Postmaster-General prefers a steam-ship to a sailing vessel to carry the mails to Europe, he pays a subsidy for speed and safety.

He does everything that this amendment does, except that he pays the subsidy to a foreign enterprise.

Who is there that as between vessels equal in all respects will not prefer a ship of his own country? The State I in part represent has 1,400 miles of seacoast; her splendid port of Pensacola, one of the finest harbors in the world, Tampa, and Key West, all looking out upon Central and South America—Jacksonville opening to the West Indies and South America—invite the aid of the Government to establish and send from them their mail-ships, giving speedier, more certain, and safer mail service.

I have great respect for the Postmaster-General. He is an able man. He is a man of conspicuous devotion to the public service and he is an excellent administrator; but that does not make his views and opinions always sound. Let us examine and see upon what ground they rest. He assumes that it is not desirable that there should be any aid given by the Government to this mail service. If he does not do so, then he recognizes the propriety of this amendment except in so far as the amendment may not be so good as some other provision by which the aid of the Government might be given to the mail service.

Is it true that the Government aid should not be given to any private enterprise performing a public duty or a public function? What is government for? In its general legislation, in the establishment of a public policy, it is to give aid to enterprise, to industries, by restraints of and incentives to human action. When, then, the proposition is that the representative of the people, the Government, which directs the combined efforts of the people, may give aid to private enterprises wisely by legislation, but not by money, what ground is there for that, and who will point out the difference in the ideas where there is none? Legislation by the Government establishing a general policy affecting the different interests of the people is as much Government aid as and sometimes far greater than any appropriation of money.

These ideas are vain; they have no foundation. The Government is to foster and direct and encourage by the effect of its legislation the public policies that may be wise and useful to the people. That is the logic, the theory, and men can not alter the truth, which is divine and bears its own consequences.

If this be true, how then shall this question be tested? It is proposed that in those countries where there is no commerce, no ships, no American connections, the policy of the Government shall give artificial stimulus and aid to them by giving a bounty to encourage that which the commerce does not demand and require, in order that the future commercial relations of the country may be developed. The propriety of this will manifestly rest upon two considerations only. One of these is, Will it have the effect designated? Is it wise to the end of producing that result that a contract should be made with Americans to perform this service? There can be no doubt that if you will furnish the stimulus the Americans will do it. There can be no question that if the inducement be great enough from the Government the service will be supplied.

But the Postmaster-General says it will limit his choice; that it will limit him to a service that will be slower and less expeditious and less certain. Then why not put in the contract a provision that this service shall be equal to, if not greater in speed during the whole of the period of time than any other, and that the contract shall cease and be determined whenever the contractors permit a greater amount of speed or a greater amount of safety or efficiency in the ships of other competitors, or by any standard that modern invention and progress may require? There is no difficulty in meeting that view of the Postmaster-General by a contract which any one may draw, requiring the ships to be equal not only to the best now made but equal to the best that may be developed hereafter, if you will give sufficient inducement to the enterprise. This is the proper answer to the Postmaster-General's proposition. He has the control of the provisions of the contract; let him make it so that whenever better ships and a better mail service shall be furnished by any competitor, foreign or domestic, the contract shall cease.

The Postmaster-General admits the propriety of this amendment while he objects to it in his very able and ingenious letter upon the subject. He says that he has given four times as much to American ships as to foreign ships for carrying the mail already; that is the practice of the Department.

That is a concession of the whole subject. Why did he give the four-hundredth fraction of a cent. to an American ship instead of to a foreign ship? If it was wise to do it for a small amount, it is wise to do it for a great amount. If the consideration of favoring American enterprise by the most infinitesimal proportion of increased pay is a wise one for the public, whatever consideration is necessary to produce that result is a wise one for the public, within the limit that it shall not be so great as to be unreasonable and burdensome.

He says that he gave this advantage to American ships, and if he did to American ships, he did it upon the ground upon which the amendment was adopted. Of course we assume that he wanted to benefit them.

This question has nothing whatever to do with the effect of our domestic policy of tariff or no tariff. I share in the general views upon that subject on this side of the Chamber, which will not permit the imposition of burdens upon one part of the people for the benefit of the other. I admit that the granting subsidies of money to enterprises, however intimately connected with the public functions, is a dangerous power, but I undertake to say that the ocean mail service of this country is as intimately connected with its prosperity in peace and its defense in war as the maintenance of an army and navy, and that it bears precisely the same function, with the added one that it will develop the commercial prosperity of the country.

To show how wild many of these propositions advanced against this amendment are, suppose we admit the proposition that the country is burdened with an excessive tariff imposition. Suppose we admit, for the purpose of testing this argument, that the cost to the consumer in our own country is largely increased, and that an aggregate of 30 or 40 per cent. upon the actual cost and the foreign cost of production is imposed by our tariff policy, why would it not be possible for the manufacturer, who has received a benefit of 30 per cent. from the American consumer, although he may not be able to manufacture his goods at equal cost and upon terms of equal competition with the foreign producer, to dispose of his production in foreign countries at a competing price with those of the foreign country to any extent less the bounty received from the tariff? Undoubtedly he could not do it at the price of the home consumption; but the very fact that he had a bounty for it at home, and the bounty of the protected market, would enable him to sacrifice largely the profits in a foreign country and yet make a profit.

There is no one more opposed than I am to the policy of the imposition of duties for protection alone, but I recognize the fact that there may be commercial relations even under a prohibitory policy. You can not restrain and prohibit the intercourse of mankind. You can not build either a Chinese wall or a wall built by non-intercourse laws which will separate the peoples of the earth. The human race was made by God Almighty for free intercourse and the exchange of thought, invention, and the products of labor. Thought is free, hope is free, the aspirations of the mind are free. Mankind as created by the Creator will have intercourse with each other. Then we must provide for it according to modern civilization, for the dignity of national relations and national intercourse, for the comfort and convenience of exchange, trammel it as you may, it must have communication.

In my judgment we might modify our existing system and change it vastly for the better, for the welfare and comfort of our own people and for the promotion of foreign intercourse. But that is not the question here. It is to-day, as we stand, with $700,000,000 or $800,000,000 of exchanges, or double that amount, why shall we not maintain the national honor and the national dignity, so that an American citizen, whether in South America, nearest to us, or in Europe, shall feel the pride and dignity of seeing a vessel of his own country appear in the foreign ports bearing the thoughts and the communications and the commercial interests of his own people, and respected and honored as the representative of the great Republic?

It is for these reasons, Mr. President, while I think a better system of bounty or of subsidy might be devised, that I am willing, as one representative of the American people here in the Senate, to vote some part of the public money for the transportation of the mails in the most expeditious manner in vessels the best that have been or can be constructed, which shall be American and representative of our people and our nationality.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] that the Senate still further insist upon its amendment numbered 7, disagreed to by the House, and ask for a further conference thereon.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REAGAN (when Mr. COKE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. COKE] is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE]. I would vote "yea" if it were not for that pair.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], but I have transferred my pair to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and therefore I vote "nay."

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. I do not know how he would vote upon this question. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB. He would vote the same way. The Senator from New Jersey, I have no doubt, may feel himself released from his pair.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Being so informed, I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BATE. My colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired generally with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I find that my colleague [Mr. PADDOCK] is absent and apparently is not paired. I will transfer my pair to my colleague and vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Allison,	Davis,	Hoar,	Plumb,
Blair,	Dolph,	Ingalls,	Pugh,
Bowen,	Edmunds,	McPherson,	Sawyer,
Call,	Farwell,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Cameron,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Chace,	Gorman,	Payne,	Stockbridge,
Cullom,	Hale,	Platt,	Teller.

NAYS—16.

Bate,	Cockrell,	Hampton,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Colquitt,	Hearst,	Turpie,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vest,
Blodgett,	George,	Reagan,	Walthall.

ABSENT—32.

Aldrich,	Eustis,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Blackburn,	Evarts,	Morgan,	Sabin,
Brown,	Gibson,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Butler,	Gray,	Paddock,	Stanford,
Chandler,	Harris,	Palmer,	Vance,
Coke,	Hawley,	Pasco,	Voorhees,
Daniel,	Hiscock,	Quay,	Wilson of Iowa,
Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.

So the motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the managers of the further conference on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BECK were appointed.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg leave to offer, with the assent and approval of all the members of the Committee on the Judiciary with whom I have been able to consult, an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, to be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I wish to say that the amendment is to provide that the Joint Committee on Printing of the two Houses shall cause to be made a new and complete index to the Revised Statutes of the United States, and all the statutes and joint resolutions since, that shall be a good one for the conveniences and necessities of everybody.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 7547) granting the right of way to the Yankton and Missouri River Railway through the Yankton reservation in Dakota; and

A bill (H. R. 10112) granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railway Company the right of way through the Fond du Lac Indian reservation, in the State of Minnesota.

SEACOAST DEFENSES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] desire to proceed with the bill (S. 62) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses?

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator from Oregon to consent that the bill may be informally laid aside in order to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 405) providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law.

Mr. DOLPH. I can not consent to that. I have been a long time waiting for a full Senate to consider the coast defenses bill, and I do not know that any one wishes to discuss it. I think if the amendments be read and acted upon we can have a vote upon it. I supposed the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] intended to address the Senate to-day.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 62) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment reported from the Committee on Coast Defenses will be stated.

Mr. BLAIR. I suppose the Senator from Oregon hardly expects a vote upon the bill without further discussion.

Mr. DOLPH. I do. I do not know that any one desires to discuss it. If any one desires to discuss it the question will come up on the Army appropriation bill. I think we can take a vote upon it at once.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], who had the floor to-day by the courtesy of the Senate to speak upon the fisheries treaty, kindly gave way with the understanding that at the close of the debate upon the Post-Office appropriation bill I would have an opportunity to make a motion or obtain by consent of the Senator from Oregon the right to ask the Senate to consider Senate bill 405 in favor of these laborers, who have been now in three Congresses at least getting reports, always favorable reports in both Houses of Congress, but have never been able to get the consideration of their measure.

Mr. DOLPH. I gave way once for the consideration of that bill, and we were unable to get a quorum to act on it.

Mr. BLAIR. That was not the fault of the friends of the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. There is sickness in my family and I desire to take them away as soon as I can, and I want to have the bill disposed of. I think we can get a vote on it in half an hour, probably in a quarter of an hour, as soon as the amendments are acted on.

Mr. BLAIR. Of course if the Senator does not give way I can not press the request further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment of the Committee on Coast Defenses is to add, at the end of section 2:

All of said appropriation to be available until expended.

So as to make the clause read:

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, $21,500,000; for each fiscal year thereafter for the period of eleven years, $9,000,000, and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, $5,877,800, all of said appropriation to be available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 3, after the word "aforesaid," to insert "and the armament therefor, and the purchase of sites for the said fortifications, substantially;" and in line 16 of the same section, after the word "ports," to insert "or the armament therefor;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That said sum shall be expended under the direction of the President for the purpose of providing fortifications and other defenses for the ports aforesaid and the armament therefor, and the purchase of sites for the said fortifications, substantially in accordance with the recommendations of said board, until Congress shall otherwise provide, and shall be apportioned between said ports in accordance with the consolidated estimate of the cost of said defenses found upon page 28 of said report, and the work shall be, as near as may be, commenced at the same time at each of said ports, and shall proceed as rapidly as said annual appropriations will admit of: Provided, That if at any time the Secretary of War, upon the advice of the board of Army officers hereinafter provided for, and with the approval of the President shall recommend to Congress any changes in the plans for the fortifications of any of said ports, or the armament therefor, work may be suspended upon the same so far as would become necessary if such changes should be authorized until after the adjournment of Congress, if then in session; and if not then in session, until after the adjournment of the next session thereof, when, if such changes have not been authorized by Congress, work shall be resumed under the plans recommended by said board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment, was in section 4, line 4, after the word "by," to strike out "a board of" and insert the words "him, and he may appoint an advisory board of;" and in line 6, after the word "be," to strike out the words "appointed by the President, and be;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. The floating batteries and torpedo-boats recommended by said board shall be constructed under the supervision of the Secretary of the Navy, but the plans and specifications for the same shall first be approved by him, and he may appoint an advisory board of not more than ten officers of the Navy, who shall be removable at his pleasure. That all such vessels, except as hereinafter otherwise provided, shall be built by contract, and in the construction of the same all the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," as to the material for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are to be built, the notice of, and proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, and specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts, shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with said act, so far as the same relates to vessels constructed under contract, save that in all their parts they shall be of domestic manufacture, and if reasonable bids can be obtained therefor, considering the cost and risk of navigating and transporting the same, if constructed elsewhere, the floating batteries and torpedo-boats intended for use on the Pacific coast shall be constructed on that coast.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 18, after the word "shall," to insert the words "have or shall;" so as to read:

That no money shall be expended except in payment for steel accepted and delivered; that each bidder shall have or shall contract to erect in the United States a suitable plant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 7, after the word "by," to insert the words "the Secretary of War, who may appoint;" in line 9, after the word "Army," to strike out the words "who shall be appointed by the President and," and insert the word "to;" in line 11, after the word "provided," to strike out the words "so far as practicable," and to insert "except when done at Government shops;" so as to read:

SEC. 6. That the construction of the fortifications and their armament, the fabrication of guns and gun-carriages for fortifications, submarine mines, and all such defenses except floating batteries and torpedo-boats, shall be under the supervision of the Secretary of War, but before any money is expended on any such fortifications or other defenses the plans and specifications of the same shall be approved by the Secretary of War, who may appoint an advisory board of not more than ten officers of the Army, to be removable at his pleasure. All works as herein provided, except when done at Government shops, shall be done by contract.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, after the word "contract," at the end of line 12, to strike out the words "the making of which shall be governed by the laws and regulations of the Department in force at the time," and insert "or otherwise, as may be most economical and advantageous to the Government."

Mr. GORMAN. I appeal to the Senator from Oregon, who has presented this bill, and, I think, offered these amendments, to permit the bill with the amendments to be printed, so that we may see them.

Mr. DOLPH. The bill was printed months ago, with the report of the committee and an explanation of the amendments.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand the bill has been printed, but the amendments have not been.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill with the amendments has been printed.

Mr. DOLPH. The amendments are reported by the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator whether the report has been printed? I have not been able to find it as a separate document, and the last place on earth to look for anything is the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. DOLPH. It was printed four months ago.

Mr. COCKRELL. As a separate document?

Mr. DOLPH. As a separate document, a report.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is very strange that it is not so noted on the Calendar and not so noted on the bill. I have not been able to get hold of it.

Mr. DOLPH. That is a mistake. When the bill was first taken up the report and bill were printed in the RECORD, which also contains the letters of the Secretary of War——

Mr. COCKRELL. I remember something about the report or some papers having been printed in the RECORD, but I never saw the report in separate document form.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The bill now before the Senate, if I understand it correctly, appropriates a very large sum of money through a series of years, the object and purpose of the bill being to commence a system of fortifications along the seacoast. When you begin these fortifications, it must be upon a well-matured plan, and if you make an appropriation of money, say for the first year of $10,000,000, and do not continue it through the years that are to follow, to enable the officials to carry out the entire plan or system, the result of the whole thing will be that the money is thrown away.

I do not know whether it is the right of this Congress to make an appropriation of money pledging future Congresses to continue the system of fortifications upon the seacoast until the Government has expended $120,000,000. Certainly that is matter that was discussed but very little in the committee, and I do not know and I did not understand that the bill was to be reported back to the Senate. I may be mistaken about it. I know that, so far as I was concerned as a member of that committee, I thought it was undertaking a great work and without any plan before us, or without any plan that had been made by any engineer of the Army, without deciding whether the best thing to do was to build a fortification upon land, or in lieu of that to provide floating batteries that might be moved from one exposed point to another. That was a subject which the committee did not and could not decide, and I do not know that it could be decided at all in a manner which would be satisfactory to Senators.

I do not know that this bill should not have further consideration at this session of the Senate. As I understand, the Army appropriation bill makes an appropriation of some six or eight million dollars for fortifications, which, perhaps, is as much as should be appropriated; but understanding that the Army bill does not touch the fortifications, as I am informed by the Senator from Maryland, I think it is a little premature for the Senate to decide to make an investment of $120,000,000 without some well-matured plan before them. In addition to that, if the first appropriation is made of ten or fifteen million dollars, as the case may be, if it were not continued in after years, through a series of years by an appropriation made every year to prosecute the work, the result would be that we should be in the same shape then that we are to-day with respect to fortifications.

Mr. STEWART. I would ask the Senator how he proposes to mature a plan if he does not commence maturing somewhere?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I am satisfied something ought to be done with respect to fortifying our seacoast. Whether it will be done by fortifications built upon the land or by floating batteries which can be transferred, as I said before, from one exposed point to another, is a matter that I think the Engineer Corps of the Army and the Engineer Department of the Navy have not yet fully matured in their own minds. Therefore I do not think it is well to proceed with the consideration of a measure which has not been well digested by a committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. For the information of the Senate, the question having been raised, the Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and others to the fact that this report, No. 603, was printed as a separate document, ordered on the 19th of March.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have a copy of it now, but, if the Chair please, I call the attention of the Chair to the point that the fact that there is an accompanying report is not noted on the face of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is noted on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is true; but it does not appear on the face of the bill that there was any report accompanying the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. This bill was reported from the Committee on Coast Defenses after several meetings. I am sure the Senator from New Jersey must have forgotten, though he was present and participated in the discussion, and I am pretty sure he was present when the report was adopted and I was directed to report the bill.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I did not understand that the chairman was authorized to make a favorable report upon the bill. I do not remember that he was, although I think no objection was made to reporting it back; but I supposed it was to be reported without any recommendation. If I remember aright about it, both the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] and myself, who are members of the committee, joined in the discussion which took place on a single day, as I remember, in committee, and I did not understand that either of us subscribed to the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. Well, Mr. President, I so understood, and the committee having several bills before them, different propositions, a majority of the committee directed the chairman to report this bill, and in pursuance of that direction I prepared and submitted a written report to accompany it.

This bill provides for the fortification of twenty-seven ports upon the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, at which the board on fortifications and other defenses reported that defenses were most urgently needed. It adopts the plan recommended by that board, subject to change by Congress. It appropriates the entire amount necessary for the completion of the entire work, to be available from year to year as required; so that the objection which the Senator from New Jersey has made to the bill does not exist. The whole amount is appropriated, and if this plan is adopted, if this bill should pass both branches of Congress, there will be no delay for want of funds, and the work will proceed.

The plan is certainly the best plan that Congress has before it, and the report on which it is based, I believe, was made in January, 1887, by one of the most competent boards that was ever organized in the country, consisting of Army and Navy officers and civilians. I discussed this bill at some length when it was first taken up and read, and had it printed in the RECORD. I have had it postponed from time to time, so that there might be a full Senate, and now I desire to have it disposed of.

Mr. HAMPTON. Mr. President, I think that the Senator from Oregon is mistaken in some parts of his statement. My recollection of the action in regard to this bill is this: We had it before the committee, and upon the first vote as to whether it should be reported favorably or unfavorably there was a majority against it, or on the proposition the committee was equally divided, so that in fact it was an unfavorable report. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], however, said that he would be willing that it should be reported to the Senate, but he did not commit himself to the support of the bill. I was opposed to it, as the Senator will remember, throughout. I think the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] was also opposed to it. I am sorry he is not here. I think the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] did not concur in it.

Mr. DOLPH. I think the Senator from Texas did, and he is here to state; and if the Senator will allow me to correct him, I will tell him how it was. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] was not present when the vote was had. The Senator from Pennsylvania then came in and changed the result, and then, as I understood, the Senator from New Jersey acquiesced in the majority report; but without his vote there was a majority report. It was the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] who came in from the Naval Committee and cast his vote so as to make a majority.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then, Mr. President, the report which has been made as the majority report was made by the vote of the Senator from Pennsylvania. Certainly I did not consent to report the bill, as I understood. It is too large an appropriation of money for me to vote for, either in committee or elsewhere, except upon some well-matured plan commending itself to my own judgment.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to inquire of the chairman what is included in line 12, of section 1, by the words "lake ports." Does that mean the ports of the upper lakes?

Mr. DOLPH. I think probably Rouse's Point and some point on Lake Champlain, and at some point on the St. Lawrence River there is a fortification recommended by the board. If the Senator will refer to the report he will find several ports at which a fortification is to be provided and the plans for which are stated in the report.

Mr. PAYNE. It does not include any port on the lakes?

Mr. DOLPH. It does not include the harbors individually, but it will include some fortifications on the St. Lawrence River and on Lake Champlain.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, this general question was developed in the discussion of the Army appropriation bill a few days ago. The amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] to that bill is still pending, as the bill itself is pending. While it is true that it deals with only a part of this case, it will deal with a very important part of it, that of the construction of large caliber steel guns. In addition to that, I have some information, which seems to be reliable, that within a short period of time we shall have from the House of Representatives what is known as the fortification bill, a bill which is one of the regular appropriation bills which usually receives favorable action by both Houses of Congress.

This question ought to be dealt with, not piecemeal, but in gross, and it seems to me that it would be better that this bill should go over until such time as these other bills have been reported to the Senate and concluded, so that the Senate may have an opportunity to consider them all together.

I perhaps ought not to show my own ignorance upon this subject as presented by the committee as a reason for delay, but I can say generally that I think myself that we should have a debate upon this subject when it is before us either in the shape of the Army bill or the regular fortification bill, before we act upon this bill from this special committee, no doubt well considered, based upon existing facts, and so on. In that way the Senate will be better able to decide than it is now. Therefore, unless I seem to antagonize some one specially, I shall move that this bill be made a special order for the 26th day of July, at 2 o'clock.

Mr. VEST. I wish to ask the Senator from Kansas a question. I have heard from a reliable source that the fortification bill, which will be here in a day or two, appropriates $35,000,000.

Mr. PLUMB. Somewhere between thirty-five and forty million dollars.

Mr. VEST. And here is an appropriation of $126,378,800 by the first section of this bill in addition.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state that the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] to the Army bill appropriates $6,000,000, and the trouble I find is in reconciling in these several ways the general question of fortifications in my own mind. I think, therefore, it would be advisable to have this matter go over.

Mr. REAGAN. When this matter was before the committee I gave my consent and approval to the reporting of the bill by the Senator from Oregon. I felt all the time that proper arrangements ought to be made for the protection of our principal seaports and for putting the country in that condition of defense which would not make us feel unequal whenever any question of negotiation arises between our country and others. But I want to suggest to the Senator from Oregon that when the Army appropriation bill was up the other day, and the amendment was offered by the Senator from Connecticut, appropriating about $6,000,000 to enable the Government to make first-class steel guns, I supported that amendment, and supported it with a statement that I thought there was no probability of this passing, and doing that much towards the defense of the country than the present bill. On account of its appropriating a less amount of money I would like to see that bill acted upon, to know whether that amendment is to become a law, and I should like to see the results of the action on the fortifications bill before this bill is acted upon. While I gave my approval to the reporting of this bill I would be glad, if it met the approval of the Senator from Oregon, that it should be laid aside for the time being.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, while for a month we have scarcely had a quorum of the Senate, I have been in attendance each day waiting to get a vote upon this bill. I desire soon to leave the city and to be absent from the Senate for a time, and it would be very inconvenient for me to have the consideration of this bill postponed to the time mentioned by the Senator from Kansas.

I listened with some impatience to the debate a week ago last Friday on the Army appropriation bill. When that bill was under discussion and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] was anxious to secure a vote upon his amendment, although greatly interested in the subject, I refrained from occupying the time of the Senate with any remarks. I did not intend at this time to further discuss the bill under consideration. After much consideration of the subject, the Senate Committee on Coast Defenses matured and reported a bill, which was introduced by myself. It was submitted to the Secretary of War for his criticism, and by him to the Chief of Engineers, to the Chief of Ordnance, and to the Board of Engineers in New York City, and received the approval of them all.

The Secretary and every officer and board expressly approved the provision of the bill for an appropriation of the entire amount estimated for this work to be expended from year to year as required.

I have before me the minutes of the meeting of the Committee on Coast Defenses, at which I was authorized to report this bill, which show that on the first ballot Messrs. HAWLEY, HISCOCK, MCPHERSON, and HAMPTON voted for Senate bill 19. That was a bill to appropriate something like $9,000,000.

Mr. DAWES. Is it in order to state what was done in committee?

Mr. DOLPH. Perhaps not; but it has already been done, and I will say, inasmuch as the Senator from New Jersey has undertaken to state what he did in committee, that the minutes show that he changed his vote and voted for Senate bill No. 62 after having voted for the smaller bill.

This bill adopts the plan recommended by the Board on Fortifications and other Defenses, appointed by the President under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1885. It makes an appropriation of the entire amount estimated by the board as required for the fortification of twenty-seven ports. It has been on the Calendar for about three or four months, and it has been the unfinished business before the Senate for something like a month. The report was printed in the RECORD when I first called up the bill for consideration. I think the Senate is prepared to vote upon it, and if it is proposed to enter upon this work at all, this bill should be passed.

We may differ concerning some subjects relating to coast defenses (and I am sorry to say that we differ as to the necessity of coast defenses), but there are some facts that can not be controverted. No one will deny that the United States to-day is utterly defenseless against an attack by the most insignificant naval power of the world. We have some 5,000 miles of seacoast, not including Alaska, with numerous harbors which will admit of the entrance of the gunboats and smaller warships of Great Britain and other European powers, and large harbors on both coasts that will admit of the largest war-ships of Great Britain, France, Germany, and Italy, and upon the shores of these harbors magnificent cities with costly public edifices and palatial residences and the accumulated wealth of a century, all of which could be destroyed in a few hours by the engines of destruction which are carried by modern war-ships. With no guns for the Army, and if we had them, with no fortifications on which they could be mounted but what could be converted into a heap of ruins by a few well-directed shots from a 5-inch steel rifle, we should be, in the case of a foreign war, at the mercy of the enemy until we could permanently obstruct the entrances to our harbors or could provide guns and fortifications.

From the fortified harbors of Halifax and Bermuda the great war-ships of Great Britain menace our Atlantic coast and our commerce upon the Great Lakes, and from Esquimault on Puget Sound a battery of 80-ton Armstrong guns, either now or will shortly frown upon our unprotected coasts across the straits of Juan De Fuca, and her great war-ships under cover of these batteries menace our commerce on Puget Sound and on the Pacific Ocean.

I desire to insert in the RECORD a list of vessels, classified according to draught of water and the ports which they can enter upon our coasts, Atlantic and Pacific, with the tables accompanying it, found in the report of the Board on Fortifications and other Defenses.

The paper is as follows:

LIST OF VESSELS CLASSIFIED ACCORDING TO DRAUGHT OF WATER AND THE PORTS WHICH THEY CAN ENTER.

Class A.—Foreign vessels drawing 25 feet and over: Vessels of Class A, drawing between 26 feet and 30 feet, can enter the following-named ports at half tide: Eastport, Me.; Rockland, Me.; Belfast, Me.; Bucksport, Me.; Camden, Me.; Bath, Me.; Portland, Me.; Portsmouth, N. H.; Rockport, Mass.; Gloucester, Mass. (outer harbor); Marblehead, Mass.; Provincetown, Mass.; New Bedford, Mass. (outer harbor); Newport, R. I. (outer harbor); New London, Conn. (lower harbor); Fort Pond Bay, Long Island; Gardiner's Bay, Long Island; Napeague Bay, Long Island; Smithtown Bay, Long Island; Huntington Bay, Long Island, Oyster Bay, Long Island; Hampton Roads, Virginia; Key West, Fla.; Santa Barbara, Cal.; Monterey, Cal.; San Luis Obispo, Cal.; Santa Cruz, Cal.; Crescent City, Cal.; San Francisco, Cal.; Benicia, Cal.; Trinidad, Cal.; Mendocino City, Cal.; New Dungenness, Wash.; Olympia, Wash.; Seattle, Wash.; Steilacoom, Wash.; Port Townsend, Wash.

Vessels of Class A, drawing from 25 feet to 26 feet, can enter the following-named ports at half tide, in addition to those above mentioned: Salem, Mass.; Boston, Mass.; Hempstead Bay, Long Island; New York; Lewes, Del. (breakwater); New Orleans, La.

Class B.—Foreign vessels drawing from 20 to 25 feet—Vessels of Class B, drawing less than 25 feet and more than 24 feet, can enter the following-named ports at half tide, in addition to those before mentioned: Baltimore, Md.; Port Royal, S. C.; Vallejo, Cal.; Astoria, Oregon.

Vessels of Class B, drawing less than 24 feet and more than 23 feet, can enter the following-named ports at half tide, in addition to those before mentioned: Bristol, R. I.; San Diego, Cal.

Vessels of Class B, drawing less than 23 feet and more than 22 feet, can enter the following-named ports at half tide, in addition to those before mentioned: Providence, R. I.; Norfolk, Va.; Wilmington, Del.; Chester, Pa.; Philadelphia, Pa.

Vessels of Class B, drawing less than 22 feet and more than 21 feet, can enter the following-named ports at half tide, in addition to those before mentioned: Wood's Holl, Mass.; Tampa, Fla.

Vessels of Class B, drawing less than 21 feet and more than 20 feet, can enter the following-named ports at half tide, in addition to those before mentioned: Vineyard Haven, Mass.; Pensacola, Fla.

Class C.—Foreign vessels drawing from 15 to 20 feet.—Vessels of Class C, drawing less than 20 feet and more than 19 feet, can enter the following-named ports at half tide, in addition to those before mentioned: Calais, Me.; Nantucket, Mass. (outer harbor); Washington, D. C.; Annapolis, Md.

Vessels of Class C, drawing less than 19 feet and more than 18 feet, can enter the following-named ports at half tide, in addition to those before mentioned: Edgartown, Mass.; Fall River, R. I.; Mobile, Ala.; Kalama, Oregon.

Vessels of Class C, drawing less than 18 feet and more than 17 feet, can enter the following-named ports at half tide, in addition to those before mentioned: Bangor, Me.; Portland, Oregon.

Vessels of Class C, drawing less than 17 feet and more than 16 feet, can enter the following-named ports at half tide, in addition to these before mentioned: Perth Amboy, N. J.; Charleston, S. C.; Smithville, N. C.; Apalachicola, Fla.

Vessels of Class C, drawing less than 16 feet and more than 15 feet, can enter the following-named ports at half tide, in addition to those before mentioned: Stonington, Conn.; New Haven, Conn.; St. Mary's, Fla.

Class D.—Foreign vessels drawing less than 15 feet.—Vessels of Class D, drawing less than 15 feet and more than 14 feet, can enter the following-named ports at half tide, in addition to those before mentioned: Richmond, Va.; Beaufort, N. C.; Fernandina, Fla.

Vessels of Class D, drawing less than 14 feet and more than 12 feet, can enter the following-named ports at half tide, in addition to those before mentioned: Plymouth, Mass.; Barnstable, Mass.; Savannah, Ga.; St. Augustine, Fla.; Galveston, Tex.; Newport, Oregon; Empire City, Oregon.

Vessels of Class D, drawing less than 12 feet and more than 8 feet, can enter the following-named ports at half tide, in addition to those before mentioned: Newburyport, Mass.; Bridgeport, Conn.; Little Egg Harbor, N. J.; Atlantic City, N. J.; Edenton, N. C.; Plymouth, N. C.; New Berne, N. C.; Wilmington, N. C.; Georgetown, S. C.; Jacksonville, Fla.; Cedar Keys, Fla.

CLASS A.—Foreign vessels drawing 25 feet and over.

NOTE.—Sister ships, of same draught, are bracketed.

Name of ship.	Maximum draught.	Name of ship.	Maximum draught.
ENGLAND.		ENGLAND—continued.
Armored.	′ ″	Armored.	′ ″
Sultan	27 11	Téméraire	27 2
Devastation	27 6	Dreadnaught	26 9
Thunderer		Triumph	26 7
Rodney	27 3	Alexandra	26 6
Howe		Nelson	26 6
Benbow		Superb	26 5
Camperdown	27 3	Inflexible	26 4
Anson		Collingwood	26 3
Renown	27 3	Colossus	26 3
Sanspareil		Edinburgh

CLASS A.—Foreign vessels drawing 25 feet and over—Continued.

Name of ship.	Maximum draught.	Name of ship.	Maximum draught.
ENGLAND—continued.		ITALY—continued.
Armored.	′ ″	Armored.	′ ″
Neptune	26 1	Dandolo, Duilio	28 0
Swiftsure	26 1	Palestro, Principe Amadeo	25 5
Northampton	25 9
Imperieuse, Warspite	25 6	RUSSIA.
Unarmored.		Armored.
Shah	26 8	Admiral Nakimoff, Alexander II	25 9
Inconstant	25 6	Minin	25 6
		Vladimir Monomack, Dmitri Donskoi	25 0
FRANCE.		Moskwa	25 0
Armored.		Admiral Arkass, Catharine II, Sinope, Tchesme	25 0
Friedland	29 11
Trident	29 10
Colbert	28 6
Richelieu	27 10	GERMANY.
Marceau, Hoche, Magenta, Neptune	27 3	Armored.
Amiral Duperré	26 9	Kaiser, Deutschland	26 0
Charles Martel, Brennus	26 8
Amiral Baudin, Formidable, Duguesclin, Vauban	25 3	SPAIN.
		Armored.
Unarmored.		Vitoria	27 4
Tourville, Duquesne	25 0	Numancia	26 7
		Sagunto	25 11
ITALY.
Armored.		AUSTRIA.
Italia, Lepanto, Andrea Doria, Ruggiero di Lauria, Francesco Morosini, Re Umberto, Sicilia	28 11	Armored.
		Custoza	26 9
		Tegetthof	26 7
		Kaiser	26 3
		Erzherzog Albrecht, K. Erzherzog Rudolf	25 3
		TURKEY.
		Armored.
		Hamidieeh, Messudieh	25 6

CLASS B.—Foreign vessels drawing from 20 to 25 feet.

Name of ship.	Maximum draught.	Name of ship.	Maximum draught.
ENGLAND.		FRANCE—continued.
Armored.	′ ″	Unarmored.	′ ″
Ajax, Agamemnon, Conqueror, Hero	24 0	Sfax	24 8
Audacious, Invincible, Iron Duke	23 8	Naïde	23 0
Rupert	23 7	Dubordieu	22 8
Shannon	23 6	Iphigénie	22 4
Orlando, Undaunted, Australia, Narcissus, Galatea	22 0	Aréthuse	21 7
Polyphemus	21 3	Duguay-Trouin	20 6
Belle Isle, Orion	21 1	ITALY.
Unarmored.		Unarmored.
Raleigh	24 7	Flavio Gioia, Amerigo Vespucci	21 6
Hecla	24 3
Bacchante	23 9	RUSSIA.
Boadicea	23 8	Armored.
Euryalus	23 3	Peter Velikij	24 9
Rover	23 0	Not named	23 0
Iris	22 1	General Admiral	23 0
Mercury	22 0	Herzog Edinburgh	23 0
Leander and 3 others of class	20 6
Mersey and 3 others of class	20 0	GERMANY.
		Armored.
FRANCE.		Preussen, Friedrich der Grosse	24 7
Armored.		Hansa	21 7
Dévastation, Foudroyant	24 11	Unarmored.
Redoutable	24 10	Leipzig, Prinz Adalbert	21 7
Turenne, Bayard, Terrible, Requin, Indomptable, Caïman	24 10	SPAIN.
La Galissonnière	23 10	Armored.
Victorieuse, Triomphante	22 8	Zaragoza	24 11
Thétis	21 10	Not named	24 8
Tonnerre, Fulminante, Furieux	21 4	Mendez Nunez	22 0
		Unarmored.
		Aragon, Castilla, Navarra, Reina Cristina, Reina Mercedes, Alfonso XII	24 0

CLASS B.—Foreign vessels drawing from 20 to 25 feet—Continued.

Name of ship.	Maximum draught.	Name of ship.	Maximum draught.
AUSTRIA.		AUSTRIA—continued.
Armored.	′ ″	Unarmored.	′ ″
Ferdinand Max	21 6	Fasana	20 4
D. Juan d'Austria, Kaiser Max, Prinz Eugene	20 9	Donau, Saida	21 0
Hapsburg	(?)
Salamander	(?)	JAPAN.
Unarmored.		Unarmored.
Radetzky, Laudon	23 7	Noëbi	21 6

CLASS C.—Foreign vessels drawing from 15 to 20 feet.

Name of ship.	Maximum draught.	Name of ship.	Maximum draught.
ENGLAND.		RUSSIA—continued.
Armored.	′ ″	Unarmored.	′ ″
Torpedo ram (Polyphemus type, not named)	19 9	Vitiaz, Rinda	18 0
Glatton	19 3	Africa	17 0
Cyclops, Gorgon, Hecate, Hydra	16 4	Europa	17 0
		Krejser	16 6
Unarmored.		Asia	16 6
Calypso, Calliope	19 11	Opyt	16 0
Opal and 5 others of class	19 7 to 18 8	Dzigit	15 8
Comus and 8 others of class	19 3 to 18 6	GERMANY.
Modeste and 4 others of class	18 4 to 17 6	Armored.
Thetis	17 6	Sachsen, Bayern, Wurtemburg, Baden	19 8
Tenedos	16 10	Oldenburg	19 6
Heroine and 6 others of class	15 9	Unarmored.
		Bismarck, Blücher, Stosch, Moltke, Gneisnau, Stein	19 8
FRANCE.		Freya	19 0
Armored.		Carola, Olga, Marie, Sophie	18 4
Tigre, Bouledogue	19 7	Ariadne, Luise	17 1
Tempête, Vengeur, Tonnant	16 9	Alexandrina	16 5
		a Not named
Unarmored.		b Not named
Champlain	18 9	c Not named	(?)
Du-petit-Thouars	18 8	d Not named
Lapérouse, Nielly, Primauguet, D'Estaing	18 8	AUSTRIA.
La Clocheterie	18 8	Unarmored.
Fabert	18 4	Zrinyi, Aurora, Frundsberg	17 8
Sané, Seignelay, Forfait, Villars, Roland, Magon	18 4	HOLLAND.
	17 3	Armored.
Rigault de Genouilly	17 1	K. der Nederlanden	19 0
Éclaireur	17 0	Unarmored.
Vaudreuil	16 1	Doggersbank, J. Wilham Friso, Atjeh, Tromp	20 0
Hugon, Kerguelen, Beautemps Beaupré, Duchaffaut, Condor, Epervier, Faucon, Vautour	15 11	K. Emma der Nederlanden, De Ruyter, Van Speyk	19 6
	15 6	Van Galen	18 0
	15 5
	15 5	DENMARK.
ITALY.		Armored.
Unarmored.		Helgoland	18 0
Stromboli, Etna, Tripoli, Grito	19 4	Iver Hvitfeldt	17 6
Vesuvio	19 0	Tordenskjold, Sister ship	15 0
Giovanni Bausan	18 6	Unarmored.
Savoia	17 0	Fyen	18 0
Christoforo Colombo	16 8	St. Thomas	17 0
Staffetta	15 5
RUSSIA.		SWEDEN.
Unarmored.		Armored.
Pamjat Markurija	19 8	Svea	15 6

CLASS C.—Foreign vessels drawing from 15 to 20 feet—Continued.

Name of ship.	Maximum draught.
SWEDEN—continued.
Unarmored.
	′ ″
Balder	19 6
Saga	18 4
Freja	16 6
TURKEY.
Armored.
Fethi Bulend	18 0
Mukademi-i-hair	18 0
Idjilalieh	17 0
GREECE.
Unarmored.
Amiral Miaulis	17 0
PORTUGAL.
Armored.
Vasco de Gama	19 0
Unarmored.
Alfonso de Albuquerque	18 0
BRAZIL.
Armored.
Riachuelo	20 0
Aquidaban	18 0
Unarmored.
Cruzador "B"	18 6
Guanabara	17 10
Almirante Barroso	17 0
Trajano	15 6
ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.
Armored.
	′ ″
Almirante Brown	20 0
Not named	20 0
CHILI.
Armored.
Almirante Cochrane, Blanco Encalada	19 8
Huascar	16 0
Unarmored.
Esmeralda	18 6
CHINA.
Armored.
Ting Yuen, Chen Yuen	20 0
Unarmored.
Hae-An	20 7
Nan Thin, Nan Shuin	18 0
Techi Yuen	15 9
Yang Wei, Chao Yuen	15 0
JAPAN.
Armored.
Fu So	18 3
Kon Go, Hi Yei	17 6
Unarmored.
Naniwa, Takachiho	18 6
Tsu Kushi	17 0
Kaimon	15 10

CLASS D.—Foreign vessels drawing less than 15 feet.

Name of ship.	Maximum draught.
ENGLAND.
Unarmored.
	′ ″
Wild Swan and eleven others of class	14 10 to 14 3
Fantome and five others of class	14 7 to 13 11
Scout, Fearless	14 6
Archer and six others of class	14 6
Dolphin, Wanderer	14 0
Reindeer and five others of class	14 0
Arab	13 9
Ramble and two others of class	13 7
Lily	13 6
Flamingo and three others of class	13 2 to 12 11
Swallow and sister ship	12 0
Albacore and two others of class	11 6
Curlew, Landrail	11 0
Redwing and nine others of class	11 0 to 10 6
Swift, Linnet	10 11
Coquette and six others of class	10 11 to 10 4
Cygnett and eleven others of class	10 9 to 10 6
Ariel, Zephyr	10 6
Frolic and three others of class	10 0 to 9 6
Staunch and twenty-seven others of class	6 9 to 6 1
Medina and eleven others of class	6 0
FRANCE.
Armored.
Achéron, Cocyte, Phlegeton, Styx	11 10
FRANCE—continued.
Armored.
	′ ″
Fusée, Grenade, Mitraille, Flamme	10 4
Unarmored.
Hussard, Dumont d'Urville	13 8
Bouvet	12 10
Parseval	12 10
Milan	12 9
Bisson, La Bourdonnais, Chasseur, Voltigeur	12 9
Inconstant, Papin, Fulton	12 8
Boursaint	12 8
Volage	11 8
Comète, Gabes, Lion, Scorpion, Météore, Aspic	10 6
Vipère	9 10
Lionne	9 6
Sagittaire, Capricorne	8 6
Crocodile	9 4
Lutin, Lynx	9 4
Étoile, Bombe, Couleuvrine, Dague, Dragonne, Flèche, Lance, Sainte-Barbe, Salve	8 4
Alert and seven of class	4 0
ITALY.
Unarmored.
Rapido	12 8
Scilla, Cariddi	12 6
Pietro Micca	11 9
A. Barberigo, M. A. Colonna	10 3
S. Veneiro, A. Provana, Guardiano	10 2
Sentinella	5 11

CLASS D.—Foreign vessels drawing less than 15 feet—Continued.

Name of ship.	Maximum draught.
RUSSIA.
Armored.
	′ ″
Vice Admiral Popoff	14 0
Novgorod	3 2
Unarmored.
Opritchik	16 3
Razbojnik	14 11
Najezdnik	14 6
Zabijaka	14 4
Strelok	14 3
Plastun, Vjestnik	14 0
Ingul	12 5
Jermak, Tunguz	11 0
Bobr, Sivoutch	9 6
Wichr	7 8
Burun, Tuchu, Kartech, Bruja, Groza, Grad, Snjed	7 2
Oltjow	7 1
Doschd	6 7
Ersch, Jorsch	6 8
GERMANY.
Armored.
Brummer, Bremse, Viper, Wespe, Biene, Scorpion, Mücke	10 6
Basilisk, Camäleon, Crokodil, Natter, Salamander, Hummel	10 2
Unarmored.
Blitz, Pfeil	13 6
Adler
Zeiten	11 7
Habicht, Möwe	11 5
Albatross, Nautilus	10 10
Cyclops	9 10
Wolf, Hyäne, Iltis	9 10
SPAIN.
Armored.
Duque de Tetuan	6 11
Puigcerda	6 7
Unarmored.
Jorge Juan, Sanchez Barcaiztegui	15 0
Velasco, Conde del Venadito, Cristobal Colon, Don Juan de Austria, Infanta Isabel, Isabel II, Ulloa, Concha, Elcano, General Lezo, Magellanes	11 4
AUSTRIA.
Armored.
Maros, Leitha	3 7
Unarmored.
Panther, Sister ship	14 6
Zara, Spalato	13 9
Sebenico	12 0
Lussin	12 0
Albatross, Nautilus	11 10
HOLLAND.
Armored.
Draak	11 0
HOLLAND—continued.
Armored.
	′ ″
Haai, Wesp, Luipaard, Panter, Hyaena	9 10
Matador	9 10
Isala, Rhenus, Moza, Merva	4 2
Unarmored.
Alkmar	14 8
Also a large fleet of gunboats	11 9 to 6 3
DENMARK.
Armored.
Gorm	14 5
Odin	14 1
Unarmored.
Ingolf	12 5
Also a considerable fleet of gunboats	7 6 to 5 6
NORWAY.
Armored.
Thrundvang, Thor, Odin	12 0
Scorpionen	11 4
Mjoelner	11 3
Unarmored.
Sleipner, Ellida	9 9
Also a considerable fleet of gunboats.
SWEDEN.
Armored.
J. Ericsson, Thordon, Tirfing, Loke	11 10
Seven monitor-type gunboats	8 2
Three casemate gunboats	5 5
Unarmored.
Dratt	9 6
TURKEY.
Armored.
Hesber	5 6
GREECE.
Unarmored.
Hellas	14 9
Hydra	5 6
Spetzia	5 6
PORTUGAL.
Unarmored.
Reina de Portugal, Mindello	14 9
12 gun-boats	13 1 to 10 2
BRAZIL.
Armored.
Sete de Setembro, Javary, Solimões	12 6
	11 10
Unarmored.
Primero de Marco, Imperial Marinheiro	11 7
Paranahyba	11 6
Marago	6 0
Guarany	5 6
Traripe	5 0
Iniciadora	5 0
Cananea and 3 others of class	4 0
Manaos	3 10

CLASS D.—Foreign vessels drawing less than 15 feet—Continued.

Name of ship.	Maximum draught.	Name of ship.	Maximum draught.
ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.		CHINA.
		Unarmored.
Armored.	′ ″		′ ″
		11 iron and steel gunboats (alphabetical class)	9 6 to 7 6
Patagonia	12 9
Los Andes, El Plata	10 6	JAPAN.
Unarmored.		Unarmored.
Maipu	8 6	Katsuragi, Yamato, Musashi	15 0
CHILI.		Seiki	13 0
		Iwaki	(?)
Unarmored.		Jiu Gei	(?)
		Amagi	(?)
Magellanes	13 0

While we are defenseless against an attack by a naval power, the great countries of Europe are providing not only for defense, but for aggressive warfare. The question is whether this defenseless condition of our coasts is to continue. I confess I am surprised by what I see to-day, and I was surprised the other day to hear the remarks of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The Senator from Missouri emphatically stated that we did not need coast defenses; and I think it was a fair inference from what the Senator from Kansas said that he believed it, too. If those Senators could insure us for all time against a foreign war, I would agree with them that we do not need coast defenses. But, sir, who can foretell the future? How can we judge of the future but by the past? Wars have been and wars will be. Even the United States, with the peaceful disposition of its inhabitants and its isolated situation, has not been able to avoid foreign wars; and Europe is either in a continual state of war or in preparation for it.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon a question at such time in his speech as it will suit him to answer.

Mr. DOLPH. I would prefer to finish what I am saying.

If the Senator from Missouri believes, as he said, that there is no danger of a foreign war, that is a sufficient reason why he should vote against any proposition for the defense of our coasts; but I submit when he says, as I understood him to say, that when war is once upon us the courage and patriotism and genius of the American people will provide a timely defense, that is mere idle declamation. It will take years to build guns, to construct fortifications, and instruct the personnel for coast defense.

We may prophesy of the coming of the millennium, we may dream of peace, we may sleep in fancied security only to be awakened by the rude alarm of war. The history of the race has been the history of constant conflicts of arms, and the same passions which have animated mankind in the past continue to animate them now. If the Senator believes that there is no danger of foreign war, and as he said that since the unsuccessful attempt to destroy the Union all cause of dissension and sectional jealousy and strife is removed and we have an indissoluble Union of indestructible States, and that there is no longer any danger of civil war, why should we maintain the Army and the costly personnel of the Navy? Why not set the example at once to the other nations of the earth of beating our swords into plowshares and our spears into pruning-hooks?

The Senator talks about the courage and patriotism and genius of the American people. Sir, he has no greater admiration for the heroic qualities of the American people than myself. They are not lacking in courage; they are not lacking in genius or any other quality that goes to make up the most perfect type of manhood; but when the hour of peril comes to this country, if it ever comes, when a fleet of modern war ships is in the harbor of New York or San Francisco, and with those great projectiles of a ton weight, fired 10 miles or more with a muzzle energy of 62,000 foot-tons, are mowing down the rows of costly brick and granite and marble edifices and scattering death and destruction, of what avail, I would ask the Senator, would be the courage or the patriotism or the genius of the American people?

Sir, millions of infantry and of cavalry and of artillery, with such appliances for coast defenses as we now have, would be as powerless before those bolts of destruction as before the thunderbolts of the Almighty, or as were the people of Charleston a year ago last August, when their residences were shaken down over their heads by the forces of nature.

In any foreign war of the future the great battles will be fought between the modern war-ships of the enemy and our fortifications, with powerful guns managed by an instructed personnel, and an army of a million of men would be mere idle spectators.

Senators are not consistent. If the Senator from Kansas believes as he said, that there never will be a hostile shot fired on this continent, why did he the other day advocate an appropriation of $400,000 to purchase dynamite guns? And if the Senator from Missouri believes there is no danger of foreign war, why does he support appropriations for the Army and the military and naval schools?

But, Mr. President, leaving this question for the moment, I desire, now that I have the floor, to say something upon the subject of guns. The Senator from Kansas said that built-up steel rifles were out of date.

Mr. PLUMB. For coast defense.

Mr. DOLPH. For coast defense. Mr. President, either the whole world is wrong and the costly experience of the leading nations of Europe for the last twenty-five years has led to no practical results, and the eminent officers of the ordnance and engineer corps of the armies of Europe are ignorant and corrupt, and the reports of the actual service of steel guns in war have been falsified and the reports of our own boards, the Gun Foundry Board, the Board on Fortifications and other Defenses, the committee of the Senate of which the honorable Senator from Connecticut was chairman, and the committee of the House of which Mr. RANDALL was chairman, have led us in the wrong direction, and the officers of our Army and Navy know nothing about their business, or the Senator from Kansas was wrong and the breech-loading built-up forged steel rifle is the best gun that ever was invented or built.

Who says, except the Senator from Kansas, that the steel rifles are out of date? The South Boston Iron Works, who want to force on the Government worthless cast-iron guns because they can make them and can not make steel rifles; inventors, proprietors of inventions such as the multicharge gun, or the dynamite gun, who want to force untried inventions upon the Government. But, sir, no officer of the Army, no board appointed to inquire into the question has said that they are out of date. If we are to provide forged-steel rifles, how shall it be done?

All the Government officials whose duty it is to make recommendations to Congress upon the subject and who are qualified to judge agree concerning it. The Gun Foundry Board reported in favor of forged-steel rifles for the Army and Navy; that the forged and tempered steel ingots, rough bored and rough turned, should be procured by contract from private parties, and that the Government should fabricate the guns, assemble the parts, and for that purpose there should be erected one gun factory for the Army and one for the Navy, the one for the Navy at the Washington navy-yard, and the one for the Army at Watervliet arsenal.

The Hawley committee investigated the whole subject and concurred in this report. The Board on Fortifications and other Defenses, at the head of which was our present Secretary of War, and which has been eulogized on this floor as the best qualified board that ever considered the subject of coast defenses, approved the report of the Gun Foundry Board, not only as to the character of guns, but as to the manner in which they should be procured.

Further than that, Congress has acted on their recommendations, so far as the Navy is concerned, and if my recollection serves me—I have not looked at the RECORD—the Senator from Kansas himself made a motion to increase the appropriation in the last naval appropriation bill for the purpose of providing a plant at the Washington navy-yard for the gun factory there. He certainly favored it, and I think he offered it. I may be mistaken as to the bill, however.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator allow me a word in that connection?

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly.

Mr. PLUMB. The two propositions are entirely different. I have no doubt in the present stage of the art of gun-making a built-up steel gun is the most potent weapon for ships; but that is not true, as I believe, to-day—that is to say, not certainly true as to guns for coast defense, which are to be mounted on land. I believe myself that within the last twelve months there has been what amounts to a practical revolution in the art of gun-making—that is, of defensive processes, so far as they relate to operations on the coast. I do not refer now to the operation of batteries in the field, or anything of that kind, but to stationary works on land, and I do believe that the steel gun to-day is comparatively out of date for works of that kind. I admit that a few years ago I thought differently. I think there has been great progress in that time, and great changes have been made.

Even at that time any one who carefully and thoughtfully investigated the subject must have arrived at the conclusion that the steel gun itself was an imperfect weapon compared with the best explosives known which were supposed to be used in connection with it. I will venture to say that a steel gun has never been made that can be safely relied upon to fire two shots an hour for twenty-four hours consecutively. I do not mean to say that is a permanent defect, but that is the best we have. That is what we want. I speak of that to show that what we had in the very highest state of the art up to the time when it became possible, as I think, to use dynamite and other high explosives as projectiles was a very imperfect weapon.

Now, if the Senator will allow me, in the shape of an interruption (which is hardly regular), to say further as the conclusion of what I have to say on this subject as to its merits, that I believe if we start in on this expenditure we shall go through with it even, if it shall be demonstrated a hundred times over before we conclude it that every dollar which we expend is thrown away. Why? Because the extra-conservative, the propulsive power of that conservatism which is embodied in the Army, is such that once committed to a scale of expenditures they will go through with it; once committed to a form of explosive or form of gun, they will go through with it to the end, even if the whole world were against them on that subject.

In that same line, I have no doubt, and I do not think the Senator from Oregon has, that the intelligent opinion of the world to-day is to the effect that the heavy ironclads which have been built at an enormous expense by all the continental powers and by England, are absolute failures, except in harbor defense; that not one single one of them will ever sail away three leagues from the shore for any purpose whatever.

The smallest torpedoes, the smallest charge of dynamite, managed with the least possible human ingenuity, will blow any one of them out of the water. And beyond all that, Mr. President, the power of offense is greater than that of defense, and the very moment it is determined that 30 inches of steel plate can be carried upon a frame, that very moment the inventive genius of offense determines upon a msisile and upon a power of propulsion which will destroy that 30 inches of steel plate.

So I do not take any stock at all in this idea of the ironclads of the Old World. They will never moor outside of their own harbors, and I believe to-day, as is stated in a letter which I quoted the other day, that the dynamite guns, recently tried on the Hudson, which can be bought for $40,000 apiece, will furnish a more complete defense to every harbor in the United States than any ten field guns that could be mounted there; in the first place, by reason of the fact that it throws a dynamite shell which contains a power greater than that which can be communicated by any possible charge of powder, and in the next place by reason of the fact that the propulsive power is compressed air, that enables it to be thrown with greater accuracy than by the combustion of powder.

In reply to what was said the other day, that it was not believed to be possible to use this projectile firing a shell 2 miles while a shell could be carried 7 miles from the deck of a ship, it is fair to remark that no ship when it comes within 7 miles of any city on the Atlantic coast will come less than a mile of the nearest land point. So if one of these dynamite guns struck water within a mile of the farthest possible range where one of these ships could be stationed, and still reach any of our cities, it would be within the fullest and most accurate aim of the dynamite guns. But these are not guns for anything except for long range. They do not comprise the flotilla of the sea. They are not good for a fusilade; they are no use at short range; they are only good for long range. Any one is perfectly safe within a thousand yards of any ironclad, however formidable at 7 miles away. So these dynamite guns could be stationed within a mile and be just as safe from any projectile thrown from such an ironclad as it would be at Gibraltar itself.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I ask the Senator a question? Every one of these great ironclads carries scores and hundreds of Nordenfeldts and Gatlings, so that you might as well get into a hornet's nest as to get within a half mile of them.

Mr. PLUMB. Well, I know the Senator from Connecticut is by his constitution, by his prejudices, by his prepossessions, determined to make it out that the steel gun to-day is the great gun of Europe, and therefore to be used by us. I can not get him away from that. That un-American idea will go with him to his grave.

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not say much about theory. I rely upon the practical results which have been demonstrated.

Mr. PLUMB. What I have said is the final, ultimate fact that the ironclads are good only at long range; they are not good for close-by, and these dynamite guns, even if what the Senator says is true, might just as well be sheltered beyond any power of being reached by the ironclads within a mile as they could be at 10 miles. The best bulwark of defense, the best weapon of defense, the best possible force is a dirt fort 100 feet thick, which is proof against any shot, and no amount of steel can possibly injure it. Therefore, Mr. President, we have it in our power to take these vessels as they come, but they are are not going to come.

All this talk, I think, with due respect to those who utter it, grows out of the fear which was developed years ago when it was supposed that the ironclads represented the highest type of offensive and defensive warfare, which they do not. The British Government will not build any more of them; the Italian Government will not launch more of them; the French Government will not launch more of them. To-day America is proceeding upon the modern models; the ship, iron, it is true, but not with the bulwark of iron, which itself represents, not protection against a great projectile, but which with a vessel that has clean heels with which it can get away, and with a big gun at long range, will be very effective. But we here are proceeding to-day upon the theory that was in vogue five or ten years ago, when we have waked up out of a Rip Van Winkle sleep, out of the controversy between the House and Senate a few years ago. We are proceeding as though we supposed to-day the British were likely to come over here and invade us, as a very unfortunate outcome of the debate on the fisheries treaty. I confess I do not have any fear of that kind, although I say it probably with some deference, but I feel when we start upon anything we shall do it in such a way that we shall accommodate ourselves from day to day, and from time to time, to the very best that can be produced by the inventive genius of this country; but if we start out with a preconceived plan to spend $120,000,000, we shall spend it on that plan no matter what is determined about its being valuable or otherwise. That is what I object to.

Mr. DOLPH. The upshot of all the Senator's speech is that he proposes to do nothing and let the defenseless condition of our coasts continue. I have said emphatically enough (and it can not be successfully controverted, for the Senator is not supported), that modern steel rifles are effective guns. They have been used in actual war. They are the guns by which Alexandria was attacked and shelled and the fortifications there destroyed, and some of the modern war ships of Great Britain have not only crossed the sea, but have from time to time been stationed on Puget Sound, where they threaten our commerce.

I noticed this morning in one of the city papers a statement of the "Navies of Europe;" it is in the Post of this morning:

An English bluebook has just been issued which gives the number of vessels contained in the navies of the different maritime powers of Europe, as follows:
Battle-ships—England, 49; France, 30; Italy, 21; Germany, 13; Russia, 9.
Cruisers—England, 87; France, 67; Germany, 29; Russia, 25; Italy, 21.
Torpedo vessels and boats—England, 176; France, 140; Italy, 138; Russia, 97; Germany, 96.

I am not myself in favor of building armored battle ships. I think until we have fortified our coasts and have provided a navy of cruisers, cruisers that in case of war would scour the seas, destroy the commerce of the enemy, we ought not to expend money for these great armored ships.

But to return to the question of guns, I hold in my hand the report I have already referred to of the Board on Fortifications made in January a year ago, in which they say on page 11:

Cast iron as material has been advocated on account of supposed cheapness and facility of manufacture, but the sole method of arriving at a sound conclusion in this respect is a careful analysis. A comparison has been made between breech-loading cast-iron rifles and Krupp's steel rifles, which by no means sustains the claims either of superior economy or facility of manufacture for a cast-iron gun of power equal to one made of steel. On the other hand, the difference of weight against the cast iron appears to be 66 per cent. of the weight of the steel gun, a defect which would greatly interfere with facility of maneuver and rapidity of fire. It would be singular if, after waiting for so many years with the alleged intention of profiting by the experience of nations foremost in the manufacture of heavy ordnance, we should begin the long-neglected defense of the country with accepting a material for guns which, after having been tried by leading European nations, has been deliberately rejected in favor of steel. The board emphatically recommends steel.

Also, reading from page 32 of the same report:

As to guns, the committee believes that nothing less than the most approved types for each caliber is admissible, and that for the most important sites not less than 60,000 foot-tons of muzzle energy will be imperatively necessary. These guns should be made of steel and manufactured in this country. They should possess the merits of simplicity, strength, and a construction approved by experience.

Mr. President, in a speech which I made in the Senate on July 28, 1886, I inserted a table taken from a speech made by Hon. JOSEPH WHEELER, of Alabama, in the House of Representatives, showing the numbers of guns afloat at that date ranging 10 miles or upward owned by foreign nations, with the names, the maximum armor, the draught of ship, the number and caliber of guns, and also guns afloat ranging from 9 to 10 miles, which I submit now as a part of my remarks.

Guns afloat ranging possibly ten miles or upward.

Nation.	Ship.	Maximum armor.	Draught.	Guns.	Caliber.
		Inches.	Ft. in.	No.	Inches.
England	Conqueror	12	24 0	2	12
	Colossus	18	26 3	4	12
	Edinburgh	18	26 3	4	12
	Collingwood	18	26 3	4	12
	Rodney	18	25 3	4	13.5
	Benbow	18	27 0	2	17
	Camperdown	18	27 3	4	13.5
	Howe	18	27 3	4	13.5
	Anson	18	27 3	4	13.5
	Hero	12	24 0	2	12
	Renown	18	27 3	2	16.25
	Sanspareil	18	27 3	2	16.25
France	Amiral Duperré	21.6	26 9	4	13.4
	Dévastation	15	24 11	2	10.6
	Foudroyant	15	24 11	4	13.4
	Terrible	19	24 7	2	16.5
	Tonnant	17¾	16 9	2	13.4
	Vengeur	13¾	16 9	2	13.4
	Am. Baudin	21¼	26 0	3	16.5
	Formidable	21¼	26 0	3	16.5
	Furieux	19¾	21 7	2	13.4
	Indomptable	19¾	24 7	2	16.5
	Caïman	19¾	24 7	2	16.5
	Requin	19¾	24 7	2	16.5
	Marceau	17¾	27 3	2	13.4
	Hoche	17¾	27 3	2	13.4
	Magenta	17¾	27 3	2	10.6
	Neptune	17¾	27 3	3	13.5
	Brennus	17¼	25 8	4	13.4
	Charles Martel	17¼	26 8	4	13.4

Guns afloat ranging possibly ten miles or upward—Continued.

Nation.	Ship.	Maximum armor.	Draught.	Guns.	Caliber.
		Inches.	Ft. in.	No.	Inches.
Italy	Italia	18.9	30 3	4	17
	Lepanto	18.9	29 6	4	17
	Ruggiero di Lauria	17.7	25 11	4	17
	Andrea Doria	17.7	29 6	4	17
	F. Morosini	17.7	25 11	4	17
Germany	Salamander	8	10 2	1	12
	Natter	8	10 2	1	12
	Hummel	8	10 2	1	12
China	Ting Yuen	14	20 0	4	12
	Chen Yuen	14	20 0	4	12
Russia	Catherine II	24	27 0	4	12
	Tchesme	24	25 0	4	12
	Sinope	24	25 0	4	12
Denmark	Tordenskiold	8	15 0	1	13.8

Guns afloat ranging possibly nine to ten miles.

England	Inflexible	24	25 4	4	16
France	Friedland	7½	29 4	2	10.6
	Redoubtable	14	24 10	4	10.6
	Duguesclin	9½	24 10	4	9.5
	Bayard	9½	24 10	4	9.5
	Turenne	9½	24 10	4	9.5
	Vauban	9½	24 10	4	9.5
	Fulminant	13	21 4	2	10.6
	Tonnerre	13	21 4	2	10.6
Italy	Duilio	21.7	28 0	4	17
	Dandolo	21.7	28 9	4	17
Germany	Sachsen	17.25	19 8	4	10.2
	Baiern	17.25	19 8	4	10.2
	Wurtemberg	17.25	19 8	4	10.2
	Baden	17.25	19 8	4	10.2
	Wespe	8	10 2	1	12
	Viper	8	10 2	1	12
	Biene	8	10 2	1	12
	Mücke	8	10 2	1	12
	Scorpion	8	10 2	1	12
	Basilisk	8	10 2	1	12
	Cameleon	8	10 2	1	12
	Crocodil	8	10 2	1	12
Brazil	Riachuelo	11	20 0	4	9

I also submitted a list, taken from the same source, of the different harbors on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, with the cities upon them, containing a statement of facts which are interesting, which I also ask to insert as a complete and unrefutable answer to what has been said by the Senator from Kansas in regard to the possibility of any war vessel of a European power being able to approach and bombard one of our seacoast cities without coming within range of a dynamite gun. It is as follows:

NEW YORK AND BROOKLYN.

These cities have a population of 1,772,962. One of these vessels could float in 30 feet of water off Coney Island, beyond the range of any guns in our forts, and throw projectiles into the business part of the city of New York and to nearly every point in the city of Brooklyn.

I would like to ask what would be the effect if a shell weighing 2,000 pounds should drop and burst at the corner of Wall street and Broadway, and what would be the further effect of a few hundred such shots in New York and Brooklyn. And yet such an occurrence is at this moment a mechanical possibility.

BOSTON.

This city has a population of 369,832. An enemy's vessel could lie in 30 feet of water 5 miles from the State-house in Boston and throw these massive shells into Lynn, Chelsea, Charlestown, the navy-yard, East Boston, Boston, Cambridge, South Boston, Roxbury, and Dorchester.

PORTLAND, ME.

This city, with a population of 35,080, could be shelled by any one of the vessels described in the table, lying off to the northeast of the city, or to the southeast, in more than 30 feet of water, at distances varying from 3 to 4 miles.

NEW BEDFORD.

This city has a population of 26,845. Any vessel with such an armament as I have described could lie off in the outer harbor, at almost any point to the southward of the city, in 27 or 30 feet of water, at any distance the commander might select, from 2 to 6 miles, destroy the bridge to Fairhaven, and either exact a heavy contribution or lay the city in ruins in a few hours.

PROVIDENCE.

The harbor at this point has numerous shoals, which, in the absence of a pilot, would render it impossible for a hostile ship to approach it safely nearer than 6½ miles (Conimicut Point), but the high-powered guns I have referred to could readily destroy the vast and important manufacturing industries which center at Providence, with its population of 104,857, from even a greater distance.

NEW HAVEN.

This city has a population of 62,882. Vessels could rest securely 4 miles from the city, in 30 feet of water, and destroy it in a very few hours.

NORFOLK.

The population of this city is 21,926. Vessels drawing 26 feet of water can approach to within 7 miles, and, with high-powered guns, shell every foot of the city.

BALTIMORE.

This city, with a population of 332,313, is, in a great measure, protected by the difficulties of access, but it would be possible for vessels drawing not more than 15 feet to sail abreast of the city, and some of the vessels carrying guns of 10 miles range draw but 10½ to 15 feet.

WASHINGTON.

The capital of our country was once in the hands of British troops. It is 200 miles from the ocean, but vessels drawing 19 feet can sail to the city. Its population is 159,871.

RICHMOND.

This city has a population of 63,600. It is 150 miles from the mouth of James River, which has 13 feet of water to the city.

CHARLESTON.

This city has a population of 49,984. There are many points not more than 7 miles from the city from which vessels drawing 25 feet could shell the city.

SAVANNAH.

This city, with a population of 30,730, could be easily protected. Only very light-draught vessels can approach nearer than 10 or 12 miles.

PENSACOLA.

This city has but 6,845 population, but it is important on account of its excellent harbor. A position could be taken in 30 feet of water south of Santa Rosa Island, the distance being not more than 5 miles from the city.

MOBILE.

This city has a population of 29,132, and could very easily be protected, but at present there is water sufficient to float vessels drawing less than 16 feet to within 4 miles of the city.

NEW ORLEANS.

This city has a population of 216,090. It is 110 miles from the sea, but the largest vessels could sail abreast of the city. The control of the jetties would be a strong element in the defense of the city. Small craft not drawing over 5 feet could enter the lake in rear of the city.

GALVESTON.

The population is 22,248. Vessels drawing 30 feet could select any position not more than 3 miles off and shell the city.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The population is 233,959. The harbor, which is one of the finest in the world, could in the present condition of the defenses be entered, but even if this could not be done, vessels carrying high-powered guns could rest outside the bay in 30 feet of water, at a distance of 6 or 7 miles, and shell the city.

I have referred to the larger cities, but it might be well to mention that our smaller seaports are equally defenseless.

Each of the following-named cities could be shelled by the foreign vessels I have named:

PACIFIC COAST.

Port Townsend, Steilacoom, Seattle Harbor, Olympia, New Dungeness, Astoria, Kalama, Portland, Newport, Empire City, Crescent City, Trinidad, Mendocino, Benicia, Vallejo, Santa Cruz, Monterey, San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, and San Diego.

GULF COAST.

Brownsville, Clarksville, Brazos Santiago, Apalachicola, St. Mark's, Tampa Bay, Cedar Keys, and Key West.

ATLANTIC COAST.

St. Augustine, Jacksonville, Fernandina, St. Mary's, Port Royal, Georgetown (S. C.), Smithville, Wilmington, Beaufort, Plymouth, New Berne, Edenton, Annapolis, Hampton Roads, Lewes, Atlantic City, Little Egg Harbor, Perth Amboy, Bridgeport, New London, Stonington, Bristol, Newport, Fall River, Vineyard Haven, Nantucket, Provincetown, Barnstable, Plymouth, Lynn, Marblehead, Salem, Gloucester, Rockport, Newburyport, Portsmouth, Saco, Bath, Camden, Bucksport, Bangor, Belfast, Rockland, Eastport, and Calais.

I mention these places merely for the purpose of corroborating the statement I have previously made relative to the defenseless condition of all our seaports.

Mr. President, this statement shows that a large proportion of our seaport cities could be destroyed by an enemy's ships without coming within range of a dynamite gun.

It seems to be easier to obtain an appropriation for something that has not been recommended by the engineers or has been condemned by them, or something that is still in the experimental stage, than to secure an appropriation of a dollar for legitimate coast defenses. My recollection of the last fortification bill which was considered in the Senate is that it contained a provision for a contract with the South Boston Iron Works for the manufacture of cast-iron guns, which have been condemned for years by the officers of the Engineer and Ordnance Corps of the Army. There has been introduced into the House of Representatives during the present session a bill (H. R. 6525) to authorize the Secretary of War to contract with the South Boston Iron Works for cast-iron guns and mortars to meet the exigencies of public defense, and a most remarkable thing connected with it is that there has been printed and distributed to members of Congress a brief on behalf of the company like a formidable law brief, an argument by Mr. Eppa Hunton, a lawyer of this city, who undertakes to enlighten Congress and to make it believe that it is necessary for coast defense that the Government should contract with the South Boston Iron Works for guns which are not recommended by the Secretary of War or the officers of the Army or Navy. The Army appropriation bill as it came to the Senate contains a provision that is advocated by the Senator from Kansas appropriating $400,000 for purchasing pneumatic dynamite guns. The New York Pneumatic and Dynamite Gun and Torpedo Company came before the House and asked for $4,000,000 to buy their guns. It seems that afterwards they were willing to take what the House gave them, 10 per cent. of the amount.

It would be interesting to know who compose this dynamite gun company. I think it would be a good thing for the Government to employ them to obtain an appropriation for legitimate coast defenses. They should succeed if they are influential enough to secure the adoption of an untried invention and to cause to be inserted in a regular appropriation bill $400,000 for the purchase of dynamite guns.

What are these dynamite guns? Guns in which compressed air is used in place of powder, firing a projectile, a large light shell with a range of a mile or at most from 1 to 2 miles, with low velocity, firing it into the air, a curved fire, and the projectile moves so slowly in the air that I am told a man on a small vessel, and I do not know but one of the great ironclads, could get out of the range of it after it was fired.

The Senator talks about accuracy of the fire of these guns. A board was appointed to investigate and report upon that gun, and the company declined to have an investigation under the supervision of an Army board. I have here copied, in a letter of the Chief of Ordnance to the Secretary of War, a letter from the president of the Dynamite Gun Company, in which he speaks about giving an exhibition of the gun "after a short delay to insure suitable weather;" that is to say, it is a fair-weather gun. Like a small craft that can only go to sea when the wind is fair, you can only fire a shell from the dynamite gun with any degree of accuracy when the wind is favorable, because when the shell was flying through the air a gale of wind might blow it out of its course. This gun was tried under the supervision of the company in New York harbor, and they managed to throw a shell a mile, a shell containing a large charge of some high explosive, dynamite probably, and to destroy an old wooden schooner, but they had six months in which to sight it and range it as at a fixed target, and upon the strength of this they claim that the gun has accuracy of fire. That is not evidence. That is different from firing it at a rapidly moving object.

The effect of the shot does not depend upon the power of the gun. If you were to take the dynamite contained in one of the shells and throw it down on the deck of a vessel you would destroy it. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] asks if I am not unjust in my criticism. I am not unjust. The proposition to buy dynamite guns involves the question of their merits, and I am fortified with proofs to substantiate my assertions.

I am willing that the War Department shall make all the needed experiments. They may try this pneumatic dynamite gun, they may investigate the invention of Lieutenant Grayden and others for firing shells loaded with dynamite from powder guns, and all the inventions that are offered, which promise good results. I am in favor of a $600,000 appropriation as now contained in the Army appropriation bill for the purposes of making experiments. Let the War Department experiment with this gun; but I do not want to see $400,000 expended for a gun that has never been tried under the supervision of the Army, and may yet prove a failure, or become worthless by further improvements.

Then again the Senator talks as if when Great Britain or other foreign powers were making a war on us they would run their ironclads right up within a mile of these dynamite guns to be destroyed. I have heard it said that because these guns could be fired without noise and without smoke the enemy would not know where they were and would be drawn into ambush to be destroyed. But, sir, do you suppose that the naval vessels of Great Britain, rendezvoused at Bermuda or at Halifax, would attack New York, or Boston, or Charleston, or Savannah, or any of our seaports without knowing precisely where our batteries were located?

Then, if we had the dynamite guns where would we put them? I asked that question of an officer of the Ordnance Corps the other day. "Well," he said, "I suppose we would have to put them upon the masonry structures we now have. We can not put them in casemated batteries because they have a curved fire." They are fired in the air.

Now, suppose we should put the dynamite guns upon some of the existing fortifications in New York Harbor. A British vessel steaming down in twenty-four or forty-eight hours from Halifax, would lie 5 or 6 miles out of the range of the dynamite gun, and with a shot from one of these built-up forged steel rifles that are condemned by the Senator from Kansas, would demolish the fortifications, the guns, and the plant to operate them.

Connected with this plant there is a steam engine. It is necessary to keep a steam engine for every gun to compress the air.

The Senator himself the other day admitted that the dynamite guns were probably not the best guns of the kind that could be made; that there would probably be improvements made in them; and if that is so, what is the justification for buying guns that are in an experimental stage?

Then he spoke of the invention, which was mentioned by the Senator from Alabama, of a Mr. Smith, who had invented a gun to fire dynamite shells with powder. That gentleman is not the only inventor of that kind of a projectile. I hold in my hand the report of three trials of Lieutenant Graydon's invention, which is an invention for firing shells loaded with dynamite from powder-guns. They may be fired from our rifle-guns, or our smooth-bore guns, from any guns we have, and from steel-rifles when they are manufactured. Two of these investigations were had by direction of General Sheridan under the supervison of Maj. Gen. O. O. Howard, at San Francisco. Since that time another trial has been made under the supervision of a board of officers convened by the War Department, and I read briefly from the report. The official report says:

Shells charged with dynamite by Lieutenant Graydon were successfully fired from the gun and serious damage was inflicted on the turret—

That was a turret of armor prepared expressly to test guns—

this being especially the case in the third round, when penetration and disruptive effect were combined.

The two main points of merit claimed for the invention were thus substantiated:

1. To fire a dynamite shell from a heavy rifled cannon with the full service charge of black powder as the propelling force without injury to the cannon.
2. To obtain full penetration by the shell before the dynamite was exploded in the target.

By this invention dynamite is fired the whole range of the gun. But even if these pneumatic dynamite guns had been advisedly recommended by the War Department as no longer experimental, they are not to take the place of built-up forged-steel guns. They are not to be any part of the system of fortifications recommended by the Board on Fortifications and other Defenses and by the Secretary of War. On the contrary, the Secretary expressly says that the appropriations for these dynamite guns will not lessen the appropriation necessary for the coast defenses one dollar.

To establish what I say I will submit an extract from the last annual report of the Secretary of War, in which he recommends an appropriation for forged-steel guns. In speaking of the steel guns, he says:

It is believed to be of vital importance that appropriations be annually made by Congress until our present need of modern guns is supplied and the aid that our steel industry demands is assured. As a step in this direction an appropriation of $1,500,000 for the forgings of 8-inch and 10-inch B. L. steel guns has been recommended in the estimates. This sum would procure the steel for about fifty 8-inch and forty 10-inch guns, and should be made available until expended. In this connection the Chief of Ordnance remarks as follows:

"It is not necessary to enter into a discussion of the necessity for seacoast armament, nor of the possibility of future disbandment of armies and the settlement of international controversies with the pen instead of the sword. What may be in the near or distant future in this regard the most astute statesman can not divine. Our dealings, however, are with the immediate present, and if the recurrence of wars are likely to follow ample preparation, Europe in arms would seem to indicate that the days of peaceful arbitration have not yet been reached. It can hardly be recommended that while waiting for this future possibility our shores should continue unguarded and at the mercy of the most insignificant belligerent. Rams and torpedoes and dynamite guns are powerful auxiliaries in harbor defense, but the war conditions yet obtaining will not dispense with the hard hammering of heavy shot moving with high velocity, because these auxiliaries themselves need protection of a most perfect character.

The dynamite guns with a limited range can not be left to the mercy of the much longer-reaching guns of the enemy's ships. The attacking ships must be kept at a distance by heavy guns and long-range mortars, the comparatively low cost of mortars enabling us to compensate by numbers for any lack of accuracy of fire. As a projectile force gunpowder yet stands supreme. It strikes its terrific blow at long distances; its arm reaches many miles; it plants its blows with unerring certainty. We can not dispense with such a force, so readily handled, so thoroughly understood. Heavy cannon are therefore a necessity, and must be provided, and our unprotected coasts demand that they be provided speedily.

"These necessities also demand that they be of the most approved quality; cannon of steel, which have been adopted by the world after most thorough and satisfactory experiment and trial; cannon that will place this nation on an equality with the most powerful. It will cost money, but not more than the loss to the cities of New York and Brooklyn from one day's bombardment. * * * The positive and practical experience of the Midvale Works and the Cambria Works is to the extent of their facilities equal to that of foreign establishments, and these results are in a large degree the outcome of high standards, close specifications, and most rigid supervision and inspection, enforced by this Department. I venture the opinion that such important work can not be intrusted to better or more skillful hands than to the officers of the Ordnance Department of the Army."

He also refers to this dynamite gun, and this is the recommendation in his annual report:

The purchase of one of these guns of 15-inch caliber—

That is, of the pneumatic dynamite gun—is recommended in order to determine the full extent of their fitness for coast defenses.

Then he proceeds to give a history of the gun. It will be seen that the Secretary recommends the purchase of one gun for the purpose of experimenting. But after this New York pneumatic dynamite gun company had made its proposition to the House of Representatives, a communication was sent to the House committee by the Secretary of War, in which he said substantially, as was stated by the Senator from Kansas the other day, that he did not regard the gun as any longer experimental; but he does say what I read in recommending the purchase of these guns:

It is not intended by this recommendation to supplant the previous recommendations of the Department, which call attention to the great needs of the country in the matter of coast and harbor defense, and the necessity of having guns of modern pattern and construction of great power and range. The pneumatic dynamite gun does not and can not take the place of such heavy ordnance, but will be a most important and necessary auxiliary thereto.

I read from the recommendation upon which the appropriation contained in the Army appropriation bill is based, which the Secretary of War says must not and can not take the place of appropriations for these heavier or longer-ranged guns.

Not being able to find in any printed document the recommendations, which had been made by the officers of the Ordnance and Engineer Corps upon this subject, I went to the War Department to get copies of the correspondence. I obtained a copy of a letter addressed to the honorable Secretary of War by General Benét, Chief of Ordnance, on the 24th of April, 1888, from which it appears, as I have said, that this gun company failed to make arrangements for trials of their gun before a board of engineers of the Army appointed for the purpose, and the board was dissolved. The Chief of Ordnance, in his letter to the Secretary of War, repeats his recommendation concerning this gun to the Secretary of War which was embodied in his annual report. He says:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., April 24, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the paper transmitted from Hon.

R.W. TOWNSHEND, chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, containing the proposition of the Pneumatic Dynamite Torpedo Gun Company, of New York for an appropriation of $4,000,000 for the procurement of one hundred guns, with their accessories, etc., and to report:

The Department's knowledge of the pneumatic dynamite torpedo gun and connection with its history, are as follows: The first of these guns was designed and constructed by Mr. Mefford, of Ohio, in 1883, and was brought to Fort Hamilton, N. Y., for trial in January, 1884. On March 15, 1884, on an application from the parties interested, the Secretary of War, in a letter to General Hancock, directed that "as the trials of this gun have been conducted thus far under the direction of Colonel Hamilton, they should be continued under him, assisted by Lieutenant Zalinski." The last-named officer has since that time been on this detached duty, actively engaged in experimenting with and developing this gun. A report of the trials, etc., of this gun by Lieutenant Zalinski having been received at the War Department in December, 1885, through General Hancock, commanding the Military Division of the Atlantic, the Secretary of War, under date of January 26, 1886, appointed a board of officers for the purpose of arranging for and witnessing the trials of the pneumatic dynamite torpedo gun at Fort Lafayette, New York Harbor, and "to report on its merits and suitability for the military service."

Under date of July 9, 1886, and in modification of his letter of February 8, 1886, the president of the Pneumatic Dynamite Torpedo Gun Company addressed the following letter to this board:

"PNEUMATIC DYNAMITE GUN COMPANY, OFFICE 44 BROADWAY,
"New York, February 9, 1886.

"GENERAL: In compliance with the request made by your board at its session of February 8, I have the honor, as president of the Pneumatic Dynamite Gun Company, to state that the report made to the honorable Secretary of War by Lieut. E. L. Zalinski upon his experiments and tests of the pneumatic torpedo gun, owned by this company, at Forts Hamilton and Lafayette, embodies essentially what is claimed for this weapon, its character and uses.

"The company will (at is own expense) give an exhibition or exhibitions for your board, to establish the correctness of the report and the conclusions based thereon.

"These trials will be made at such time as may be convenient to your board, after a short delay to insure suitable weather, and will confer with you or any representative of the board designated to arrange the time and details of the same.

"It is understood that such trials will be limited to the 8-inch gun now at Fort Lafayette.

"With your permission, we would like to substitute this for the letter handed to you yesterday on this subject.

"I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"S. D. SCHUYLER, President."

"General HENRY L. ABBOT, Chairman, etc."

The board adjourned February 8, 1886, to meet at the call of its chairman, when the gun should be ready for trial.

The proceedings of the board show that "no further correspondence was had with the company, but Maj. George W. McKee, junior member and recorder, was designated by the board as the officer to confer with the company or its representative and make arrangements for the trial.

"Major McKee had several interviews with Lieutenant Zalinski, the company's representative, and visited Fort Lafayette to ascertain what progress was being made in getting the gun ready. When the board adjourned the distinct understanding was that the company would give notification just as soon as the gun was ready. In May or June the president of the board was informed by Lieutenant Zalinski that the proposed trial had been unavoidably delayed by strikes and other causes, and that due notification would be given when the company was ready to substantiate its claims. Hearing that Lieutenant Zalinski was making some trials with the gun before a naval board, Major McKee wrote him several letters, asking him when he would be ready for the trial of the dynamite gun, but Lieutenant Zalinski utterly failed to say he was ready or appoint any time in the future for the trial."

In consequence of the failure of the company to make the necessary arrangements this board was dissolved by direction of the Secretary of War, under date of January 6, 1887, and the official connection of the Department with the invention ceased.

In September, 1887, on the request of the president of the Pneumatic Dynamite Torpedo Gun Company, the ordnance board on duty at New York was directed by the Department to be present and witness an experimental exhibition of their system at Fort Hamilton, New York Harbor, which had been arranged at the request of the Secretary of the Navy. This exhibition consisted in firing six shots from the pneumatic dynamite gun at a wooden schooner anchored at a distance of 1,864 yards. These firings, while very limited in extent, yet gave such promising results that this bureau, in its last annual report to the Secretary of War, stated its views as follows with respect to the pneumatic dynamite torpedo gun:

"This modern ballistic engine has been so far perfected as to render it practicable to project to a considerable distance, by means of compressed air, large charges of high explosives with a safety, certainty, and accuracy of fire which render it a source of great danger to the decks of hostile ships. More than this, an electric fuze, capable of being actuated by contact with salt water, has been devised and tested with promising success, which would more than double the value of the gun as a weapon for coast defense.

"If, as it is claimed, charges of 500 pounds of explosive gelatine or dynamite can be projected to a distance of from 2 to 3 miles and detonated after entering the water, with a fair degree of probability that the explosion will occur immediately under or near the hull of a ship below the armor protection, the most destructive effects are to be expected as ships of war are at present constructed. The result is much the same, though with perhaps less certainty of action, as that sought to be attained in defending a channel by means of fixed mines, but with the obvious advantage of being able to shift at will, as it were, the location of the 'torpedo field' to any point within range, taken up by the enemy's ship. The latter is thus placed at the disadvantage of always being compelled to cruise over an area beset by submarine mines so long as it is within range of the gun. It is not intended, by implication even, that fixed mines are to be abandoned, but on the contrary that the two systems supplement each other into a vastly more powerful combination of explosives and become a most essential adjunct to the heavy guns of great range and power, which are of a necessity as armor-piercing weapons the basis of all armament for coast defense. I would recommend the purchase of one of these guns, say of 15-inch caliber, for exhaustive trials of gun and projectile, with the object of determining the full extent of their capacity and fitness for coast defense."

The above views are deemed very liberal when the fact is considered that not a shot has been fired under the direct inspection and supervision of this Department, and that, with the exception of witnessing the destruction of the wooden vessel by the Ordnance Board, the results of trials have reached the Department second hand. It is hardly to be expected that on such meager practical information a recommendation can be made for the immediate expenditure of $4,000,000.

With regard to the needs of coast defense, for these dynamite guns, should their fitness be established after a full and careful trial, as suggested above, questions at once arise as to the function to be assigned to them and their relative position in the line of defense, requirements for site, mounting, protection, etc. The determination of these questions is a matter for consultation with the Engineer Department of the Army, who, under the Secretary of War, devise the plan of defense for our different harbors, construct the fortifications, and locate and operate the submarine mines planted in the channels. In order that a system of these torpedo guns may properly supplement without interfering with or detracting from the efficiency of the gun and mortar batteries or the fixed torpedo fields, the views of that Department should be had as to the requirements of the service for this type of gun and missile. It is more distinctly the duty of the Ordnance Department to ascertain by systematic trial the merits of various weapons and appliances, and to furnish on demand armament of approved type.

In view of these considerations I would recommend as follows:

First. That one or more pneumatic dynamite torpedo guns of different caliber, of the most approved pattern, with appurtenances and mounting complete, and three hundred shell, subcaliber or otherwise, and fuses for each gun, with the necessary quantity of high explosive, be procured for exhaustive trial of gun, projectile, and fuse, to enable this Department to decide upon the merits of the weapon as such. This is substantially as recommended in my annual report;

Second. That this paper be referred to the Engineer Department for an expression of its views and for recommendations as respects the employment of this system for coast defense; and Third. That as this system is but an auxiliary in coast defense and of secondary importance as compared with high-power steel guns and rifled mortars, there should be no reduction in the sums that may be appropriated for steel guns and mortars in order to procure dynamite guns. The more urgent need for inaugurating the production and supply of steel guns and mortars should stand first and foremost in any appropriations made for armament.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. V. BENÉT,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR.

This was dated April 24, 1888, and was addressed to the Secretary of War, and upon that the Secretary of War based his letter to the chairman of the House committee who reported the Army appropriation bill. I also submit the following extracts from the report of General Duane, Chief of Engineers, in which he substantially joins in the recommendation of the Chief of Ordnance:

[Third indorsement.]

OFFICE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
April 25, 1888.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.

The recommendations of the Chief of Ordnance are fully concurred in by me, namely:

"That one or more pneumatic dynamite torpedo guns of different calibers, of the most approved pattern, with appurtenances and mounting complete, and 300 shell, subcaliber or otherwise, and fuzes for each gun, with the necessary quantity of high explosive, be procured for exhaustive trial of gun, projectile, and fuze, to enable this Department to decide upon the merits of the weapon. This is substantially as recommended in my annual report."

* * * * * * *

"That as this system is but an auxiliary in coast defense, and of secondary importance as compared with high-power steel guns and rifled mortars, there should be no reduction in the sums that may be appropriated for steel guns and mortars in order to procure dynamite guns. The more urgent need for inaugurating the production and supply of steel guns and mortars should stand first and foremost in any appropriations made for armament."

I am not prepared, however, to recommend any extensive purchase of these or any torpedo guns, much less an appropriation of $4,000,000, until their efficiency has been more fully demonstrated.

The papers are returned herewith.

J. C. DUANE,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

A true copy.

CLINTON B. SEARS,
Captain Engineers, United States Army.

I will also, without reading, as they have been once printed in the RECORD, ask to have incorporated in the RECORD as part of my remarks the letters of the Secretary of War, of the Board of Engineers, New York, of the Chief of Engineers, and of the Chief of Ordnance, all of them approving of the bill which has been reported by the Senate Committee on Coast Defense, and which is now before the Senate, and emphatically approving of the proposition to appropriate the entire amount necessary for the fortification of the ports named in one bill.

The letters are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, January 28, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th ultimo, inclosing a copy of Senate bill 62, Fiftieth Congress, first session, "to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses," and requesting the views of this Department in regard to the proposition to appropriate in one bill the whole amount estimated for the works proposed, the proposition to adopt the report of the Fortifications Board of 1885 as to the character of the defenses until otherwise ordered by Congress, and as to whether the provisions of the bill are suitable for practical execution so far as the direction of the work will be under the control of this Department.

In reply I beg to transmit a report of the 3d instant from the Board of Engineers, and a report of the 11th instant from the Chief of Ordnance, suggesting certain amendments which are indicated in the inclosed copy of the bill, together with a report of the 6th instant from the Chief of Engineers, expressing the opinion that the appropriation in one bill of the whole amount estimated will result in the most economical and speedy completion of the works in question, that the proposition to adopt the report of the Fortifications Board as to the character of the defenses until otherwise ordered by Congress is judicious, and that the provisions of the bill, modified as suggested by the Board of Engineers, are suitable for practical execution as far as the direction of the work will be under the control of this Department.

The views of the Chief of Engineers and the recommendations of the Chief of Ordnance and of the Board of Engineers are concurred in by this Department.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. J. N. DOLPH,
Chairman Committee on Coast Defenses,
United States Senate.

THE BOARD OF ENGINEERS, ARMY BUILDING,
New York City, January 3, 1888.

GENERAL: The Board of Engineers, to which was referred by your indorsement of December 28, 1887, the letter of the Senate Committee on Coast Defenses of December 20, 1887, inclosing Senate bill 62 "To provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses," have the honor to report that it has carefully examined sections 1, 2, 3, and the first twelve lines of section 6, being so much of the bill as refers to the land or fixed defenses of the coast usually constructed by the Corps of Engineers, and beg leave to submit the following suggestions:

Section 1 enumerates twenty-seven positions upon our coasts designated by the Fortification Board of 1885 as ports "where defenses are most urgent," and appropriates in one sum the cost of the works for these ports as estimated by the board, namely, $126,377,800.

Section 2 divides the above sum into thirteen parts, one of which shall be available each year for thirteen years, beginning July 1, 1888, and ending June 30, 1901.

These sections appropriate in one bill the whole amount estimated for the works proposed, a change from the usual course followed in the construction of public works, but a change which, in the opinion of this board, will result in the most economical and speedy completion of the works in question.

All experiences in the construction of public works show that the great source of increased cost is the irregular and partial appropriations made for their erection. From the suspension of operations it often happens that completed work is badly damaged by natural causes, and upon resumption of operations has to be largely repaired or else entirely renewed.

This is also true of plant, tools, and appliances, while a still further source of expense is created by the dispersion of the workmen, who have become skilled in the several kinds of work in hand. With one appropriation made available in a term of years the work goes on continuously; advantage can be taken of the markets in the purchase of materials, and the entire work is finished in the shortest possible time and at the smallest cost.

It is suggested that in line 9 of section 2 the following words be added: "All of said sum upon appropriation to be available until expended."

In section 3, line 3, after the word "aforesaid," introduce the words "and the purchase of sites for the said fortifications, substantially;" so that it will read: "That said sum shall be expended under the direction of the President for the purpose of providing fortifications and other defenses for the ports aforesaid and the purchase of sites for the said fortifications, substantially in accordance with the recommendation of said board."

The Board on Fortifications of 1885 did not make any detailed plans for the fortifications of the several ports. They selected the ports "where defenses are most urgent," stated the number, caliber, and character of the guns to be mounted, the nature of the batteries, whether turrets, armored casemates, emplacements in barbette or mortar batteries, together with submarine mines, but did not give any dimensions, shape, figure, or site to the works or the number of guns in each description of battery. This will require careful study and may result in a diminution of certain calibers and an increase in others, and in the necessity of sites not now owned by the United States.

This latitude, it is suggested, should be given the President.

This board does not believe there should be any departure from the character of the fixed defenses suggested by the Fortification Board of 1885, namely: "Shore batteries, which may be armored turrets, revolving or fixed, armored casements and emplacements in barbette," "armed with powerful cannon needed to repel attack from the most formidable ships."

In section 6 it is suggested that, if an advisory board is to be organized, in line 8, after the word "Army," the words "skilled in fortifications, their armament, and its use" be inserted; so that it shall read: "* * * advisory board of not more than ten officers of the Army, skilled in fortifications, their armament, and its use, who shall be appointed by the President. * * *"

But it is thought a smaller board would be more efficient. It is also suggested that in section 6, line 10, after the word "pleasure," lines 11 and 12, and the first three words of line 13 be amended so as to read as follows: "All works as herein provided shall be done by contract or otherwise, as may be most economical and advantageous to the Government."

This is the language adopted by Congress for the construction of river and harbor improvements, and has been found to work with advantage to the United States.

The papers which were referred to the board in this case are herewith returned.

Respectfully submitted.

THOS. LINCOLN CASEY,
Colonel, Corps of Engineers.
HENRY L. ABBOT,
Colonel of Engineers, Bvt. Brig. Gen.
C. B. COMSTOCK,
Lieut. Col. of Engineers and Bvt. Brig. Gen.

Brig. Gen. J. C. DUANE,
Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army, Washington, D. C.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., January 6, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Senate bill No. 62, referred to this office for report, and in returning it invite attention to the report of the Board of Engineers herewith, the recommendations of which are concurred in.

It is believed that the appropriation in one bill of the whole amount estimated will result in the most economical and speedy completion of the works in question. Experience has fully demonstrated that any attempt to carry on and complete works of importance by means of small appropriations made at uncertain intervals has always resulted in great increase in cost if not in utter failure.

The proposition to adopt the report of the Endicott board as to the character of the defenses until otherwise ordered by Congress is regarded as judicious. The provisions of the bill, modified as suggested by the Board of Engineers, are considered suitable for practical execution so far as the direction of the work will be under the control of the War Department.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. C. DUANE,
Brigadier General, Chief of Engineers.

Hon. WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith Senate bill No. 62, first session, Fiftieth Congress, "to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses," and to report on those provisions relating to the manufacture and purchase of ordnance material.

Line 9 of section 2 should read as follows: "All of said sum to be available until expended."

In section 3, line 3, after the words "other defenses," add the words "and the armament therefor;" so that it shall read: "* * * for the purpose of providing fortifications and other defenses, and the armament therefor, for the ports aforesaid." * * *

In section 3, line 14, after the word "fortifications," add the words "or the armament therefor," so that it shall read, "any changes in the plans for the fortifications, or the armament therefor, of any of said ports." * * *

In section 6, line 7, after the words "for the same," insert the words "subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, shall be submitted for recommendation to," in place of the words "shall be approved by," so that it will read, "* * * the plans and specifications for the same, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, shall be submitted for recommendation to an advisory board * * *." This change makes the section consistent with existing law, and with section 3, providing for this board as advisory to the Secretary of War.

In section 6, line 8, after the word "Army," the words "skilled in fortifications, their armament and its use," should be inserted; so that it shall read:

"An advisory board of not more than ten officers of the Army, skilled in fortifications, their armament and its use, shall be appointed by the President. * * *."

In the same section, line 10, after the word "pleasure," lines 11 and 12, and the first three words of line 13, should be amended so as to read as follows:

"All work as herein provided, except when done at Government shops, shall be done by contract or otherwise, as may be most economical and advantageous to the Government."

In the same section, line 14, after the words "established at," substitute the words "Watervliet arsenal, New York," in place of the words "Frankford arsenal, Pennsylvania." The Watervliet arsenal was recommended as the most suitable site for a gun factory by the Gun Foundry Board of 1884. A re-examination of this site for the purpose of a gun factory, and also of the Frankford arsenal, Pennsylvania, was made during the past year by a special board of ordnance officers. This board also decided in favor of the superior eligibility, on the whole, of the Watervliet arsenal, and the Department has already concentrated some gun plant and commenced work at that point. (See pages 18 and 22, Report of the Chief of Ordnance for 1887, copy herewith.)

In the same section, line 21, after the word "tempered," insert the word "annealed;" so that line 21 shall read: "rough-bored, rough-turned, oil-tempered, and annealed steel."

In the same section, line 36, after the words "largest calibers," add the words "required under the advertisement;" so that it shall read as follows:

"* * * The time of delivery of the smaller calibers to commence at the expiration of not more than eighteen months and that of the largest calibers required under the advertisement at the expiration of not more than three years from the date of the acceptance of the contract * * *."

In establishing a plant for gun steel, and in commencing the manufacture of guns, both economy and efficiency, as well as ultimate success, will more surely result by beginning first with the smaller calibers and working up gradually, after some experience has been acquired, to the larger ones. (See page 3, report of House Committee on Ordnance and War-Ships, first session Forty-ninth Congress, copy herewith.) It is thought that the steel for guns of not more than 12 inches caliber should first be procured. With the experience and pecuniary help thus gained the manufacturers could produce more successfully the heavier masses required for the larger calibers, as 14 inches and 16 inches.

In the same section, lines 40 and 41, after the words "erect at the," substitute the words "Watervliet Arsenal, West Troy, New York" in place of the words "Frankford Arsenal, near Philadelphia, Pennsylvania."

In the same section, line 46, after the words "gun-carriages," substitute these words, "necessary equipments for said guns and gun-carriages," in place of the words "Ordnance equipment;" so that it shall read: "For finishing and assembling the guns adapted to modern warfare, up to and including the largest approved sizes, and for the manufacture of gun-carriages and the necessary equipments for guns and carriages for the Army * * *."

In the same section, line 47, after the words "million dollars," add the words: "And provided further, that to meet present necessities, and until the manufacturers of steel in the larger masses is sufficiently developed, the Secretary of War may, at his discretion, contract for cast-iron bodies for breech-loading, steel-hooped, rifled mortars, after due advertisement, and under the usual specifications required by the War Department for procuring cast-iron guns; the mortars to be fabricated at the gun factory as hereinbefore provided for, or by contract, as the Secretary of War may direct." The Board on Fortifications and other defenses reported that some seven hundred 12-inch mortars would be required. The Department has under test a 12-inch breech-loading, cast-iron, steel-hooped mortar, which has given satisfactory results, and it may be for the interest of the Government to make part of the mortars on a similar plan.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. V. BENÉT,
Brig. Gen., Chief of Ordnance.

Copy of bill amended as herein suggested inclosed herewith.

Hon. WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I deeply sympathize with my good friend from Oregon and all others who are so sensitive about attacks being made upon this great country by foreign nations. I have no possible fear. I can see no reason on earth which could induce any of the great powers of the world to engage in war with the United States. We are a peace-loving people. We are isolated from all other nations. England and Mexico are the only nations that could attack us from their own soil. We must give the English statesmen and rulers credit for common sense, for a desire to perpetuate their own independence and prestige and power among the nations of the world. England owes her power to-day more to her commerce than to any other thing. She must maintain that in order to maintain her prestige in the future. England knows, all intelligent Englishmen know, that within ninety days after a war was declared between the United States of America and Great Britain her commerce would be swept from the ocean, her prestige would be gone, and would not be restored for years, if ever.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri what we could sweep her commerce from the ocean with?

Mr. COCKRELL. We would build swift-going vessels that would do it. We would build vessels inside of six months or ninety days that would go upon the sea and drive her commerce from the ocean.

Mr. STEWART. Suppose we could not take the vessels out of port?

Mr. COCKRELL. Could not take them out of port! The idea that England, with her fleet, or Germany, or France, or England, France, and Germany combined could blockade all the ports of the United States where we build vessels is perfectly absurd and ridiculous.

Mr. STEWART. Where are your ship-yards to build them?

Mr. COCKRELL. We would build them on any river that is navigable. There would be no trouble about that. We have the ingenuity and the material and the skill to build vessels upon almost any of the navigable streams of the United States. Where did the rebels during the late war build and construct their vessels, and where did they send the commerce of the United States? Only three or four vessels did it.

Mr. TELLER. They were built in England, mainly.

Mr. CHACE. By their political allies.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a sample of what the Americans can do when American is pitted against American, and what would it be when American was pitted against any other nationality?

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator tell us where the rebels built any wonderful vessels during the war?

Mr. COCKRELL. The records show. The country knows it.

Mr. TELLER. No, I do not.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the distinguished Senator has represented his great State so long in the Senate of the United States and has been Secretary of the Interior and does not know anything about that, I do not propose to spend my time in trying to enlighten him.

Mr. TELLER. I believe they did build one clumsy vessel down here in Virginia, but it could hardly be called a vessel. I believe that was about all the extent of their building that they did not build across the water.

Mr. COCKRELL. England can not afford to attack us. She has no motive for attacking us. There is no reason why we should have a war with her. She would be the losing power.

Then you go to Mexico; and what would Mexico attack us for? There is no reason in the world why she should attack us. We have no danger from that source. We have no danger from France. How would France attack us? Would she come with her fleet around our coast?

Mr. President, this scare is simply ridiculous; it is farcical. It does not rise to any degree above that.

What is this bill? Let us examine it. It proposes to appropriate $126,377,800 as the beginning; not as the completion, but as the beginning of a system of fortifications.

Mr. DOLPH. It is to be appropriated to defend the twenty-seven principal ports.

Mr. COCKRELL. At the principal places named, I understand. I have read it all, and I am not speaking unadvisedly. I say the bill proposes to appropriate $126,377,800 for the fortifications at twenty-seven ports as the most urgently needed places. Others are to come in time, and where will it end? We are to have fortifications and torpedo-boats anchored in a continuous line around our entire seacoast.

Mr. President, look at the report of this board. I refer to the report of the Board on Fortifications or Other Defenses appointed by the President under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1885. On page 8 of that report it says:

> The subject of the defense of the coasts has usually been treated upon the supposition of the existence of a navy not equal to the fleets of the enemy, but sufficiently numerous to impose upon him the necessity of concentration and the avoidance of large detachments from his force; but this view of the case the board is not called upon to discuss, for it does not exist, and it will besides be found in the sequel that some of the ports named for defense will be strategic rendezvous for fighting ships of war, when these shall have been built in adequate numbers for operating in force against the enemy.

PORTS ARRANGED IN ORDER OF URGENCY.

Twenty-seven. They have been literally followed in this bill. The entire twenty-seven have been provided for in this bill. Now, what does the board say?

> The list of ports is not exclusively arranged in the order of commercial importance, some reference being had to the facility of defending certain sites and the greater or less period of time which this task might demand. Baltimore, Savannah, Wilmington, and others belong to the class where in an emergency obstructions might be improvised to check temporarily a hostile squadron.
>
> It is not possible to arrange the smaller ports always in the order of importance, also, because the necessity of a fortified harbor of refuge may be more urgent upon a long stretch of exposed coast, although the port there situated might be inferior in wealth and importance to others to which it has been preferred.
>
> The board, in limiting the list to the names above, does not wish it to be understood that there are no other places along the coast which are of the importance necessary to justify measures of defense. There are others, but the works of defense already existing at some of these, and the force of any probable attack which would be directed against them, do not make it necessary to call particular attention at this time to their condition and needs.
>
> The board, in stating "at what ports fortifications or other defenses are most urgently required," presents the following list.

Then they give the eleven ports where fortifications are most urgently required:

1. New York.
2. San Francisco.
3. Boston.
4. The lake ports.
5. Hampton Roads.
6. New Orleans.
7. Philadelphia.
8. Washington.
9. Baltimore.
10. Portland, Me.
11. Rhode Island ports in Narragansett Bay.

Those are the ports where fortifications are most urgently needed, and yet the committee have reported in favor of the entire twenty-seven, when this board itself, in its own judgment, only recommends eleven as urgently needed.

What does the board further say in regard to the kinds of fortifications?

> In the sequel the objects to be gained by the defense of the principal ports, as well as of others named in this report, will be commented upon. The board will now consider "the character and kind of defenses best adapted for each, with reference to armament," and "the utilization of torpedoes, mines, or other defensive appliances," taking up the subject in the order in which it is presented to it.
>
> The defenses, as to character and kind, with reference to armament, should be fixed and floating, one or both, according to locality, armed with powerful cannon needed to repel attack from the most formidable ships.

Then they go on and speak of floating defenses—not vessels, but floating defenses:

> The floating defenses mean floating batteries designed specially for operating in harbors or close to the land, armored more heavily and armed with heavier guns than any probable adversary.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> The shore batteries may be armored turrets, revolving or fixed, armored casemates, and emplacements in barbette.

Then the report goes on and speaks of the different kinds of fortifications, etc.

I hold in my hand the report of the committee made in this case, and in that report the specific recommendations in regard to each of these places is set out. They commence on page 10 of the report with a "list of ports, with description of fortifications and other defenses, with reference to armament, mines, torpedoes, etc." They give New York. I will read that:

> 1. New York.—This important port must be fortified at both entrances in the most thorough manner. Fortifications: Turrets, armored casemates, barbette batteries, mortar batteries. Submarine mines will form a part of the defense. Eighteen torpedo-boats are recommended for service in this harbor.

The proposed armament—the kind of guns—is given under the heads of caliber, kind, number, remarks, as follows:

Caliber.	Kind.	Number.	Remarks.
16-inch	110-ton guns	18	B. L. R.
14-inch	80-ton guns	2	B. L. R.
12-inch	53-ton guns	40	B. L. R.
10-inch	27-ton guns	29	B. L. R.
8-inch	13-ton guns	15	B. L. R.
12-inch	Mortars	141	Rifled.

Then the report goes on and gives the others, specifying particularly the kind of fortifications at each port. I find on calculation that one hundred and thirty-two torpedo-boats have been provided for in the bill—one hundred and thirty-two torpedo-boats, to be stationed at the various points designated. On page 17 of this report I find that the expenditures for these various purposes have been analyzed and arranged, being a consolidated statement, and under the head of land defense and armament are the subheads of masonry and earthwork, armor, structural metal, guns and mortars, carriages, floating batteries and their armament, submarine mines and their adjuncts, torpedo-boats, and then the total.

Now, taking these twenty-seven ports, the estimate for the land defenses, for masonry and earthworks, is $31,863,600; for armor, $20,300,000; for structural metal, $3,320,000; for armament, under the head of guns and mortars, $28,554,000, and then under the head of carriages, $9,411,800. We come then to floating batteries and their armament, $18,875,000. That much would be sunk. We come to submarine mines and their adjuncts, $4,334,000, a total waste. We come to torpedo-boats, and the estimate is $9,720,000, also thrown away.

Mr. President, these are enormous sums of money, and I say that it is exceedingly injudicious and unwise for this country to launch forth in any such enterprise as this. We all know that the Army and Navy favor this. Certainly they do. They favor anything that will add importance to their arm of the service. It is natural that they should. The Army would like to have fortifications all around the coast; the Navy would like to have a large number of vessels. There is no question of that.

Mr. President, I see no necessity for these works; none in the world. This is not the time to enter upon them. I say if we enter upon this system now and spend these $126,377,800, inside of twenty years we shall pronounce three-fourths of it an absolute waste, at the very lowest possible calculation.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator permit me to ask how it would be wasted?

Mr. COCKRELL. Because it will be of no use then.

Mr. DOLPH. Why?

Mr. COCKRELL. What will your floating batteries be worth, what will your torpedo-boats be worth, and many other things that will have been absolutely wasted?

Mr. DOLPH. Why have we an army?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will show you why.

Mr. DOLPH. That is what I should like to know.

Mr. COCKRELL. They will be wasted just as thousands of old iron armament therefor;" so that it shall read: " * * * for the purpose of pro- | States where we build vessels is perfectly absurd and ridiculous.

cannon that we have now are useless and thrown away, wasted, just as all the fortifications we have ever built are now utterly worthless. They are of no use. We spent millions upon them.

The Senator wanted to know why we had an army. Does anybody suppose that our army of 25,000 men is depended upon by the United States to defend the honor and integrity and glory of this great country in a war with any foreign power? It never has been. The volunteer soldiers are the men who fight the battles of this country and upon whose shoulders its permanence depends. The regular Army is simply a nucleus, and has always been treated as such. It is to guard the Indians, principally. That is about the only use we practically have for it.

Mr. DOLPH. There is no use for it for that purpose any more.

Mr. COCKRELL. That has been the case, and the Senator doubtless has been scared over the Indians as he is now over foreign nations.

But the standing Army is for no such purpose. It is simply a nucleus. The Navy is not to rival the navies of the world. I want to know from the Senator if he proposes that we shall fortify the United States of America as France and England and Italy and Austria and Russia fortify their frontiers and their borders? I want to understand that proposition. If that is the proposition, we understand this bill. If it is not the proposition, I can not understand it.

Are we, the United States, a republican Government, at peace with the world, afraid of nothing, not assailable successfully by all the nations of the world combined, to set the example of a frontier fortification like France, like Germany, like Austria, like Russia, and other nations, where they have standing armies of from 500,000 to a million of men?

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator aliow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. Are you in favor of any coast defenses, and if so, what?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not now, sir. I am not in favor of the expenditure of a dollar right now.

Mr. MITCHELL. Would the Senator wait until the surplus was disposed of and we had no surplus?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, that surplus! Oh, that surplus! Oh, the hungry horde that are rushing for that surplus every time, and every aspirant for notoriety of any kind has his long arms out for that surplus. Every job that can be brought into Congress has been brought here. Every man who has sensitive nerves and fears the great powers of the world and wants to make this a great country proposes to spend the surplus in fortifying!

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator said a moment ago that this was not the time to enter upon the construction of coast defenses. I want to know why it is not the time, and if it is not the time now, when is the time?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not the time because we are only in the infancy in the kinds of defense that will be necessary in the future. We are only in the infancy of the manufacture of arms and of explosives. All the money that England, France, Germany, Austria, and Italy have spent in armored vessels and ironclads has been thrown away. I think recently France has introduced a gun which far surpasses anything, and it will cause all the other nations to adandon their present system of rifles.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator would wait then on his philosophy until human ingenuity is exhausted?

Mr. COCKRELL. I would wait until there were some circumstances which justified the United States in apprehending war, and I do not believe that day will ever come.

Mr. President, I appreciate the scare of both the Senators from Oregon and other Senators. They have cities. Millions of dollars would be spent at those cities. Their constituents want the money spent there. Their constituents are urging them up to secure these appropriations. It is all proper in their view, it is all very nice to have this surplus distributed all over the country and spent here and there. But what use have we had for fortifications since 1812? We have existed a good long while as a nation.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator knows that we prosecuted a system of fortifications to 1875.

Mr. COCKRELL. But it is all gone.

Mr. DOLPH. So are the clothes we wore then all gone.

Mr. COCKRELL. They are all gone; we never used them. It would have been far better to have distributed the money among the people than to have thrown it away in the way it was done. There were just such scares as the Senator is trying to get up now, and millions of dollars were spent, but we have never been able to utilize them for a solitary purpose on earth and never will. You are talking about your fortifications now. Your grandchildren and your great-grandchildren will never live to see them used. It is money thrown away, absolutely and unqualifiedly.

We started as a small country here. We achieved our independence of Great Britain; we had the war with Great Britain in 1812. Since then, by just such advice and appeals as are being made to-day, the people of this country were induced to build fortifications all around our coast for fear some enemy would attack us, and those fortifications are now moldering in ruins, inhabited by bats. No soldier would dare to take refuge behind them; they would be far more dangerous than if they were not there. We have never had to use them.

We have lived in this country since the war of 1812 seventy-six years, three-quarters of a century, and we are less liable to be attacked to-day than we ever were in our whole history. Day by day we are growing stronger and more powerful. We have the territory where our population can increase and expand. We have the courage and we have the resources, and the nations of the world will never dare to combine, all of them even, against the United States in war. There is not a particle of danger.

You start out with $126,000,000. You had better distribute it now. You had better just give it away. You will never derive a dollar's benefit from it so far as foreign nations are concerned. The only benefit will be to give engineers and officers and artisans employment for a time. They will put up these works, and after awhile they will be abandoned, just as old Fort Washington down here is abandoned, and just as all the other forts have been abandoned.

I referred the Senator from Oregon to the Lebel gun, I believe it is called, recently introduced in France, a weapon far superior to any gun that has ever yet been invented. Now I want to read the Senator an article from the New York Sun in regard to recent explosives. It is headed—

MAY FIRE SHELLS 27 MILES—INTERESTING EXPERIMENTS WITH EMMENSITE—IT CAN BE USED IN ANY FIREARMS.

A special car carried a party of fifty gentlemen to Harrison yesterday morning to witness experiments with Dr. Stephen H. Emmens's high explosive, emmensite. Dr. Emmens has converted a farm-house half a mile south of the Harrison station into a laboratory and factory. He received his visitors in his workshop. The inventor is partly paralyzed in his legs, and has to be moved about in a wheeled chair. He has an intellectual head and face, and his hair has turned yellow from constant handling of the materials of his explosive. It is based on an acid analogous to picric acid.

Dr. Emmens says that his explosive is absolutely safe to handle and very cheap. It can be used in firearms, small or large. It burns slowly when ignited. It can be granulated in any size. He crushed a lump of the powder in a powerful stone-crusher. A small cartridge was loaded with some of this powder and the ball was shot with a pistol through a one-eighth inch iron plate. Leaving the laboratory the party went out into the open fields. Four cartridges, containing in all 3 pounds of emmensite, were placed in bores four feet deep drilled into a mass of rock cropping out of a hillside. The cartridges were exploded by electricity, and the rock was broken into pieces small enough to be shoveled away. Mr. J. B. Cooper, a Colorado mine owner, estimated the amount of broken rock at 35 tons. He said he had never seen anything like the effect of the explosion.

In another part of the field a platform had been raised and targets erected. A dynamite cartridge placed upon a post in the field exploded when struck by a bullet from a rifle, while an emmensite cartridge was merely knocked from the post. Cartridges of dynamite, explosive gelatine, and emmensite were successively exploded on iron plates suspended by threads at the corners. The effect of the emmensite was to blow a large hole through the plate, while the same quantity of the other explosives merely bent the plates.

Trial was then made with Springfield rifles.

We have got plenty of them.

The distance was 100 yards, and the target consisted of five boards, 1¼ inches thick, about 3 inches apart, and backed by an iron plate. With the ordinary service cartridges, containing 70 grains of gunpowder, the ball which penetrated the furthest struck the fifth board, while the two emmensite balls, driven by 15 grains of powder, pierced all the boards, and were flattened against the iron plate. Successful tests were also made with a shotgun at 50 yards.

The availability of the explosive for submarine blasting was shown by immersing emmensite coated with paraffine in a barrel and exploding it by electricity. A lump of emmensite thrown into a barrel of water while burning continued to burn almost to the last grain. The use of the compound for pyrotechnical purposes was shown by burning it in a darkened room. Dr. Emmens also exhibited a multicharge accelerating cartridge of his invention, which may be used in any size of gun. Dr. Emmens estimates that with a gun 40 feet long—a range of 27 miles would be obtained. The Pittsburgh Steel Casting Company is about to cast for him a 3-inch gun, 7½ feet long, which is expected to throw a 25-pound projectile 6 or 7 miles. Another invention of his is a "torpedo gun," which projects a winged cylinder, to which are attached cartridges that may be exploded by either a detonator or a time-fuse.

That is not a very long gun—

Dr. Emmens's visitors yesterday, many of whom are interested in the manufacture and use of firearms and explosives, were unanimous in praising the adaptability and power of the new explosive. Among the spectators were, K. Kawahami, the Japanese consul; Signor Conti, secretary to the Italian consul; General John P. Hatch, and Capt. J. H. Mortimer, United States Army; Baron R. Ouffroy de Vérèz and his two sons, of France; Count de Kapella, of Paris; A. C. Hobbs, of the Metallic Cartridge Company of Bridgeport; Alfred Bouvier, of San Francisco, who came East expressly to witness these experiments; Dr. H. Hazard, and J. H. Eddy.

I read this merely to show the possibilities of these things. I say we are simply in the infancy of these matters. I am in favor of encouraging by every wise and judicious and liberal means these inventions and keeping pace with them. I am in favor of our Government having machinery where we can if necessary manufacture, but I am not in favor of manufacturing the guns of to-day or erecting seacoast defenses or torpedo boats or these floating batteries or anything of that kind, or these fortifications. They will become useless, and the money will be thrown away. I do not know what will be best. Let us be ready simply by encouraging the manufacture of these things, encouraging our inventors, having the foundry or the means for manufacturing if necessary. I say to the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Nevada that within thirty days earthworks can be thrown up around our coast in which guns can be placed that will be as durable against a siege as any of the fortifications contemplated in this bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator if any other sort of fortifications can be made of any value against the present armaments of the fleets of the world except earthworks?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator asks a very pertinent question. Thus far there is no material——

Mr. HOAR. What is the question?

Mr. COCKRELL. The question was if we can now construct any fortifications that would prove defensive against the present armaments of the fleets of the world?

Mr. BLAIR. Except earthworks.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh yes, I mean except earthworks.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask a question.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me answer this question.

Mr. STEWART. Then I will ask mine.

Mr. COCKRELL. I say that brick and mortar, and stone, and wood, and all these things have passed away as a means of fortification. It is absolutely useless to talk about them. It is questionable whether we can erect, as you might call them, steel fortifications, and make them thick enough to resist permanently. I presume they are the kind contemplated in the bill, and are the only kind except earthworks or sandworks which can promise great resistance.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator stated a moment ago that he supposed we could put these up at any time. Where would you get the guns?

Mr. COCKRELL. We can manufacture the guns in a very short time.

Mr. STEWART. How quickly?

Mr. COCKRELL. I said to the Senator that I would encourage invention liberally; that I would encourage the construction by the Government of the means of making these guns whenever it was necessary.

Mr. STEWART. Are you in favor of appropriating money for the construction of guns?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; not for the construction of guns. I am in favor of making an appropriation for the machinery with which we can construct the guns when we want them.

Mr. STEWART. How will you know what kind of machinery you can use if you do not know what kind of guns you want?

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose we shall probably want to make them out of steel or some other kind of metal. We may have machinery that will utilize that metal in the best possible form, whatever may hereafter be devised to be that form. We can have the kind of machinery, and you can make any kind of gun out of any kind of metal that has been used.

Mr. STEWART. I understood the Senator to oppose the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] the other day, in which he proposed to appropriate $6,000,000, mostly for machinery.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am in favor of helping to make machinery, but not machinery to make a particular kind of gun, for then you will have to manufacture that gun, and it might become useless.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think the machinery is confined to any particular gun. There is nothing of that kind in the amendment. It is proposed to have such machinery as will manufacture any gun, I understand.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am in favor of liberal appropriations; but I do not think the right sum was put in that amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator name the appropriation he would be willing to make for this purpose?

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose $500,000 or $1,000,000 would be ample.

Mr. HAWLEY. That would put up about one-quarter of the plant necessary to make a big gun.

Mr. COCKRELL. In your estimate.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is not my estimate, but the estimate of the men who build them.

Mr. DOLPH. In answer to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], I wish to say that there is certainly a limit to any gun that has ever yet been built or projected, but there is no limit to the thickness of cast-iron, cast chilled iron, cast-steel, forged steel, or wrought-iron armor upon fortifications, so that there is no trouble about providing fortifications that will be not only a sufficient protection against any projectile ever yet fired, but by additions to the thickness against any that ever will be fired by any gun that shall hereafter be invented.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is all imagination.

Mr. DOLPH. It is not imagination.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I should like to make one suggestion to him. When he talks about a million dollars to make a plant for the manufacture of guns, I wish to say to him that the very first essential part of the plant he must have to manipulate the material after it is made can not be put up for a million dollars. The necessary hammer can not be put up anywhere in this country for less than a million and a half dollars.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am willing to make it a million and a half dollars, if necessary.

Mr. TELLER. That is one item out of a great number.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the very thing, Mr. President.

Mr. TELLER. Let me say also that just before Krupp died, a few years ago, he added $7,000,000 to his plant in one year.

Mr. COCKRELL. Are we to follow the example of Krupp in Europe? Are we to make the European nations our exemplars? If we are let us abolish our republic and establish a monarchical government. To talk about a republic following the examples of monarchies and kingdoms and empires is absolutely ridiculous. If you want to make this country a monarchy say so, and we will spend millions upon millions of dollars to build fortifications and have our whole coast bristling with cannon and with torpedo boats, and our Canadian frontier bristling with guns and fortifications and armed men. Let us bring up the standing Army to 500,000 men, and let us be upon a fighting footing equal to France, Germany, Austria, and Russia.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask the Senator another question. Does the Senator think that a republican government can make guns or material any better than a monarchical government?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly not.

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator believe that the necessary appliances in Krupp's manufactory to make a good gun would not be necessary in a republican manufactory?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all, sir.

Mr. TELLER. I thought so, by your remark.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all; it will not be. We shall never need the guns that Mr. Krupp's establishment has been furnishing to the world. We shall never need the armament that Mr. Krupp's has.

Mr. RANSOM. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 7547) granting the right of way to the Yankton and Missouri River Railway through the Yankton reservation, in Dakota; and

A bill (H. R. 10112) granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railway Company the right of way through the Fond du Lac Indian reservation, in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. RANSOM. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, July 12, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, July 11, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LIENS OF JUDGMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8180) with Senate amendments, to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of courts of the United States.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as managers on the part of the House the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. HENDERSON, the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. ROGERS, and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. FULLER.

CEMETERY, DENVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3300) with Senate amendments, to amend an act to enable the city of Denver to purchase certain lands for cemetery purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe that is the bill that was mislaid, a copy of which was called for by the House from the Senate by resolution of the House. In that event, it is in conference between the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the engrossed amendments to that bill, which were sent to the House by the Senate were mislaid; and thereupon the House by resolution requested the Senate to furnish a copy. This is a compliance with that request.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will it be necessary to again refer the matter to the Committee on the Public Lands?

The SPEAKER. It will not; it is already there.

EMILY J. STANNARD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2657) granting a pension to Emily J. Stannard, with House amendments disagreed to by the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent that the House insist upon its amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as managers on the part of the House in this case the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. MATSON, the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. CHIPMAN, and the gentleman from New Hampshire, Mr. GALLINGER.

FORFEITURE OF LAND GRANTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1430) to forfeit certain land heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes, with House amendments disagreed to by the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the House insist on its amendments to the Senate bill, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as managers on the part of the House the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. STONE, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. PAYSON.

BRIDGE ACROSS ARKANSAS RIVER NEAR CUMMINGS, ARK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1315) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Cummings Landing, Lincoln County, Arkansas; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 14, 1887; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ELNATHAN MEADE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following request of the Senate:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, July 10, 1888.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 1427) granting an increase of pension to Elnathan Meade.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this request will be complied with and the Clerk will be directed to return the bill.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 8989) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 9377) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 1983) to ratify an act entitled "An act creating the county of San Juan," in the Territory of New Mexico;

A bill (S. 1173) increasing the pension of Jeptha A. Jones;

A bill (S. 123) granting a pension to Mrs. Virginia Grier;

A bill (S. 1556) granting a pension to Martin N. Kellogg;

A bill (S. 2274) granting a pension to Mrs. Catherine K. Whittlesey;

A bill (S. 2604) granting a pension to Loanda Sherman;

A bill (S. 2866) granting a pension to Abel G. Rankin; and

A bill (S. 3021) granting a pension to Carrie V. Miller.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to present a privileged report.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SIMMONS. I rise to a question of personal privilege. In the RECORD of this morning I am represented as having interrupted the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] on yesterday, and made the following statement:

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to say that the reduction of duty on those articles under consideration meets with my hearty approval, and as soon as circumstances will permit, I hope further reduction will be made.

What I did say or intended to say, and thought I did say, was this: I desire to say that the reduction of duty made by the bill (meaning the Mills bill) on these articles (meaning rice) meets with my hearty approval, and I shall be glad to see them further reduced as circumstances will permit. I did not refer to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], because it was that which I had been opposing. In the latter part of the gentleman's remarks he assumes that I did mean to declare myself as approving his amendment. My attention was diverted and I did not hear that portion of his remarks, else I should have disabused him at the time of the impression that what I had said referred to his amendment.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] will withdraw the demand for the previous order.

Mr. BLAND. I withdraw the demand for the present.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send it to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate, numbered 30, to the bill (H. R. 10233) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

W. H. HATCH,
A. C. DAVIDSON,
E. H. CONGER,
Managers on the part of the House.
P. B. PLUMB,
C. B. FARWELL,
WILKINSON CALL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

Mr. RYAN. Is that the amendment providing for further experimentation in relation to sorghum sugar?

Mr. HATCH. It is.

Mr. RYAN. Then I hope the Senate will adhere. It is too late now for me to move to concur in the amendment, but I hope that when the question comes before us the House will concur in that amendment of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the House will adhere.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state in connection with this report, in order that the House may understand it, that the Senate placed upon the House appropriation bill an amendment appropriating $100,000 to continue experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum. When the appropriation of $100,000 for that purpose was made in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress the Bureau of Agriculture, represented by the Commissioner, the manufacturers of sorghum sugar in the East, a representation from Kansas, and also a representation from the sugar-planters of the State of Louisiana appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and stated that that appropriation, in addition to what had already been appropriated from time to time, was all that was necessary or that would be required in conducting experiments as to the proper method of manufacturing sugar either from sorghum or ribbon cane by the diffusion process.

The Department of Agriculture and all these industries were fully committed to that proposition, and the Committee on Agriculture, in making that report to the House of Representatives, stated the fact that that was all that would be required to complete these experimentations, and such was the language of that appropriation, to complete the experiments in the manufacture of sugar both from sorghum and ribbon cane.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman will allow me to say a word by way of emphasizing what he has just said. The statement just referred to by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. HATCH] was made in response to an earnest protest from the Democratic side that this was an inappropriate use of the public money, and that the appropriation ought not to be made.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman is correct. A number of members of the House were opposed to making any further appropriations in this direction; but with that understanding, the appropriation was made.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he has made or intends to make a motion that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. HATCH. That motion is pending.

Mr. BLOUNT. I did not so understand. The gentleman from Kansas expressed a desire that the House at a proper time should make an expression on this subject. Thinking that possibly the formal motion had not been made, I desired to suggest that we take distinct action now, as the Senate would probably pay greater regard to the action of the House if taken after debate and serious consideration.

Mr. HATCH. I have made the motion that the House further insist on its disagreement; and that motion is pending.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think the gentleman will find that the motion has not been made.

Mr. HATCH. Oh, no; the record will show that I made the motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion has been made and has been stated by the Chair.

Mr. HATCH. During the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress these same industries, in the face of the pledge which had been made but a year before, came back to the Committee on Agriculture and insisted that, by reason of the short crop of that year and a defect in some of the machinery which had been made, it was impossible to conclude satisfactorily the experimentations without a further appropriation. Upon the strong appeal then made and upon the representation of the Commissioner of Agriculture that the value of the machinery purchased by the Government would be saved by a further appropriation, the Committee on Agriculture and the House reluctantly consented to a further appropriation of $50,000. That was to close up the matter. The Commissioner has made his final report. He has stated officially in a most positive manner that these experimentations, so far as the Department is concerned, have been closed; in other words, that he has done all he could do by an appropriation of money.

Mr. GAY. The gentleman has referred to a request made at the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress for an additional appropriation. I wish to ask him whether the representatives from Louisiana joined in that request—whether it did not come exclusively from Kansas?

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman is correct. As I now recollect the circumstances, the demand for the continuation of the experiments on sorghum cane came exclusively from the representatives of that section of the country where sorghum was grown.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have for the last twelve or more years appropriated money from time to time in very generous sums for the continuation of these experiments. They have been continued until I am satisfied that any additional appropriation will simply be in the nature of a subsidy to some firm or corporation owning a sugar factory. There is no need of a single dollar to continue further experimentation; that field is exhausted; and if those who desire to do so can not make sugar with the information which has been given them up to this time by the Agricultural Department they can not make it at all.

I wish to state that the Commissioner of Agriculture has not asked for this appropriation. Neither in the Book of Estimates, nor in any communication to Congress, nor in any official communication to the President, nor in any communication to the Committee on Agriculture has he intimated that he desired one single dollar for this purpose or that he could properly expend it in this way.

Mr. RYAN. Does the gentleman mean to have the House understand that the Commissioner of Agriculture does not desire this appropriation?

Mr. HATCH. I do. I feel justified in saying that he does not desire it, because he has made no report to anybody at any time asking for it, and he has stated positively that he has done all that, in his judgment, could be done.

Mr. BLOUNT. Whom does this recommendation come from?

Mr. HATCH. There is no recommendation so far as I am aware. Not a single one of these industries has come before the Committee on Agriculture at this session and asked any appropriation. Not a single petition or memorial has been sent to the committee asking for it. It is sprung upon Congress by an amendment placed on this bill in the Senate, and there is no authority behind it, so far as we are able to find out.

I will send to the Clerk's desk and have read a letter which I have received from the State of Louisiana in regard to the work of this character which has been done there.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, July 4, 1888.

DEAR SIR: E. H. Cunningham, of Sartartia post-office, Fort Bend County, sugar planter, proprietor of sugar land, Borden & Brevard plantations, has 300 acres of sorghum that he intends to work with his diffusion apparatus before his cane ripens, and 1,200 acres of cane. His sorghum will be ready in a few days, and his cane October 1.

His diffusion plant—made by Edwards & Hauptman, of this city—has a capacity of 300 tons per day. He has experts to operate it (including Mr. Swenson), and he will this season thoroughly demonstrate the value of diffusion, practically, in the manufacture of sugar both from sorghum and cane. Your committee can get reliable information from him without an appropriation.

Yours, respectfully,

CHAS. G. JOHNSEN.

Hon. W. H. HATCH,
Chairman House Committee.

Mr. PETERS. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. HATCH. Certainly.

Mr. PETERS. Any one who has been in a factory where sugar is made from sorghum knows the statement made by that gentleman is made through ignorance.

Mr. HATCH. I take it that he knows more about it than any gentleman on this floor, the gentleman from Kansas not excepted.

Mr. PETERS. I beg to say the statement made by him shows that he does not know what he states.

Mr. HATCH. He has had more experience than any gentleman on this floor.

But here is another letter which I will read. I do not indorse all this gentleman says, but I am going to read his letter, as I want the House to know what the representative men throughout the country who are engaged in this industry have to say on this subject.

PHILADELPHIA, July 7, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I see by the papers that your committee has refused to accede to the Senate amendment appropriating $100,000 for sorghum-sugar experiments and trust you will insist on your position.

As a sugar refiner and grower I have kept myself posted on every attempt to make sugar from sorghum, and not one has been a success or offered any reasonable promise of success.

That I do not believe.

Mr. PETERS. I should think not.

Mr. HATCH (reading):

As a fact the money heretofore appropriated by Congress, and spent under the direction of a Government official named Wiley, has not only been a waste of money but worse, as his misleading reports have caused many people to embark in this business and in every instance lose their money.

That I do not believe. While I believe this money has been extravagantly and wrongfully expended, I do not believe that it has all been lost.

Mr. PETERS. He refers to experiments made two years ago.

Mr. HATCH. I will read the letter through:

The largest and most thorough experiment in this line was made at Rio Grande, N. J., where, after losing hundreds of thousands of dollars, and persisting at it for a series of years, they had at last to abandon it; and no wonder, for they only succeeded in getting about 300 pounds of sugar to the acre, while in Louisiana they get 3,000 pounds, in Cuba often double that amount, and in the Sandwich Islands sometimes as high as 10,000 pounds.

I am very desirous of seeing the United States raise all her own sugar, but it is worse than waste to spend it pursuing this will-o'-the-wisp.

Very respectfully, yours,

H. W. BARTOL.

Hon. Mr. HATCH,
Chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture.

I do not know Mr. Bartol.

Mr. PETERS. Is there anything in that letter you do indorse?

Mr. HATCH. What I wish this House to understand is this: That we have for the last twelve years appropriated liberally money in the direction of ascertaining everything possible in reference to the present manufacture of sugar from sorghum and to reach this diffusion process on the ribbon cane in Louisiana. As far as it was possible to go, Mr. Speaker, we have gone, and I say to the House now that every single dollar appropriated in that direction is simply a subsidy to some existing factory, and you had better in good faith take the names and turn over to them the money given for this purpose. It is utterly impossible for the Government to learn anything new on this subject. We have spent thousands and thousands of dollars in improved machinery which is now in the hands of the Government. We have employed the best experts in this country and Europe. We have sent our chemists to examine the processes abroad. They have come back to us and closed their reports. There is nothing further to be done.

Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] desire any time? If he does, I will yield to him.

Mr. RYAN rose.

Mr. HATCH. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. RYAN. I desire some time myself.

Mr. HATCH. I will yield first to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. RYAN. I do not think, in view of the importance of this subject, the gentleman from Missouri ought to close debate in an hour.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman will have plenty of time to say all he wants to say about this matter.

Mr. RYAN. I will ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. HATCH. I am willing to yield to the gentleman from Illinois if he will tell me how much time he wants.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask the gentleman from Missouri to continue his remarks for a few minutes more, in order to state to the House the most important point, which he has apparently neglected to state. If an amendment comes upon the floor of the House without report of the Commissioner and this House puts it into an appropriation bill, this House is presumed to put it into that bill for some reason. If an amendment is put by the Senate into an appropriation bill, even though there is no report from the Commissioner of Agriculture or any other official of the Government, it is to be presumed they have some reason, good or bad, for putting it into that bill, and it seems to me that the House conferees, in enlightening the House in the discharge of their duties in the premises, ought to state the reasons there are given, good or bad, by the co-ordinate branch of the legislature for inserting this in the bill.

Mr. HATCH. I will state to the gentleman in a very few words. I have not heard any reasons. I have not seen one single paper, petition, memorial, or document of any kind from any section of the country, either to the House or the Senate, asking for this; nor have I heard a single reason urged on the part of the managers of the Senate in favor of it, except that in their judgment it is better.

Mr. ADAMS. They give no reasons for their judgment?

Mr. HATCH. I have stated about all I have heard.

Mr. RYAN addressed the Chair.

Mr. HATCH. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. RYAN. Only a short time.

Mr. HATCH. Ten or fifteen minutes?

Mr. RYAN. Perhaps not so much.

Mr. PETERS. I want fifteen or twenty minutes.

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] ten minutes.

Mr. RYAN. If in order, I desire to move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. That motion is always in order until the matter is finally disposed of by some action of the House.

Mr. RYAN. Then I submit that motion.

I have listened with some interest to the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH]. If I understand him aright, he is opposed to the amendment providing for further experimentation in sorghum sugar because the Agricultural Department has not come before the committee and asked it. He has assigned no other substantial reason, so far as I have heard.

He admits here that the results of the experimentation under past appropriations have been fruitful, and are of such a character as to warrant the belief that we can in this country make from sorghum sufficient sugar for our own consumption, and perhaps for export. I know how difficult it was to get the last appropriation through.

It was not obtained through the favor of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH]. If I remember aright, it was a Senate amendment that was antagonized by the gentleman from Missouri, as he is antagonizing this amendment to-day, and yet it was under that meager appropriation that experiments have been made that warranted such sugar planters as Mr. Cunningham in investing money in the business. The letter the gentleman read a moment ago regarding Mr. Cunningham is of itself the most satisfactory evidence that the experiments that were had at Fort Scott developed beyond question that sorghum sugar can be made, and profitably made, in this country.

Mr. Cunningham is himself an old sugar producer or manufacturer. When the results of these experiments at Fort Scott became public, after these experiments had disclosed the fact that 98 per cent. of the juice of the cane could be extracted and the sugar made profitably, that planter and manufacturer wrote to the Department for information in regard to the matter. Mr. Colman, then as now Commissioner of Agriculture, suggested to him that the best way to get information upon the subject was to go there and examine for himself and take with him his experts. He did go there and spent over two weeks of time himself in investigating the processes used. He kept his expert there over a month, and as a result he returned to his home and engaged in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum cane.

Now, it is stated on the floor of this House that the Agricultural Department does not desire this money for further experimentation. I am, with all due deference to my friend from Missouri, free to say that that must be an inference which he draws from the fact that the Commissioner made no estimate for it, and that he has no other warrant for saying anything of the kind. I say here that I am satisfied, from information that is absolutely reliable, that the Agricultural Department does want the money for further experiments.

Mr. PERKINS. Will my colleague allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. RYAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PERKINS. Is not the reason the Agricultural Department did not ask a continuance of this appropriation because of a promise made last year that it would not ask for further funds?

Mr. RYAN. I was just about to say, if I understand the matter aright, that there was a refusal on the part of the House Committee on Agriculture to make that last appropriation of $94,000 until a pledge was extorted from the honorable Commissioner of Agriculture that he would not come to Congress again and ask an appropriation for this purpose.

Mr. HATCH. I ask the gentleman from Kansas to yield to me for a moment, because he has been misinformed, and I am sure he does not want to make a statement that is not true. I want to say to the gentleman that there is not a particle of truth in that statement, and wherever he got his information, he was misinformed. Nothing of the kind was done in committee; no pledge was exacted from the Commissioner of Agriculture, and the only pledge that was made was by the Louisiana and Kansas delegations and the Commissioner of Agriculture, voluntarily, to the committee.

Mr. RYAN. I want to say that all efforts to get it without that pledge were unavailing. I accept the statement of the gentleman, but I wish to add that my information is as I stated it. It came from a very high source.

Now, sir, I do not care who made those pledges, whether the Kansas delegation—and if so, I am not one of them——

Mr. HATCH. I did not mean the delegation on the floor of this House. I spoke of the representatives of the sugar interests of Kansas.

Mr. RYAN. I do not know who made the pledges, but I am informed that the Commissioner of Agriculture found it necessary in some way to make that pledge before he could get his appropriation.

Now, sir, are we to stand here in the presence of an industry of this magnitude, with results that are before us of experiments made under a small appropriation of $94,000, and refuse to make this appropriation because somebody went before the committee and made a pledge that he would not ask for any further appropriation? Why, sir, the field of experiment is yet rich. It is broad and fruitful. Experiments are to be made not only in the line of the processes of manufacture, but also in the line of the development of the quality of the cane itself. No man can foretell the importance of this appropriation to the farmers of this country and to the American people. Judged by the past results we would be absolutely derelict in the performance of a public duty if we did not continue this experimentation. Why, sir, we stand up here and by unanimous consent allow a public building to be constructed somewhere, not of very great public importance, costing $100,000, or even $200,000, but when we are asked in the interest of agriculture, which is languishing throughout the country, to promote an industry of vital importance to the farmers, when we are asked for the meager sum of $100,000, we have the head of the Committee on Agriculture antagonizing the small and comparatively insignificant appropriation. I hope, sir, my motion will prevail.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. RYAN. Have I no more time?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PETERS. I would like to have fifteen minutes.

Mr. HATCH. Ten minutes is enough for the gentleman.

Mr. PETERS. There are certain reasons why this appropriation should be made as I think; and I wish to briefly state them, so that the House may act understandingly. My colleague [Mr. RYAN] touched briefly upon one of these reasons, namely, the experiments necessary in the different kinds of cane. Those who have had experience in the cultivation of sorghum cane know that the season of ripening, so far as the making of sugar from the cane is concerned, is a very important item, and that the cane must be of such a character that it will ripen along in successive periods so that it may be cut and taken to the mill and the milling season be prolonged as long as possible. One of the great difficulties of making sugar profitably from sorghum has been the shortness of the milling season. This can be prolonged by experiments in the kinds of cane to be sown. In the first place, it requires cane that shall be sown early in the season, which shall ripen early; and then another class of cane which will ripen a week or two later; then another class of cane that will ripen a week or two later still; and so on, covering the entire milling season.

The longer you can extend that milling season, from the ripening of the first cane to the coming of frost, the greater will be the product that you can make in the mill. So that it seems to me from this brief statement the House will readily understand the importance of the experiments in ascertaining just what cane is best to be sown first, what will ripen later, what will take the shortest period in maturing, and what will take the longest period.

There are other experiments in connection with the matter, experiments as to the plan by which the juice can be extracted from the cane, boiled to a certain consistency and then stored in vessels to remain until winter comes on, when it can be made up into sugar. There are experiments to be carried on in that direction which, in my opinion, will yield rich returns.

There are other experiments to be carried on which are important on this subject. It is important to experiment in relation to the latitude in this country in which this cane can be successfully grown. I believe it can be grown as far south as the middle of Texas. I believe it can be grown as far north, perhaps, as the middle of Iowa. I believe it can be successfully grown in this belt; but it is to be determined by the experiments whether the cane can be grown in this latitude.

It is not alone for Kansas that this appropriation is asked. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] mistakes Kansas as being the only State interested in this experiment and in this appropriation. Such is not the case. We are desirous that this great industry shall be extended throughout the latitude in the United States that is adapted to the cultivation of cane.

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman answer me one question?

Mr. PETERS. If you will get me a little more time.

Mr. HATCH. I will not use up much of your time. Is it not a fact that the State of Kansas is paying to-day, and has been paying for several years, a royalty of 2 cents a pound on all sugar made in that State?

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir; it is a fact that the State pays a bounty of 2 cents a pound on all sugar that polarizes ninety degrees.

Mr. RYAN. But not for several years past.

Mr. PETERS. But I will state to the gentleman from Missouri, as I stated to the House the other day, that that bounty had nothing whatever to do with the successful carrying on of the experiments made at Fort Scott last year. That was the result of the appropriation that we wrung from the Committee on Agriculture in the last House. I want to say further that there is a large field for experiment in testing and educating expert boilers. It is in relation to boiling I say the letter of the Louisiana gentleman indicates that he knows nothing about the subject. He sent his experts to Fort Scott and they were there two or three weeks during the sugar season, but I say to him and this House that it is as utterly impossible for a man to become an expert boiler in three weeks as it is for him to become an expert miller in three weeks. The great skill required is in the boiling, after the juice goes from the diffusive battery into the vacuum-pan. The establishment at Fort Scott obtained a boiler who had been educated in the best sugar factories of Germany and who had also boiled in the Louisiana cane factories and in the beet factories of California. He came to Fort Scott, and it was through his great experience and skill in boiling that the experiment was brought to so successful a conclusion. There, in the breast of that young foreigner only twenty-four years of age, rested almost entirely the secret by which sugar could be made from sorghum after the saccharine matter had been properly extracted from the cane, and by which it could be made in paying quantities which would render it a profitable thing to manufacture, and it is especially for the education of other experts in boiling that this appropriation is needed.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the gentleman please tell us what quantity of sugar has ever been actually granulated from sorghum juice in Kansas?

Mr. PETERS. One hundred and fifteen pounds of sugar have been made from a ton of cane.

Mr. TILLMAN. But how many tons of actual sugar have ever been granulated in the United States from sorghum juice in Kansas, in New Jersey, or anywhere else?

Mr. PETERS. I do not know.

Mr. TILLMAN. Has there been as much as a car-load?

Mr. PETERS. Why we made 234,000 pounds of sugar in one mill at Fort Scott last year, sugar which sold at the mill for 6 cents a pound, and was the equal of any coffee C sugar that you can find anywhere. And so far as sweetness is concerned, it polarized 98.1 per cent., and you can not find that grade of sugar in California or in Germany or anywhere else that will polarize as high as that.

Mr. TILLMAN. Was that sugar made exclusively from sorghum?

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir, I saw it made myself. As I stated here the other day, I went into the cane-field, saw the cane cut, saw it loaded on the wagons, saw it put through the cutting-machine, saw it go into the diffusion battery and into the vacuum-pans and into the centrifugal, saw it come out sugar, and then saw it polarized. So that I speak from actual knowledge.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I have said, one of the strongest necessities for this appropriation is to educate more expert boilers, so that this industry may not be under the control of a few establishments which have succeeded in getting the services of experts. We want to broaden the field for private enterprise. One of the great difficulties in Kansas, as elsewhere, is that these expert boilers are so few, and the gentleman who proposes to make sugar in Louisiana will find that it will cost him thousands and thousands of dollars to educate experts in the boiling process before he can make sugar profitably.

In making this sugar at Fort Scott the expert boiler I have mentioned stood by the vacuum-pan from 4 o'clock in the afternoon until 10 o'clock the next day; he never left it in all that time; his eye was upon the thermometer in the vacuum-pan, and he had a continual test going on before his eyes of the consistency of the material; and it requires just as much skill to tell when the material is fit to be turned into the centrifugal as it requires to give that wonderfully delicate touch on the part of the miller to tell when the flour is being made properly from the wheat. It would have been impossible for any man not an expert, not having full knowledge of the business, to tell when the material was of a sufficient consistency to be turned into the mixing-machine, and from that into the centrifugal, so that it would granulate into sugar.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PETERS. I would like five minutes more.

Mr. HATCH. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. TILLMAN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PETERS. Another reason why this appropriation is necessary is because there is a so-called patent which claims to cover this process. That question, I know, is being tested in the courts, but it will probably be years before it is determined whether the patent is valid or not, and we need this appropriation to make experiments so as to avoid everything that is connected with the patent and thereby save the agricultural portion of the community from being placed in the power of the owners of the patent. We want to avoid that monopoly. We want the experiments to be carried on, not only for the purpose of doing away with the patent, but also for the purpose of learning how to make sugar without paying any tribute to the patent. This, I say, is another reason why there is a necessity for this appropriation. I thank the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] for his courtesy.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, without claiming to be an expert in the manufacture of sugar, I have read and studied somewhat concerning this subject. The great difficulty in manufacturing sugar out of sorghum is to granulate it. This has been the difficulty in regard to sorghum from the day it was introduced into the United States until now. Why, sir, long before the late war, Governor Hammond, of my State, formerly United States Senator, expended $30,000 out of his private purse in the fruitless effort to granulate sorghum juice, and he utterly failed. I know of many other Southern highly educated agriculturists who have sunk large sums in the same endeavor. It is a well-known fact that of the two saccharine substances which supply the world with its sweets, one is called sucrose, which is the principle of the sweet matter in the tropical cane, the beets, and which can be dried by heat, and from which we get our sugar; the other, which is called glucose, is the sweet matter in grapes, sorghum, Indian corn, and other substances. Glucose has never yet been concentrated, dried, and granulated so as to furnish anything like the concentrated sweet or granulated matter which is supplied by the sucrose principle; and that is the difficulty to-day. I am satisfied that something besides the process of attempting to granulate at any particular stage of the thermometer, as intimated by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS], must be discovered before that secret can be mastered. I know that a few so-called experts, probably interested in this $100,000 subsidy, have asserted that the dominant saccharine principle of sorghum is sucrose and not glucose, but the weight of authority, both scientific and practical, is against them.

It has been pretended that some Government employés—chemists who were retained at the agricultural stations in New Jersey and Kansas—have discovered the secret and patented it for granulating sorghum juice. But, Mr. Speaker, had that been true, sorghum would have been cultivated, in spite of patents or by aid of the patents, in a thousand places where it is not now cultivated, and there would have been sugar factories all over the West to granulate sorghum if it cou'd have been done.

Why, sir, it is a notorious fact that millions and tens of millions of gallons of glucose sirup now used in this country are made out of sorghum juice and Indian corn simply by boiling the latter in sulphuric acid, the invention of a German chemist a few years ago. That glucose sirup is used to adulterate the tropical cane sirup until it has become somewhat difficult to get hold of a barrel of pure sucrose sirup. That glucose stuff is also worked into candy and applied to various other uses, such as the manufacture of preserves, people thinking they are getting tropical sugar when they are really getting nothing but glucose, the sweetness of which is not so rich, although I believe it is admitted to be as healthy as the sucrose sweet.

Mr. PETERS. I have already stated a case in which sugar made from sorghum was polarized by a chemist from the Agricultural Department and showed ninety-eight and one-tenth degrees.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Government is in possession of the secret of granulating sorghum, why continue to pay for it? If the gentleman's statement is correct, if there was no fraud about the matter, it is a discovery for which the whole civilized world ought to return its gratitude. I for one, however, confess that I am still incredulous about the ability to granulate sorghum juice in paying quantities and in concentrated form.

I have known instances where it would somewhat granulate itself in time so as to leave a few pounds of soft or semi-fluid candy, as it were, in the bottom of a barrel of sirup after you had used all the sorghum sirup out of it; but it would not dry; in addition to its being discolored it was not fit for a gentleman to eat, at least he would not use it so long as he could get white sugar. The secret of granulating the glucose of grapes, figs, watermelons, sorghum, etc., is a secret which the world has been trying to discover ever since the days of Lot, but in all probability it never will be found until some man discovers it by accident. It seems to be one of the unsolved problems of the ages, like squaring the circle, finding perpetual motion, desulphurizing gold, or taking longitude at sea without a chronometer. Now and then some "crank" asserts that he has done either or all of these things; but when you put the matter to the test he fails. I believe that when the test is thoroughly applied these so-called processes of granulating sorghum will fail. I fear there may have been some fraud about the alleged successful experiments, probably by the smuggled use of sucrose sirup, or sugar made from beets or tropical cane. Therefore, I think the House ought not to make any further appropriation to continue these experiments, for I believe any such appropriation would be in the nature of a subsidy to established factories or to pay some pretended expert a salary for attempting to do something he can not do. Another reason why this subsidy should not be granted is that we now have a high tariff on sugar to stimulate its manufacture out of tropical cane, beets, sorghum, Indian corn, or anything else by the discovery of either new processes, new furnaces, new machinery, etc. Is it not enough for the people of this country to pay a tariff of fifty or sixty millions a year to promote the manufacture of its sweets without having also to stimulate their manufacture still further by an annual bounty of $100,000 to a favored few experimenters, who will likely work much harder for their own profit than for improving the art of granulating glucose?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Seventeen minutes.

Mr. GAY. I would like to be heard on this question.

Mr. HATCH. I have already promised all my time, and I can not yield to the gentleman. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I have always favored appropriations for this purpose. The first appropriation was made, I believe, in the Forty-sixth Congress. An amendment was offered to the agricultural appropriation bill by Mr. Gillette, who was then my colleague, representing the Seventh district of Iowa. He asked for an appropriation of $50,000, which was voted down. He followed it to the Senate, and $25,000 was voted. That amendment was finally concurred in by the House. Since that time other appropriations of various amounts have been made, and I believe that the result has justified the expenditures authorized by Congress. It was money wisely spent.

Sir, there are some strange contradictions in human nature, and we often find exhibitions of them in the legislation. Why, sir, we annually appropriate millions of dollars to the sword, to keep up military schools, to build experimental war vessels and cruisers, to construct various kinds of projectiles and other instruments of destruction and cruelty, yet when an appropriation is asked for the plowshare, for the carrying on of experiments in matters of agriculture, to make us a people of peace, a self-sustaining, happy, and prosperous country, we then are met with constitutional objections grave and solemn.

I am not in sympathy with that method of argument. If the production of sugar from sorghum is still an experiment it is wise to continue it. We have a Department of Agriculture as distinct as the Navy Department or the War Department, and it is just as legitimate to give that Department whatever is necessary to carry on experiments of this character as to make appropriations to enable the naval or the military departments of the Government to carry on their experiments. I trust the appropriation will be made.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH. I will yield now for four minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, two objections to this appropriation have been stated to which I wish to call the attention of the House.

The first objection consists in statements of Louisiana planters and Eastern sugar refiners that it is unwise to appropriate any more money for the development of the sorghum-sugar industry in Kansas and other Northwestern States.

The second objection has just now been stated by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS]. It is simply this, that the original appropriation for this purpose, made a year or two ago, was an improper one, and was opposed by the entire Democratic side of the House.

As for the first objection all I have to say is that the evidence of Louisiana cane-sugar growers and Eastern refiners is not entitled to the fullest weight on a question of this kind. It would be extraordinary if this House refused to concur in the Senate amendment advocated here on this floor by the Representatives of those Northwestern States where the sorghum industry is of the greatest importance, merely because objection is made by the Southern cane-sugar growers and the Eastern sugar refiners. They have a direct interest against the success of the sorghum-sugar industry. This sorghum sugar does not need to go through the refineries. We have heard that statement this morning. If it does not need to go through the refineries it comes in direct competition with the cane sugar from Louisiana. In that respect it is somewhat like the foreign sugars between No. 13 and No. 16 Dutch standard, or rather as these sugars would be if they were not artificially colored before importation.

We heard something about this the other day. We were discussing the extraordinary change in the text of the tariff bill made by the Committee on Ways and Means just before it was reported to the House. The change was attributed to the sugar trust. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] explained that it was due to the remonstrances of the Louisiana sugar growers. I wish I could quote his words, but I see they are withheld for revision. The substance was this: The cane-sugar growers did not want the foreign sugars between No. 13 and No. 16 Dutch standard to go directly into consumption, and so compete with Louisiana sugar. So the committee changed the bill, making No. 13 instead of No. 16 the dividing line between the lower and the higher duty. The effect is that a large amount of foreign sugar, which otherwise would go into consumption without refining, is artificially colored before importation. The effect of this is that the consumers of this country are compelled to pay a tribute to the sugar refiners.

The development of the sorghum-sugar industry would have precisely the same effect on the Louisiana cane sugar. Sorghum sugar would come into direct competition with the cane sugar of Louisiana. Moreover, I have heard from a Representative of Kansas on this floor that in his opinion, if the experiments provided for by the Senate amendment were carried out a little further, sorghum sugar could not only be grown in this country to satisfy the entire demand, but would be independent of a protective-tariff duty.

I do not attribute any narrow views to the Representatives of Louisiana on this floor. I simply say that the letters read from the Clerk's desk, embodying the views of cane-sugar growers and Eastern refiners, are not entitled to any weight whatever.

As to the second objection, which was stated by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], the House can dispose of it without much debate. I believe the original appropriation made for this same purpose a year or two ago was an eminently proper one. It has been partially justified by the result. We have already appropriated $150,000. We had better appropriate $100,000 more in order to get the full benefit of the expenditures already made.

Mr. HATCH. Several gentlemen have asked me to yield to them on this question, and as I have only ten or eleven minutes remaining I hope by unanimous consent my time will be extended twenty minutes.

Mr. RYAN. I hope that will be done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HATCH. I now yield for ten minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GAY]. If he does not need the whole of that time he will return to me, of course, what he does not use.

Mr. GAY. Mr. Speaker, I had no idea of making any remarks on this subject; but it is an interesting subject, and if the representatives of Louisiana did not join in any request for additional appropriation in behalf of the sugar interest it was because we thought we were compromised by the agreement in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, when it was understood we would not ask for any further appropriation for further experiments by the Department of Agriculture, in the interest of sugar.

I, however, commend the energy and zeal of the Senator from Kansas, in the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress, who moved an appropriation and succeeded in getting it for the continuation of the sugar experiment. I commend it because the country, not only in Kansas and Louisiana, but the sugar-producing interest in general derived incalculable advantage from the continuation of the experiments in the season of 1887.

Now, we have not failed to join in this measure from any spirit of opposition to it, and are free to say here now that it can not fail to be advantageous. This is the most important and interesting subject now before the people of the United States; that is, the great sugar-producing problem. Sorghum juice immature is water, cane juice immature is water; as it becomes more and more mature, more and more saccharine value is imparted by nature.

This is a delicate property, and is to be sought for with intelligence and with experience. The value consists in its inherent capacity to form crystals when properly condensed by evaporation. The juice, in its natural condition, is blended with other constituent elements of the plant, more or less hurtful to the valuable properties sought for. These act as clogs and hinderances to the assertion of the power to crystallize. Here steps in the valuable aid of chemistry, with its varied attributes, to ascertain and nentralize all deleterious properties. With the aid of proper natural agents and the application of graduated heat, sugar-makers seek to separate the constituent parts of the juice, so that as far as possible only pure, limpid sucrose may remain for the further manipulation into sugar.

Mr. PETERS. If the gentleman will permit me, the diffusion process leaves out all foreign matter, outside of the saccharine matter or juices. That is one of the great advantages of the diffusion process. When you force the saccharine matter through the diffusion batteries the foreign matter remains in the batteries, and the saccharine matter or juice alone goes through.

Mr. GAY. I will say to my friend that the diffusion process is a principle of saturation applied for obtaining a larger extraction of the juice from the plant. Now it has also its disadvantages, and these require the scientific treatment of the juice, because the extraction by saturation with water of these weak juices (they are all comparatively weak), soon demonstrated that the degree of heat applied must not be so great as to destroy the capacity for subsequent granulation. Such agents were to be developed by science as would free the juice of the properties which hinder the natural assertion of the power of crystallization, clarify and cleanse the product to render it a commercial article.

Further experiments were necessary and were made. I will say frankly that the diffusion process I do not consider any better than the mill process, except that it is a natural and ingenious device to get more juice from the plant, and hence is a better and more desirable process.

Mr. PETERS. But, if the gentleman will permit me again, under the crushing process the foreign matter in the cane went into the juice; but under the diffusion process, where the stalks are cut up into little pieces not exceeding an inch square, and packed in the batteries, all foreign matter remains with the bagasse or refuse matter in the battery, while the saccharine juice alone is permitted to go through; and this makes the diffusion process preferable to that extent.

Mr. GAY. I have said it is preferable to some extent; but if you saturate any plant by water so as to render it soft and get at its properties, you at the same time give opportunity of saturating out and bringing forward into the product the deleterious properties which exist in the plant.

Now, I admit that in this respect science has come to the aid of the cane-grower and the manufacturer of sugar, through the agency of the chemists of the Agricultural Department, to supply a deficiency of scientific attainment in this country.

I will say, sir, that it is the misfortune of this country that so many of our young men turn their attention early in life to merchandise, to the various professions, all of which are overdone, while so few set out to become masters of the sciences which are so imperatively required in the successful prosecution of agriculture and the multiplicity of manufacturing interests all over the land. I am glad to say we have honorable exceptions and the number is increasing, but still the field is comparatively unsupplied. This is not the case in France and Germany, where such valuable education is more widely diffused and such assistance to the industries is more conveniently available and within the economical reach of all.

That being our deficiency here, we need the aid of science. We need that character of technical education. Hence the demand for the assistance of the Agricultural Department. Abstractly about other matters they do not know any more than we do, and upon many subjects not half as much. But it has been their opportunity to obtain such information; they have the advantage, laboratories and chemical tests and experiments, and hence have an advantage over us in that respect. We are therefore disposed to avail of their technical knowledge as far as the chemical processes are concerned in assisting us in the initial processes of this industry.

My friend from South Carolina speaks of the efforts of Governor Hammond thirty years before the war to make sugar from sorghum, which were unsuccessful. That has been the experience before and since the war in the ten thousand efforts which have been made to produce sorghum sugar. I do not know, but I have no doubt his experiments were made in open kettles with high heat in an attempt to granulate the juice. The failure may have arisen from the use of too high a heat, which destroyed the power to assert crystallization.

Mr. GEAR. I presume he tried the old kettle process.

Mr. GAY. And the high-heat process destroys the ripened cane juice in Louisiana as well as the sorghum. We got 50 pounds to a ton under the old process, but since the introduction of the vacuum-pan, which is no more or less than boiling the juice at a lower temperature, so as not to destroy the crystallizable properties of the juice, we began to develop an increased percentage, and hence we have a new era for the sugar interest in Louisiana, Kansas, California, and elsewhere.

This grows out of the fact that science has aided us, so that instead of getting but 50 pounds or 60 or 70 pounds out of a ton of cane, as was once the result, the last experiments in Louisiana developed about 220 pounds of sugar from a ton of cane. In that way our people must go on and learn, and if we will be guided by experience in such experiments we will get more and more sugar from a ton of cane. I will say in this connection that a gentleman from Illinois, one of our most enterprising citizens, Mr. Daniel Thompson, of the parish of St. Mary, Louisiana, has published to the world that the entire product of his last crop gave him a yield of 176 pounds of sugar for every ton of cane ground by the mill process. Mr. Thompson came to Louisiana entirely unfamiliar with the sugar business; but after experiments running through a period of ten or twelve years with the mill process, by the aid of skill and capital, he has made a great success.

It has been objected, Mr. Speaker, that this appropriation will not inure to the benefit of the agriculturist, but solely to the manufacturer.

Now, sir, there would be no opportunity to run a sugar factory without the farmers of that neighborhood found it advantageous to raise sorghum; without the factory there would be no thought of raising the cane. Therefore, I regard their interests as identical, and that what will help one will promote equally the welfare of the other, each in his appropriate sphere.

If I had the time, I could speak of the juice of the beet, which, when the first efforts were directed to utilize it as a sugar-making property, was found to be so refractory and abhorrent that it was only after the most careful and studious tests of science that it was harnessed into successful progress, and from that plant alone, under the support and with the governmental nursing required, Europe now produces one-half of the entire sugar production of the world.

It is true that substantial ground has been gained, but since so large a part of the forward march in the sugar industry towards real permanence and success is of such recent acquisition, why should not every reasonable aid be given to further investigations and further efforts in the line of ascertaining the undeveloped, hidden mine of wealth which may be very near being discovered.

As my time has expired, I must stop.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. In the three minutes I want to say I am satisfied that for years past sugar has been made from sorghum, and that we have made material progress from year to year in that direction, with the aid of these very experiments; and everybody will admit that it will be wonderfully desirable to produce the sugar in this country that we consume in this country Whether it will be done or not, I do not know.

Mr. FELTON. It will be done if you do not take the tariff off.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will not take my three minutes of time to talk about the tariff, and will let me talk about this appropriation to make experiments in ascertaining whether sugar from sorghum can be established as an industry in the United States, as it is not now established, I would be very glad.

Whether it will be done or not I do not know, but is is worth the effort. Since I have been coming to Congress we have spent many million dollars to promote the mining industry. We have appropriated $400,000 every year for the Geological and Geographical Bureau. We support the Smithsonian Institution. We found and promote schools of technology, and agricultural colleges. Why not, in view of this great interest, try every experiment which we can—try to produce in this country the sugar which we require? When you consider the amount involved, the $100,000 is a mere bagatelle. It strikes me nobody should hesitate for a moment in voting that $100,000 for experiments. I would be willing to vote more if necessary, not to carry on the business, but for experiments; and if you find it can be done, for the technical education of the boilers and the special chemists and others until the knowledge is disseminated and the industry placed upon its feet. Then we can let it look out for itself.

Mr. HATCH. I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. YOST].

Mr. YOST. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to emphasize the statement made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] to the effect that this demand does not come from Kansas alone. The Legislature of Virginia, at its last session, unanimously adopted a resolution instructing its Senators and requesting its Representatives to vote for an appropriation to establish an experiment station in Virginia for the manufacture of sugar out of sorghum. Our people feel that they have an interest in this subject, as it promises to open to them a new field for agriculture. God knows the agricultural interests there need such an opening. [Applause.]

Mr. HATCH. As I have yielded the larger portion of the hour and twenty minutes to gentlemen who are in favor of this appropriation I desire now in the few minutes of my time remaining to call the attention of the House to the fact——

Mr. WILKINSON. Excuse me for interrupting; but can you not give me five minutes on this question?

Mr. HATCH. I have not five minutes to spare now.

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. HATCH. I state to the House that gentlemen who are in favor of this amendment and urging concurrence on the part of the House, have had over two-thirds of all the time that has been occupied—nearly three-quarters of the time. That ought to satisfy any reasonable gentleman. I insist now upon the regular order and upon the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri declines to yield.

Mr. HATCH. Certainly as the representative of my committee and the manager on the part of the House I should have time enough to explain their position to the House. I have reserved barely enough time to go over the ground, and I hope I will not be interrupted during the few minutes remaining to me.

Gentlemen talk about appropriations for experiments in sugar in the interest of the agriculturist. The gentleman from Iowa, to whom I yielded three minutes, occupied the entire time trying to impress upon the House the necessity of making experiments in behalf of the agriculturists. The Committee on Agriculture for the last two or three Congresses have been doing that pretty effectually. They have established in connection with agricultural colleges experiment stations in every State in the Union and in one Territory, and have given them an appropriation of $15,000 each for purposes of experiment.

I have stated as plainly and as fully as I have time to do that every single dollar recommended by the Committee on Agriculture has been appropriated and cheerfully appropriated by the Congress of the United States for experiments in the manufacture of sugar, both from sorghum and sugar-cane. It is not a new industry, as the gentleman from South Carolina stated. It has been for years the subject of private enterprise. The Government has taken hold of it and has gone as far as in the judgment of the Commissioner of Agriculture and its employés it was necessary to go for the public good.

Gentlemen forget that this $100,000 thus appropriated comes out of the pockets of the tax-payers, and this proposition is simply to dump it into the pockets of two or three manufacturers. I know what I am talking about. It is simply to give a bonus and a subsidy to half a dozen establishments in the United States. Every dollar of the last appropriation of $150,000 has gone into the coffers of these manufacturers. The gentlemen know it. The Agricultural Department went to Fort Scott, Kans., and to Louisiana and made experiments in the factories of these gentlemen, and these gentlemen got the benefit of every dollar of it.

Mr. RYAN. The American people got the benefit of it.

Mr. HATCH. The American people would have had the benefit of it if the experiments had been properly conducted. The only fact developed that was of any interest to the people has been patented by one of the employés of the Government at this very establishment at Fort Scott.

Mr. PETERS. All that was patented——

Mr. HATCH. Yes; and the Government of the United States, through the Department of Justice, to-day is attempting to set aside that patent.

A MEMBER. And it will be set aside.

Mr. PETERS. All that was patented was using chloride of lime in the diffusion battery.

Mr. DUNN. Without which nothing could be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HATCH. I do not yield, and I have requested gentlemen to whom I have yielded my time so liberally not to interrupt me. Kansas is a cormorant upon every proposition before this House. She has never had enough of anything in the world. She not only wants more money but more time on this floor than any seven States in the Union.

Mr. PETERS. Do you expect us to keep our mouths shut when you make such statements?

Mr. HATCH. No; I know you can not keep your mouth shut, my dear friend, under any circumstances.

Mr. PETERS. Not when you make such statements.

Mr. HATCH. I have not made a statement in regard to this whole matter that the gentleman does not know is true, and he can not produce a document from the beginning of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture on this subject down to the present that will not justify every single statement I have made.

Mr. PETERS. Well, I do not think we are cormorants. We are here doing our duty to our constituents, and if you call us cormorants for that, I for one am willing to stand it.

Mr. HATCH. I did not say the gentlemen were cormorants; I said the State of Kansas. I took particular pains to say that the State was a cormorant, and I do not propose to withdraw that remark. [Laughter.] She is even so greedy that she wants all the Republicanism there is in the United States, and she has got more of that than her share. [Laughter.]

Now, I want the House to understand what the pending motion is. I have moved that the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate; and I am satisfied that if the House wishes to appropriate any further sum for this experimentation, $20,000, or, at the outside, $50,000, is as much as the Senate wants or will insist upon, and is every dollar that can be expended for this purpose. Therefore to concur in the amendment of the Senate now appropriating $100,000 would be simply dumping that much money into the Agricultural Department and requiring the Commissioner to spend it without any necessity or preparation for it at all.

Now, it is not necessary for me to say on behalf of the Committee on Agriculture that not a single proposition has been introduced into this House within the last ten years in favor of the agricultural interests of the country that that committee has not led the fight for on this floor. The Committee on Agriculture willingly advocated here every one of these appropriations for experimentation in sugar-making until the parties themselves told us that they had all the money they could properly expend, and we were bound to take them at their word. They told us they had enough, and, so far from the committee having forced any pledge of that kind from them, it was a voluntary statement made in open committee.

I now yield a minute to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN], who desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk an innocent little amendment which, if adopted, will go far, I think, to destroy interest in this subject.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That in making said investigation and experiments the Commissioner of Agriculture shall not hire, rent, or employ any sugar-mill machinery or plant of any character whatever belonging to any private corporation, company, or person.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That means stop or put up Government works.

The SPEAKER. To what does the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] offer this as an amendment?

Mr. DUNN. I offer it as an amendment to the motion which has been made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] that the House concur in the Senate amendment. If the House concur, I wish it to be done with this proviso.

Mr. PETERS. Do you realize that that virtually means doing nothing at all?

Mr. DUNN. I realize that it will totally destroy the interest of Kansas and of all other localities in this subject.

Mr. HATCH. I now demand the previous question on my motion.

Mr. FELTON. I hope the gentleman will withhold his demand for the previous question until I can have an opportunity to ask him, as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, for some information in regard to a change that has been made in this bill which is of very great interest to the people that I represent.

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. FELTON. In the bill as it went to the Senate there was a provision—I am unable to turn to the section—for payment of expenses of experts to examine into some diseases of trees. When this bill was passed last year there was a proviso inserted that these experts, in the course of their investigation, should not go outside of the United States. At my solicitation, I believe, that clause was taken out of the bill this year before it went to the Senate. I see that it has been inserted in the bill by the conferees. Now, I presented only a few days ago a set of resolutions from the State board of horticulture of California, setting forth the fact that millions of dollars' worth of property were in jeopardy by reason of the ravages of the white scale bug (Icerya purchasi). There are untold millions of these bugs and $20,000,000 dependent on their extermination. It is of vast importance, to the fruit-growers especially, that they should get rid of this bug; yet a provision which would permit a simple trip of these experts to Australia, costing not more than $3,000, is denied to that interest. We hear constantly of the demoralized condition of agriculture in this country, yet this Congress refuses to appropriate $2,500 or $3,000 to take care of a great and important interest like this. I would like to know from the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture why this change was made and by whom.

Mr. HATCH. If the gentleman had been in his seat when we made the first report from the conference committee, he would have learned, as he will find now by reference to the report then submitted, that the Senate insisted on that amendment, and the House conferees, after hearing the statements of the managers on the part of the Senate, recommended concurrence in the amendment. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. FELTON. One moment more.

Mr. HATCH. I can not yield longer. The matter to which the gentleman refers can not be opened at this time; and I hope he will not consume time unnecessarily.

Mr. FELTON. So be it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the other day, when I was discussing the sugar question, my good brethren from Kansas arraigned me pretty sharply on the ground that the matter of making sugar from sorghum had been thoroughly demonstrated, that it had passed beyond the realm of experiment.

Mr. RYAN. No, sir; I beg to say that no such statement was made.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON], his colleague [Mr. PETERS], and the smiling countenance (without having expression in words) of my friend in front of me [Mr. RYAN] all confirmed the idea that this matter was beyond experiment.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Wait a moment.

Mr. RYAN. I do not care to have the gentleman misrepresent me. I stated that experiment had developed the fact that sorghum sugar could be made profitably; I did not for one moment contend that further experimentation was not desirable.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I have not yielded to have the gentleman occupy my time. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this discussion confirm my position that this matter is still under experiment, and that the producers of sorghum are not yet prepared to turn out the millions of pounds of sugar necessary for the people of this country. I say that the position of the gentlemen here to-day confirms the position I took the other day. I am now, as I was then, heartily in favor of continuing these experiments, and am in favor of the $100,000 appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. PETERS. Then we forgive you.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I am, however, confirmed in my position that sugar should be put upon the free-list, or practically so, as these gentlemen are not prepared to supply the needs of the country. I believe that in time the genius of our people will make sugar from sorghum and beets in sufficient quantities to supply the wants of our country. But that time is probably very remote as yet; at all events, while we are experimenting I am opposed to paying nearly $90,000,000 annually from the pockets of the people to enrich foreigners.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen desiring to print or extend remarks in the RECORD may have leave to do so.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that leave will be granted. The Chair hears none.

Mr. HATCH. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that five minutes be given to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILKINSON], to address the House now—not by remarks to be printed in the RECORD after the question is disposed of.

Mr. BLAND. Oh, we all understand this question. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HATCH. I have already yielded to the friends of this appropriation more than three-fourths of my time. I object.

Mr. PERKINS. Do I understand the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] objects?

Mr. HATCH. I do, because I have yielded more than three-fourths of my time to gentlemen on the other side of the question.

Mr. WILKINSON. The gentleman ought not to have read letters from parties who are interested against the diffusion process, and then decline to have those statements answered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] demands the regular order. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] accept the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN]?

Mr. RYAN. No, sir; I desire a vote directly upon the motion to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] declines to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas, and insists upon a vote on the simple motion to concur, which has preference over all other motions. If that be not agreed to, the gentleman from Arkansas can move to concur with an amendment.

Mr. DUNN. I ask that my proviso be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That in making said investigation and experiments the Commissioner of Agriculture shall not hire, rent, or employ any sugar mill, machinery, or plant of any character whatever belonging to any private corporation, company, or person.

Mr. HATCH. I now demand the previous question on the pending motion.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I ask that the Senate amendment be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 23, page 12, insert:

"To enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to continue experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum-cane, including the purchase and transportation of samples and supplies, $100,000: Provided, That the Commissioner is hereby required to make a separate report to Congress, stating fully and accurately an itemized account of every expenditure made under this provision, and the results of all experiments made, and also including the purchase and transportation of samples and supplies."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment just read, and concur in the same.

Mr. GEAR. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on Mr. RYAN's motion to recede; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 126, nays 99, not voting 99; as follows:

YEAS—126.

Adams,	Fuller,	Long,	Sawyer,
Allen, Mich.	Funston,	Lyman,	Scull,
Anderson, Iowa	Gallinger,	Macdonald,	Seney,
Anderson, Kans.	Gay,	Mahoney,	Seymour,
Arnold,	Gear,	Mansur,	Spooner,
Atkinson,	Gest,	Mason,	Steele,
Baker, Ill.	Grout,	McCullogh,	Struble,
Bingham,	Guenther,	McKenna,	Symes,
Boothman,	Harmer,	Milliken,	Taylor, E. B., Ohio
Bound,	Haugen,	Moffitt,	Thomas, Ky.
Brewer,	Henderson, Iowa	Morrill,	Thomas, Wis.
Browne, T. H. B., Va.	Herbert,	Morrow,	Thompson, Ohio
Brumm,	Hermann,	Nelson,	Townshend,
Buchanan,	Hitt,	Nutting,	Turner, Kans.
Bunnell,	Holmes,	O'Donnell,	Vandever,
Butler,	Hooker,	Osborne,	Wade,
Cannon,	Hopkins, Ill.	Outhwaite,	Warner,
Caswell,	Hopkins, Va.	Owen,	Weaver,
Cheadle,	Hovey,	Patton,	Weber,
Clark,	Hunter,	Payson,	West,
Conger,	Jackson,	Perkins,	White, Ind.
Cox,	Johnston, Ind.	Peters,	Whiting, Mass.
Crouse,	Kean,	Phelan,	Wilber,
Dalzell,	Kelley,	Phelps,	Wilkins,
Darlington,	Kennedy,	Post,	Wilkinson,
Dingley,	Kerr,	Pugsley,	Williams,
Dunham,	Ketcham,	Rayner,	Wilson, Minn.
Farquhar,	Laidlaw,	Reed,	Yardley,
Felton,	Laird,	Rice,	Yoder,
Finley,	Lane,	Robertson,	Yost.
Fitch,	Lehlbach,	Romeis,
Flood,	Lind,	Ryan,

NAYS—99.

Abbott,	Cummings,	Johnston, N. C.	Russell, Mass.
Anderson, Miss.	Dargan,	Kilgore,	Sayers,
Anderson, Ill.	Davidson, Ala.	Lafloon,	Shively,
Bacon,	Davidson, Fla.	Lanham,	Simmons,
Bankhead,	Dockery,	Lawler,	Snyder,
Barry,	Dunn,	Lee,	Spinola,
Biggs,	Elliott,	Maish,	Springer,
Bland,	Enloe,	Martin,	Stahlnecker,
Bliss,	Fisher,	Matson,	Stewart, Tex.
Breckinridge, Ark.	Foran,	McAdoo,	Stockdale,
Breckinridge, Ky.	Ford,	McCreary,	Stone, Ky.
Bryce,	Forney,	McRae,	Stone, Mo.
Buckalew,	French,	Mills,	Tarsney,
Burnett,	Gibson,	Montgomery,	Thompson, Cal.
Campbell, F., N. Y.	Glass,	Neal,	Tillman,
Candler,	Grimes,	Norwood,	Tracey,
Caruth,	Hall,	Oates,	Turner, Ga.
Chipman,	Hare,	O'Ferrall,	Vance,
Clardy,	Hatch,	O'Neall, Ind	Walker,
Clements,	Heard,	Peel,	Washington,
Cobb,	Hemphill,	Penington,	Wheeler,
Cockran,	Hiestand,	Pidcock,	Whiting, Mich.
Cothran,	Holman,	Richardson,	Wilson, W. Va.
Cowles,	Hudd,	Rogers,	Wise.
Culberson,	Hutton,	Rowland,

NOT VOTING 99.

Allen, Mass.	Collins,	Hopkins, N. Y.	O'Neill, Mo.
Allen, Miss.	Compton,	Houk,	Parker,
Baker, N. Y.	Cooper,	Howard,	Perry,
Barnes,	Crain,	Jones,	Plumb,
Bayne,	Crisp,	La Follette,	Randall,
Belden,	Cutcheon,	Lagan,	Rockwell,
Belmont,	Davenport,	Landes,	Rowell,
Blanchard,	Davis,	Latham,	Russell, Conn.
Blount,	De Lano,	Lodge,	Rusk,
Boutelle,	Dibble,	Lynch,	Scott,
Bowden,	Dorsey,	Maffett,	Shaw,
Bowen,	Dougherty,	McClammy,	Sherman,
Brower,	Ermentrout,	McComas,	Smith,
Browne, Ind.	Gaines,	McCormick,	Sowden,
Brown, Ohio	Glover,	McKinley,	Stephenson,
Brown, J. R., Va.	Goff,	McKinney,	Stewart, Ga.
Burnes,	Granger,	McMillin,	Stewart, Vt.
Burrows,	Greenman,	McShane,	Taulbee,
Butterworth,	Grosvenor,	Merriman,	Taylor, J. D., Ohio
Bynum,	Hayden,	Moore,	Thomas, Ill.
Campbell, Ohio	Hayes,	Morgan,	White, N. Y.
Campbell, T. J., N. Y.	Henderson, N. C.	Morse,	Whitthorne,
Carlton,	Henderson, Ill.	Newton,	Wickham,
Catchings,	Hires,	Nichols,	Woodburn.
Cogswell,	Hogg,	O'Neill, Pa.

So the motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RYAN, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

During the roll-call the following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. PHELAN with Mr. WEST.

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. LODGE.

Mr. PERRY with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. MCCLAMMY with Mr. NICHOLS.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, with Mr. BAYNE.

Mr. CRISP with Mr. ROWELL.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. HAYDEN.

Mr. CATCHINGS with Mr. COGSWELL.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. T. J. CAMPBELL with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. TAULBEE with Mr. SHERMAN.

Mr. MCMILLIN with Mr. BURROWS.

Mr. ENLOE with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. GREENMAN with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. WHITE, of New York, with Mr. COCKRAN.

Mr. LANDES with Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut.

Mr. MCKINLEY with Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. GRANGER with Mr. ROCKWELL; and

Mr. CUMMINGS with Mr. MCCORMICK.

For this day:

Mr. BARNES with Mr. BAKER, of New York.

Mr. MERRIMAN with Mr. PLUMB.

Mr. RUSK with Mr. DE LANO.

Mr. COMPTON with Mr. DORSEY.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, with Mr. BROWER.

Mr. BLOUNT with Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. On this proposition Mr. BLOUNT would vote "nay," and Mr. ALLEN would vote "yea."

Mr. BELMONT with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. BYNUM with Mr. STEPHENSON until the 12th of July on all political questions and the Mills bill.

On this vote:

Mr. SOWDEN with Mr. J. R. BROWN.

Mr. MCKINNEY with Mr. BOWEN.

Mr. DIBBLE with Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR.

Mr. CARLETON with Mr. GROSVENOR.

Mr. PHELAN. I find I am paired, and I will therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. COGSWELL. My pair was made with Mr. CATCHINGS several days ago, and I thought it was only for that day; but as he seems to have understood it differently I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. WEST. Mr. Speaker, am I paired?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is paired with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PHELAN].

Mr. WEST. I withdraw my vote, then.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PHELAN] changed his vote, finding he was paired with the gentleman from New York. Why not let both votes stand?

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that will be done.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. ENLOE. I am announced as paired with my colleague, Mr. HOUK. That was some days ago, but the pair has expired, and therefore I have voted.

The SPEAKER. The pair will be withdrawn.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I find I am paired with Mr. BURROWS, which I had forgotten for the moment, and therefore will withdraw my vote.

Mr. MOFFITT. My colleague, Mr. PARKER, of New York, is detained at home on account of sickness in his family. If present he would vote in the affirmative on this question.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. RYAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion to concur was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire whether this is all of the amendments about which the conferees have disagreed?

Mr. HATCH. Yes, sir. I withdraw my amendment and will let the House take the responsibility. I have nothing further to say about it.

The SPEAKER. This passes the bill, so far as the House is concerned.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the second amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 196) declaring the true intent and meaning of the act approved May 9, 1888, and also to the amendment of the House to the title thereto.

It further announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 899) for the relief of Mary M. Briggs, and asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SAWYER, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. TURPIE as managers of said conference on its part.

EVENING SESSION FOR CENSUS BILL.

Mr. COX. I am directed by the Committee on the Census to ask unanimous consent that when the hour of 5 o'clock arrives to-day the House will take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, for the purpose of considering the census bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (S. 671) to provide for the sale of Fort Omaha, Nebr., the sale or the removal of the improvements thereon, and for the purchase of a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon;

A bill (S. 1540) granting a pension to Hannah Babb Hutchins; and

A bill (H. R. 10628) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Clay County and Jackson County, Missouri, at a point to be selected consistent with the interests of river navigation between Kansas City, Mo., and a point within 5 miles below said city.

FORT HALL RESERVATION.

Mr. PEEL. On yesterday, at the evening session, the House considered and passed a bill (H. R. 8662) to accept and ratify an agreement made with the Shoshone and Bannack Indians for the surrender and relinquishment to the United States of a portion of the Fort Hall reservation, in the Territory of Idaho, for the purposes of a town site, and for the grant of a right of way through said reservation to the Utah and Northern Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Under the special order it was understood that bills granting rights of way through Indian reservations reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs to which no objection was made were to be considered.

In this case the right of way in this bill is coupled with a grant on the part of these Indians of some 840 acres of land for a town site, which is to be laid off by the Government and sold at not less than its appraised value to the highest bidder, and the money to go into the Treasury for the benefit of the Indians. The bill has been recommended by the Interior Department, in fact it was draughted by the Department; and we passed upon it last evening because it was impossible to separate the right of way contained in the bill from the other provisions.

It was agreed, however, that there should be a motion to reconsider and leave that open until to-day.

I now move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CITROUS WATER COMPANY, ARIZONA.

Mr. PEEL. The same condition of affairs applies to the bill (H. R. 7843) granting to the Citrous Water Company a right of way across the Papago Indian reservation in Maricopa County, Arizona. This bill was also passed, it being entirely unobjectionable; but as the spirit of the order applied to the granting of rights for railroads, there was some question as to whether this bill was within the order, and hence the same plan was pursued.

I now move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay that motion upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I desire to submit a conference report.

I will state, Mr. Speaker, that this report is quite lengthy, and I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading. It is signed by all the conferees, and it contains a reference to the numerous amendments in dispute between the two Houses. If the report was read, it would not convey the information perhaps that the House desires; and I ask instead that the reading be dispensed with and that the statement explaining the report be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is right.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What is the bill?

The SPEAKER. The District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8989) "making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 13, 14, 20, 21, 33, 50, 56, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 72, 77, 82, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 118, 120, 128, 161, 162, 163, 164, 167, 169, and 172.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 7, 8, 10, 16, 18, 19, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 46, 47, 48, 51, 54, 57, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 73, 78, 80, 81, 83, 84, 86, 92, 93, 94, 105, 106, 109, 112, 113, 116, 117, 119, 122, 124, 125, 127, 129, 130, 131, 136, 137, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 148, 149, 151, 152, 168, 171, 174, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 183, 185, 186, 187, 188, 190, 191, and 192, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 13 of said amendment strike out the words "three thousand" and in lieu thereof insert the words "two thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$43,864;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended as follows: Strike out all after the word "repealed" therein; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$20,400;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$400;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$11,600;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$615,000," and strike out, in line 24, page 5 of the bill, the words "on the" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in the discretion of the commissioners on;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$144,600;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$38,600;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 9 of said amendment strike out "Rhode Island avenue" and insert "Boundary" in lieu thereof; in lines 10 and 11 strike out "New Jersey avenue" and insert "Boundary" in lieu thereof; in line 16 strike out "Sixth" and insert "Fifth;" insert after line 18 the following: "Thirteenth-street intersection to B street; Eighth street, from S street to Boundary;" and in lieu of the sum proposed in said Senate amendment insert "$191,400;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 9 of said amendment strike out the word "Half" and insert in lieu thereof "South Capitol," and after said line 9 insert "L street, from First to Four-and-a-half streets;" and in lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$52,800;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After line 2 of said amendment insert the following:

"Seventh street, from D street to Virginia avenue.

"South Carolina avenue, from Seventh to Ninth streets."

In lines 9 and 10 of said amendment strike out "Pennsylvania avenue" and insert "G street."

And in lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$54,400."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 10 of said amendment strike out "Massachusetts" and insert "Maryland;" and after line 12 insert "Sixth street, from H to K streets;" and strike out line 19 of said amendment; and in lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$129,700;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$3,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$95,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$90,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the amended paragraph; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 74, 75, and 76: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 74, 75, and 76, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the amended paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For the grading and paving of Fourteenth street northward from the Boundary, for the grading and paving of Stoughton street and of Chapin street from Fourteenth street extended to Wayland Seminary, and the paving of Pomeroy street in front of the Freedman's Hospital, $35,000; in all, $88,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 79: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 79, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Including retaining-wall on M street, at the approach to the new free bridge across the Potomac, which bridge is hereby placed under the jurisdiction of the commissioners of the District of Columbia;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 85: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$77,000," and add at the end of the amended paragraph the following: "Provided, That no expenditure hereunder shall be made at a price higher than 27 cents per 1,000 square yards;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$105,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 95: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$958,971;" and in line 19, page 12 of the bill, strike out "sixty-four thousand three" and insert in lieu thereof "sixty-six thousand eight;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 107: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 107, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$137,711;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$22,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 114: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$8,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 115: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 121: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 121, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$315,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 123: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 123, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,700;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 126: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 126, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "twenty-two;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 132: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 132, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,400;" and after the word "building," in line 24, page 15 of the bill, insert the words "and cells;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 133: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 133, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$14,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 134: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 134, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert the following: "$15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 135: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 135, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$406,540;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 138: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 138, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "nine;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 144: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 144, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 145: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 145, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 146: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 146, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted insert the following: "For erecting engine-house in southeastern section of Washington and furnishing same, $12,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; hose carriage for same, $700;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 147: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 147, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$141,200;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 150: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 150, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"The commissioners of the District of Columbia shall not, after the 15th day of September, 1888, permit or authorize any additional telegraph, telephone, electric-lighting, or other wires to be erected or maintained on or over any of the streets or avenues of the city of Washington; and said commissioners are hereby directed to investigate and report to Congress at the beginning of its next session the best method of removing all electric wires from the air or surface of the streets, avenues, and alleys, and the best method of interring the same under-ground, and such legal regulation thereof as may be needed; and they shall report what manner of conduits should be maintained by the city of Washington, if any, and the cost of constructing and maintaining the same, and what charge, if any, should be made by the city for the use of its conduits by the persons or corporations placing wires therein, and upon what terms and conditions the same should be used when required so to do, and for such investigation $1,000 is hereby appropriated: Provided, That the commissioners of the District may, under such reasonable conditions as they may prescribe, authorize the wires of any existing telegraph, telephone, or electric-light company now operating in the District of Columbia to be laid under any street, alley, highway, footway, or sidewalk in the District whenever, in their judgment, the public interest may require the exercise of such authority; such privileges as may be granted hereunder to be revocable at the will of Congress without compensation, and no such authority to be exercised after the termination of the present Congress."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 170: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 170, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter insert the following: "all under the control of the commissioners;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 173: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 173, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted insert the following: "all under the control of the commissioners;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 175: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 175, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "association" in line 8 of said amendment down to and including line 10, and insert a period in lieu of the semicolon after the said word "association;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 189: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 189, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$17,836;" and in line 3, on page 25 of the bill, strike out "thirty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

J. C. CLEMENTS,
FELIX CAMPBELL,
LOUIS E. McCOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. B. PLUMB,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8969) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1889, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended on the Senate amendments as compared with the bill as it passed the House:

On amendments 1, 2, 3, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 36, and 37: Transfers certain employés heretofore provided for under the engineer commissioner's office to the office of the two civil commissioners without any increase in their number or compensation, except the salary of the inspector of plumbing is increased from $1,800 to $2,000; and increases the amount for contingent expenses under the civil commissioners from $2,500 to $3,000.

On amendment 4: Restores the provision repealing the law which provided that appropriations for contingent expenses of the District should be under the direction and in the sole discretion of the commissioners, and strikes out the provision that no part of appropriations made by the bill shall be used for the purchase of street-car tickets.

On amendments 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10: Authorizes the cashier in the collector's office to act in the necessary absence or inability of the collector, provides for two additional clerks, at $1,200 each, and increases the contingent expenses in the collector's office from $700 to $2,700; and appropriates $2,000 for expenses of collecting overdue personal taxes.

On amendments 13 and 14: Strikes out the proposed increase of contingent expenses under the auditor's office from $300 to $350.

On amendments 15, 16, and 17: Increases amount for contingent expenses under attorney's office from $300 to $400, and appropriates $2,500 for judicial expenses, including printing of briefs and witness fees in the District cases before the supreme court of the District.

On amendments 18 and 19: Increases the amount for contingent expenses and for holding inquests under the coroner's office from $500 to $700.

On amendments 20 and 21: Leaves the appropriation for contingent expenses for the markets at $400, as provided by the House.

On amendment 35: Provides that fees collected for leases of streets and reservations shall be covered into the Treasury.

On amendment 38: Strikes out proposed amendment authorizing expenses, other than those for overseers and inspectors, to be paid from appropriations for sewer, street, or road work.

On amendments 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, and 49, relating to the improvement of streets and avenues and replacement of wood pavements: Appropriates $615,000 for the entire work, being $142,678 less than was proposed by the Senate, and $157,224 more than was contained in the bill as it passed the House. There are enumerated in the schedule of work to be done during the year all streets and avenues inserted by the House, as well as those proposed by the Senate, it being left to the discretion of the commissioners to select the particular streets and avenues that shall be improved within the amount of money which is appropriated.

On amendment 50: Strikes out the proposed increase of limit of prices that may be paid for asphalt pavement from $2 to $2.25 per square yard.

On amendments 51 and 52: Increases the amount for grading streets, alleys, and roads from $10,000 to $15,000.

On amendments 53 and 54: Increases the amount for repairs to pavements from $85,000 to $95,000, and authorizes contracts to be made therefor for periods not exceeding five years, subject to annual appropriations.

On amendment 55: Increases the amount for permit work from $40,000 to $90,000.

On amendment 56: Leaves the amount for repairs to streets, avenues, and alleys at $35,000, as passed by the House.

On amendment 57: Increases the amount for repairs of county roads from $30,000 to $45,000.

On amendment 58: Strikes out the provision for extending Eighteenth street to Columbia road.

On amendments 59, 60, and 61: Leaves the provision to grade and regulate Howard avenue at $7,700, as proposed by the House.

On amendments 62 and 63: Restores the provision to grade Jefferson, Jackson, and Washington streets, in the eastern section, at a cost of $4,000.

On amendments 64 and 65: Appropriates $13,140 to grade and macadamize Harrison street and Good Hope road from the navy-yard bridge to Bowen road, in the eastern section.

On amendment 66: Provides for the pavement of Nicholls avenue, in the eastern section, from Harrison instead of Washington street.

On amendment 67: Strikes out provision of $10,000 to extend Sixteenth street beyond the Boundary.

On amendments 68 and 69: Appropriates $15,000 for work on Fourth street northeast, extending from the Bunker Hill road, and on First street, extending to Michigan avenue, and thence along said avenue to Lincoln road.

On amendments 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, and 76: Appropriates $35,000 for grading and paving Fourteenth street northward from the Boundary, for grading and paving Stoughton and Chapin streets from Fourteenth street to Wayland Seminary, and for paving Pomeroy street in front of Freedmen's Hospital; and $1,000 to grade Thirteenth street from Clifton avenue northward.

On amendment 77: Restores the provision of $10,000 for condemnation of streets, roads, and alleys.

On amendment 78: Increases the amount for surveys of the District from $5,000 to $10,000.

On amendments 79, 80, and 81: Increases the amount for construction and repairs of bridges from $12,500 to $14,500, and provides for a retaining wall on M street at the approach of the new foot-bridge across the Potomac, and places that bridge under the jurisdiction of the commissioners.

On amendment 82: Strikes out proposed increase for cleaning and repairing sewers and basins from $30,000 to $35,000.

On amendment 83: Increases the amount for main and pipe sewers from $55,000 to $70,000.

On amendment 84: Increases the amount for constructing suburban sewers from $30,000 to $35,000.

On amendment 85: Increases the amount for sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning streets from $70,000 to $77,000, with a provision that no expenditure shall be made thereunder at a price higher than 27 cents per thousand square yards.

On amendment 86: Extends the operation of the parking commission to the suburban streets.

On amendment 87: Increases the amount for gas-lighting the streets from $100,000 to $105,000.

On amendments 92 and 93: Requires electric lights to be of 1,000 actual instead of 2,000 nominal candle power.

On amendment 94: Inserts a provision that the appropriation for harbor and river front shall include "other necessary items and services" not mentioned in the paragraph.

On amendments 95, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, and 122, relating to public schools: Leaves the provision touching janitors for and care of buildings and grounds as fixed by the House, except that the care of buildings and rented rooms is limited to $48 per annum for each room instead of $50; fixes the amount for repairs and improvements to school buildings, including construction of fire-proof stairways to Lincoln Building, at $35,000 instead of $20,000; increases the amount for school teachers from $464,310 to $466,810; increases the amount for sanitary improvements in old buildings from $1,000 to $3,000; increases the amount for contingent expenses from $20,000 to $22,500; increases the amount for fuel from $20,000 to $22,000; leaves the amount for industrial instruction at $8,000, as fixed by the House; increases the amount for furniture for new school buildings from $8,000 to $9,000; increases the amount for two new school buildings in the sixth school division from $10,000 to $12,000, and increases the amount for new school buildings from $225,000 to $315,000, being for two new buildings in the first school division, one in the second school division, one in the third school division, one in the fourth school division, one in the fifth school division, one in the seventh school division, and two in the eighth school division.

On amendments 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, and 135, relating to Metropolitan police, increases pay of superintendent of police from $2,600 to $2,700; increases the number of lieutenants from eight to nine, the number of sergeants from twenty to twenty-two, the number of privates of class 1 from one hundred and fifteen to one hundred and forty-five; strikes out proposed increase of privates of class 2 from one hundred and forty to one hundred and sixty; increases the number of station-keepers from seventeen to nineteen, the laborers from eight to nine, the drivers of patrol wagons from four to five; leaves the appropriations for repairs of stations, including police-court building and cells, at $2,400, as fixed by the House; increases the amount of miscellaneous and contingent expenses from $11,500 to $14,000; and appropriates $15,000 for purchase of lot and erecting and furnishing a station-house in northeast Washington.

On amendments 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, and 147, relating to fire department: Provides for two assistant chief engineers, instead of two foremen acting as assistant engineers; increases the number of foremen from seven to nine, the firemen from seven to eight, the hostlers from nine to ten, the privates from sixty to sixty-six, and the watchmen from three to four; increases the amount for purchase of hose from $3,000 to $4,500, the amount for purchases of horses from $1,000 to $4,000; appropriates $12,000 for erecting engine-house in Southeast Washington and furnishing the same, and $7,000 for a hose-carriage.

On amendments 148 and 149: Provides for an expert repair-man, at $960, for the telegraph and telephone service.

On amendment 158: Strikes out the entire paragraph appropriating $36,000 for putting District telegraph and telephone wires under-ground, and providing that the commissioners shall require all telegraph, telephone, and other wires to be removed from streets and alleys wherefrom the District wires are taken or may be removed, and substitutes for the whole provision the following:

The commissioners of the District of Columbia shall not, after the 15th day of September, 1888, permit or authorize any additional telegraph, telephone, electric-lighting, or other wires to be erected or maintained on or over any of the streets or avenues of the city of Washington, and said commissioners are hereby directed to investigate and report to Congress at the beginning of its next session the best method of removing all electric wires from the air or surface of the streets, avenues, and alleys, and the best method of interring the same underground, and such legal regulation thereof as may be needed, and they shall report what manner of conduits should be maintained by the city of Washington, if any, and the cost of constructing and maintaining the same, and what charge, if any, should be made by the city for the use of its conduits by the persons or corporations placing wires therein, and upon what terms and conditions the same should be used when required so to do, and for such investigation $1,000 is hereby appropriated: Provided, That the commissioners of the District may, under such reasonable conditions as they may prescribe, authorize the wires of any existing telegraph, telephone, or electric-light company now operating in the District of Columbia to be laid under any street, alley, highway, footway, or sidewalk in the District, whenever in their judgment the public interest may require the exercise of such authority—such privileges as may be granted hereunder to be revocable at the will of Congress without compensation, and no such authority to be exercised after the termination of the present Congress.

On amendments 151 and 152: Increases the amount for contingent expenses under the health department from $3,500 to $4,000.

On amendments 161, 162, 163, 164, 167, 168, and 169, relating to the Washington Asylum: Leaves the provision for the same as fixed by the House, except $3.0 is given for introduction of gas.

On amendments 170, 171, and 172 relating to Reform School: Places the expenditures thereunder under the control of the commissioners, increases the amount for the support of inmates from $25,000 to $26,000, and strikes out proposed increase from $500 to $500 for grading, draining, and improving the grounds.

On amendments 173 and 174, relating to the Industrial Home School: Places the expenditures thereof under the control of the commissioners, and appropriates $1,500 for a new boiler and for repairing and restocking the greenhouses.

On amendment 175: Appropriates $2,500 for temporary food and lodging to indigent persons, $1,500 of which sum may be allotted by the commissioners to the Washington Night Lodging House Association.

On amendments 176, 177, 178, and 183: Appropriates $1,000 to enable the National Association for Destitute Colored Women and Children to care for colored foundlings; appropriates $5,000 for erecting a ward for colored foundlings in connection with the Washington Hospital for Foundlings, and strikes out provision requiring the commissioners to report to Congress whether any institution in the District has refused admission to foundlings on account of race or color.

On amendment 178: Appropriates $5,000 for additional accommodations for the St. Rose Industrial School.

On amendments 180 and 181: Increases the amount for improvements to the buildings of the National Homeopathic Hospital from $2,500 to $3,500.

On amendment 185: Extends provision for emergency expenditures to "other cases of emergency not otherwise sufficiently provided for."

On amendments 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, relating to the water department: Increases the pay of one clerk from $900 to $1,000; provides for a draughtsman at $1,500, and six inspectors at $900 each; and reduces the appropriation for engineers, firemen, etc., from $135,000 to $130,000; and appropriates $31,000 for laying a new water-main from K street, northwest, down Fourteenth street to B street, southwest.

On amendment 191: Strike out the following, which was inserted as section 3 of the bill by the House:

"That the Treasurer of the United States is hereby directed and authorized to apply such portion as may be deemed expedient of any surplus which may remain at the close of the fiscal year 1888, and of each fiscal year thereafter, of the general revenues of the District of Columbia in excess of one-half of those appropriations payable equally out of the revenues of the District and the United States, to the payment of the balance yet remaining unpaid of the debt of the District of Columbia created by the act approved July 15, 1882, entitled, An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes: Provided, That the amount of said surplus shall first be reported to the commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Treasurer of the United States by the First Comptroller of the Treasury when called upon to do so."

On amendment 192: Inserts the following as a new section:

"That all moneys received from sales of animals or material of any sort purchased under appropriations, other than for the water department, for the District of Columbia, made since July 1, 1878, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and the District in equal parts; and all balances of appropriations made for the District of Columbia under section 3 of the act of June 11, 1878, entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia," remaining unexpended at the end of two years from the close of the fiscal year for which such appropriations were or may be made, shall be covered into the Treasury, one-half to the credit of the surplus fund and one-half to the credit of the general fund of the District of Columbia."

The bill as agreed upon appropriates $5,045,321.32, being $335,108.65 less than as it passed the Senate, $519,320 more than as it passed the House, $760,730.66 more than was appropriated for the fiscal year 1888, and $229,381.03 less than was submitted in the estimates for the fiscal year 1889.

J. C. CLEMENTS,
FELIX CAMPBELL,
LOUIS E. McCOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER (before the reading of the above was concluded). I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading, as this is quite a lengthy report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state for the information of the House that the report has already been printed in the RECORD and appears in this morning's edition. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the statement, and that it be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. CLEMENTS moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope gentlemen will be given an opportunity to present their reports.

Mr. STEELE. I have a report I wish to make.

Mr. MILLS. I have no objection to reports being presented.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, gentlemen having reports to make will be permitted to hand them in at the Clerk's desk.

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. MILLS was agreed to.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

PURCHASERS OF COLORADO LANDS.

Mr. PAYSON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 9056) to protect purchasers of lands lying in the vicinity of Denver, Colo., heretofore withdrawn by the executive department of the Government as lying within the limits of certain railroad grants, and afterwards held to lie without their limits; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RELEASING THE ESTATE OF ASHER R. EDDY.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9298) releasing the estate of Asher R. Eddy, late lieutenant-colonel and quartermaster, United States Army, deceased, and George W. Gibbs and R. L. Ogden, sureties on his official bond; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JESSE SPENCER.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9663) granting a pension to Jesse Spencer; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FRANCIS P. VERNON.

Mr. MORRILL also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7912) for the relief of Francis P. Vernon; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. DULCENA NEAL.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 9341) granting a pension to Mrs. Dulcena Neal; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

J. H. BUGG AND OTHERS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10401) for the relief of J. H. Bugg and others; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN N. DORR, SR.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 267) for the relief of John N. Dorr, sr.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

A. W. POLLARD.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3670) for the relief of A. W. Pollard; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HUGH I. M'NARY.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5137) for the relief of Hugh I. McNary, executor of A. C. Thomson, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

OLDHAM COUNTY, KENTUCKY.

Mr. STONE also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5889) for the relief of Oldham County, Kentucky; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MUCK-A-PEC-WAK-KEN-ZAH.

Mr. BLISS, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 6764) to grant a pension to "Muck-a-pec-wak-ken-zah," or "John," an Indian who aided in saving the lives of many white people in the Indian outbreak in Minnesota in the year 1862; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on Territories, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10614) to organize the territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed.

BREVET RANK OF OFFICERS OF THE UNITED STATES ARMY.

Mr. CUTCHEON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendment the bill (S. 1323) to authorize the President to confer brevet rank on officers of the United States Army for gallant services in Indian campaigns; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THE TARIFF.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Flax or linen thread, twine, and pack thread and all manufactures of flax, or of which flax shall be the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment to the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the paragraph by striking out "twenty-five" and inserting "forty."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] is recognized, and if there be no objection he will be permitted to proceed for ten minutes without interruption.

There was no objection.

Mr. PHELPS. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, that it is worth while to say anything. I can not help thinking that whatever the fact and whatever the argument, it will be of no avail; and I can not help feeling that I speak to a court which has already made its decision.

How can I feel otherwise when I recall the facts? The Committee on Ways and Means refused to let any laborer or any manufacturer tell them about the facts, refused to let any representative make to them any argument, and then withdrew into the dark privately to prepare the Mills bill, a code of decisions which, like the laws of the Medes and the Persians, altereth not. This was the first step in their great drama, which, if it is successfully carried to the end, will be a tragedy to the interests of American industry. For their next step, confronted with the parliamentary necessity of taking their iron code out into the sunlight of the House and into the dangers of a discussion, forced to take it into the House, where the sacred personnel of their own bench needed to be enlarged by the admission of the whole of the Democratic majority, there was but one step left, and in their desperation they had the nerve to take it. They summoned their majority and imposed an oath upon every one of them that no Democratic member should vote in favor of any amendment not adopted by the caucus, no matter how glaring was the mistake, the folly, or the injustice which the discussion in this House might reveal.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PHELPS. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Do I understand you to say that this side of the House either imposed an oath or a promise on members on this side of the House that every one of them would favor the Mills bill as it stood and oppose any amendment?

Mr. PHELPS. I can not say how binding a caucus resolution may be on the consciences of the Democratic gentlemen who attend them, but I am here to say, and I am now answering your question, and I defy any gentleman in that caucus to contradict it, that a resolution was introduced, and that a resolution, as I am informed, was unanimously passed, that no amendment introduced into this House should receive the support of Democratic votes unless it were an amendment that had been first passed upon and approved by the Democratic caucus. Am I right? Dare the gentleman deny that that resolution was introduced and that that resolution was passed nem. con.?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. That is simply untrue. I stand here on my personal honor and say that that is untrue.

Mr. PHELPS. Then I am very glad to hear that a report that was telegraphed by the Associated Press to all the cities of the United States, and which has never before been contradicted, is to-day contradicted by the gentleman from Minnesota. And, however hard it may be to believe it, I accept the contradiction, although I am filled with wonder and amaze to see how faithfully that resolution, which, if the gentleman is correct, existed only in the imagination of the reporter, has been obeyed by those who never heard it introduced and who never voted upon it in caucus. [Applause on the Republican side of the House.]

I am here to say that if my observations have been correct as I sat here day after day, there has not been an amendment, however sensible, however useful, introduced by a gentleman on this side of the House which has not been rejected by the Democratic majority.

Now, I ask, Mr. Chairman, in view of this condition of affairs, what incentive is there for any practical legislator? I mean by a practical legislator one who does not want to waste his own time or to waste the time of the House. What inducement is there for him to offer any suggestions upon this bill? There is no inducement unless a man is willing to look over the stolid mass of caucused Democracy that sits opposite to us to that court of appeals which sits in the Senate, or beyond the Senate to that grander court of last resort, the people of the United States, who will hear the workingman, who will hear the manufacturer, who will hear the representatives of the people, and who will give their decision.

The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee may boast that his House will pass his bill next week. I assure him confidently that the people of the United States will not pass the Mills bill next November. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MILLS. Let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey has not yet concluded his remarks.

Mr. PHELPS. Now, Mr. Chairman, having, I admit, rather in view this appellate tribunal than the massed majority which sits opposite to me, I wish in a few moments to offer a specimen brick of the edifice which they have constructed in darkness. I want to show that the paragraph which proposes a reduction from the present rate of 40 per cent. to 25 per cent. is in every particular a mistake; that it defeats all the objects which the creators of this bill pretended to have in mind when they created it. I shall prove that this reduction will not diminish but will increase the income. I shall prove that it will throw thousands of skilled workmen out of employment. I shall prove that the machinery where they find their employment will be reshipped to the country from which it came. In making this proof I shall summon the very best witness. I shall summon a witness who is the very man who will pay this increased income at the custom-house, the very man who will reluctantly be forced to discharge these workingmen, and the same man who, having imported his machinery and paid 45 per cent. to get it into this country, will have to reship it to the land from which it was brought.

Now, who is my witness? The firm of Barbour & Brothers is the oldest, the largest, the wealthiest establishment engaged in the manufactures of this industry. Their reputation belongs to two continents. In Ireland and New Jersey they have mills of the largest capacity. Years ago, before the war, they had only the Irish mill, in which they manufactured and sent to and sold in the American market, with a fair profit, their linen thread and cord. After the passage of our tariff bill in 1861 they lost the American market. They met this contingency promptly and with courage. They sent three of their own brotherhood across the ocean; they brought with them their machinery and their capital, and what was worth still more, their energy, their honesty, and their courage. They built up in the city of Paterson a magnificent palace larger than any palace which they had seen in the Old World from which they came. Those palaces were palaces of ostentation and ease; the palace that they raised on the banks of the Passaic was a palace of industry, and that is only one of the larger cells which have honeycombed Paterson and made it a busy hive of happy human industry. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, my witness is William Barbour, the head of this vast establishment, the son of one of those brothers who immigrated from Ireland. William Barbour was born in America, and is a man of ardent patriotism, of the highest character, and of the greatest responsibility. Through me he testifies here to-day, and takes the responsibility of his words. He testifies that during the past five years, under the present rate of duty, the finer lines of thread could be manufactured in his Irish establishment more profitably than in his Jersey establishment, and that upon those invoices he has been paying $60,000 a year for duty. He says now that if the purposes of the Mills bill are carried out and this duty is reduced from 40 per cent. to 25 per cent. it will be profitable for his concern to import four times the quantity they now import, and that they will pay upon those increased importations not the $60,000 which Barbour Brothers now pay, but $150,000 per annum. When William Barbour made that statement I turned quickly to the table where are the estimates of what is expected to be the reduction of the surplus made by this reduction of the duty upon linen thread, and I found that the increased duty which this single firm of Barbour Brothers & Co. will be obliged to pay under the reduced tariff equals, or substantially equals, the whole amount which the framers of this bill expect to derive from the whole line of linen thread importations. There is a reduction of the surplus! There is a reduction with a vengeance, the result of which is that the whole amount which these gentlemen expect to get into their Treasury from this industry will be paid by a single establishment, leaving the revenues to be swollen way beyond their estimate and way beyond the present income by the duties which will be paid by other establishments engaged in the same industry. They are not so large as this, but they are large, thrifty, and existing elsewhere—in New Jersey, in New York, in Pennsylvania, in Ohio, and, I am glad to see, as one of the first beams of the dawning sun, even in the State of Kentucky.

What further does my witness say? That if, as he supposes, his importations must need be quadrupled, in that case he must discharge his hundreds of American workingmen and, worse than that, he must send back his machinery to Lisburn, in Ireland, from whence it came. And just here, in order to show that the labor which the Mills bill takes from these American workingmen is not underpaid, he testifies to this fact, which he knows as an owner and manager both in the Irish mill and in the New Jersey mill. He is familiar with the pay-roll in each mill, and he testifies that on the Irish pay-roll there are the names of 2,900 British subjects who enjoy the blessings of free trade; that on the Jersey pay-roll there are the names of 1,400 American citizens who enjoy the blessings of a Republican tariff; and that the pay-roll which rewards 2,900 free-trade British subjects is substantially the same as that which rewards 1,400 protected American citizens. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended.

Mr. BLAND. I shall have to object, Mr. Chairman. We want to get a vote on this.

Mr. PHELPS. I shall not occupy more than five minutes more.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not speak often, and I trust his time will be extended.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New Jersey be extended.

Mr. BLAND. If we are going to extend the time for one gentleman we must extend it for all. I shall object to one and all.

Mr. WEAVER rose and was recognized.

Mr. PHELPS. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New Jersey later. The Chair has already recognized the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from New Jersey is to occupy five minutes more, I shall be very glad to have him occupy it now.

Mr. PHELPS. I am obliged to the gentleman. I move to strike out the last word in order to continue this testimony, but before doing so I wish to say that it does not surprise me that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is unwilling to hear the truth even after he is buttressed by a caucus resolution which seems to hold him and his colleagues firmly in hand.

Mr. BLAND. Now, Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman talks nothing but politics, I do object. If he was making an argument on this bill——

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] be made to keep in order.

Mr. BLAND. I hope the rules will be enforced.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Live up to them yourself, my friend.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to continue this testimony, and I will be brief in doing so.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I want to understand whether the gentleman can proceed in violation of the rules of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated the situation and supposed the gentleman from Missouri understood it. When the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] had used up his time objection was made to extending it. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] rose and was recognized, and the gentleman from Iowa thereupon yielded to the gentleman from New Jersey, who moved to strike out the last word, and is proceeding in order. The Chair was obliged to recognize the gentleman when he offered the amendment.

Mr. BLAND. If the Chair recognizes that as being in order that is what I object to.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Chairman, I did not want to be deprived, even by the wonted discourtesy of the gentleman from Missouri——

Mr. BLAND. There is no discourtesy——

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. PHELPS. Of an opportunity to state that my witness prefers a request. In view of the injury which he shows is done to his industry, I did not wish to sit down without also giving prominence to that request. It seems to me it is a proper one. If this reduction be made and this bill passed, the Democratic majority which destroys his business should at least be—not generous enough—we do not expect that from a party which counts among its members the gentleman from Missouri; but that when they destroy the industry by which the Irish ancestors of Mr. Barbour were induced to bring their machinery into this country, and to pay 45 per cent. upon it, they should be just enough to pay the children and heirs of these pioneers the 45 per cent. which their ancestors expended when they imported that machinery. And I make the appeal the more heartily because, as I think I have shown, there is no way connected with this paragraph by which the gentlemen on the other side will have any opportunity to reduce the surplus unless they are willing to reduce it by paying back the 45 per cent. on the machinery which they banish from the country.

If, as I have shown, the amount of income will be increased by the making of this reduction; if, as I have shown, workingmen by the hundred and thousand will be put out of employment; if, in addition to this, the machinery will be carried out of the country and its further capacity for use here be destroyed forever, then it is evident that, looking to the interest of the laborer and of the manufacturer and of the surplus itself (the only interest which gentlemen on the other side ever claim to pay attention to), this proposition to reduce the tax on linen thread is a mistake and a failure.

But I am here also to say, not on the testimony of William Barbour, but as a fact, that they will not benefit the consumer, because ever since that industry has been introduced the cost of its product to the consumer has continually diminished. When Barbour Brothers introduced their Mackay thread for shoes they sold it at 90 cents a pound. They have reduced the cost to the consumer all these years, until now the price-list shows that they sell it at 57 cents a pound. First they sold spool-thread at $1.07 a pound; now they sell it for 68½ cents a pound. Has the consumer been injured?

This reduction, as proposed in this paragraph, hurts every industry and disappoints every purpose which the committee had in mind. Ought not my amendment to prevail?

And in view of this, which is only one instance of the brilliant series of mistakes which they have scattered all over the pamphlet of their Mills code [laughter], and remembering that it was the Republican party that introduced and developed the tariff and proved it to be the best enginery man ever devised not only to increase the production, but also to diminish cost, may I not confidently claim, as I do, that the American people when they come to pass upon the Mills bill will say, "For God's sake let the Republican party who devised and who understand and who love this enginery, if it needs any repairs, make them themselves, and not leave them to the blundering of a half-hearted and ignorant Democracy." [Applause.]

In connection with his remarks Mr. PHELPS submitted the following letter:

NEW YORK, March 31, 1888.

DEAR SIR: As a stockholder and director of Barbour Flax Spinning Company of Paterson, N. J., I wish to make a statement to you regarding the flax-thread industry, and to call your attention to the effect which the proposed Mills bill would have upon it.

Notwithstanding the fact that the duty on linen thread is at present 40 per cent., this company has paid on an average for the past five years over $60,000 a year in duties on the finer sorts of linen thread, finished and ready for market, which it was found more profitable to import than to manufacture here.

The Mills bill would cut down protection on these goods to 25 per cent., and as a consequence would shut down a large portion of machinery and throw hundreds of hands out of employment. Should this bill pass, I think I do not overstate the case when I say that the company would find it profitable to import four times the quantity previously imported. Therefore, instead of reducing the revenue in this particular case to $37,500 it would in reality increase it to $150,000.

While I am an American born, and the industry I represent in Paterson, N. J., is thoroughly American, I am also a large stockholder in a flax spinning company in Ireland; and that you may judge of the relative wages paid in the two countries, I would state that the pay-rolls of the two mills, as recently compared, differed only about $500, the number of hands in the Irish mill being 2,900 against 1,400 in the New Jersey mill.

There is not a system of linen-thread machinery in this country which has not been imported, paying a duty of 45 per cent. If the object of the Mills bill is to reduce the surplus, should it not embody a clause refunding the duty on machinery, which, on account of insufficient protection, must be reshipped abroad?

The German Government, as you know, has recently adopted a system of protection. The company in Ireland with which I am connected, and which has manufactured threads in Ireland for the German trade for the past twenty-five years, has been obliged under the new law to build a factory in Germany to hold its trade; and it is safe to say that the money taken out of Germany during the past ten years will be reinvested in Germany within a year.

Yours, truly,

WM. BARBOUR.

Hon. W. MCKINLEY, Jr.,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the eloquent words of the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS]; but I am somewhat surprised to find him advocating an increase in the rate of duty upon thread from 25 to 40 per cent. ad valorem and in the next breath claiming that he is a friend of the laboring men and women of this country. His amendment, if adopted, will increase the price of sewing-thread to the poor sewing women of New York and his own State. The phrase "American workngmen," which the gentleman uses with so much fluency, is a generic term; it includes the working men and women not only of his section of the Union but of mine. It includes the graugers of Iowa, who were so unceremoniously dealt with and punished in the late Chicago convention, before which the distinguished gentleman was a candidate for the Vice-Presidency of the United States. I hold in my hand an interview published in the Washington Post of July 3—the present month—an interview with the gentleman from New Jersey, which bears all the ear-marks of a candid and accurate report of what the gentleman said. I ask the Clerk to read the portion of that interview which I have marked, in order to show how the Republican convention treated the Republican farmers of my State and the candidate whom they presented for nomination.

The Clerk read as follows:

So, too, ALLISON was more thought of than the votes indicated, but through all the discussion there had grown and strengthened the belief that the candidate must come from a doubtful State. Even zealous HENDERSON could not claim that Iowa was in doubt, but what really destroyed the hope of Mr. ALLISON'S friends was the conviction that since the extreme granger sentiment had taken New York's candidate out of the run it was not policy to select a granger candidate. In vain ALLISON'S friends said that his personal record was that of a man who had held the scales between the two extremes, the prairie and Wall street.

That failed to satisfy the leaders.

What else could you expect? The answer was that his State is the home of the granger and the head center of its influences, and the convention admitted the force of the answer.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, I take it for granted that this is a truthful report of the interview had with the gentleman from New Jersey. The farmers of Iowa will resent this open and undisguised insult, and they will answer once for all the defiant and impudent assumption, openly avowed by the confederated monopolies, that the people of Iowa are to be disciplined and punished because, forsooth, they have dared to enact through their Legislature anti-monopoly legislation. You were able to successfully boycott them in your convention. It will be their turn by and by. As the gentleman has eloquently stated, there is a higher court, the court of last resort—the American people. The people of Iowa and of the whole Northwest will give you a lively hearing in that court between now and November. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The farmers of Iowa were spurned in that convention, and the fact is established by the gentleman's own statement which has just been read. If he is not correctly reported, he is here to correct it on this floor. The New York candidate, Mr. Depew, for whose defeat the retaliation was visited on the Iowa candidate, said in an interview published in the New York Tribune on the 24th of June, that the reason why the Iowa candidate was defeated was because he came from a State which had legislated in a manner unfriendly to the railroads and hence could not expect the support of the New York Central and connected interests.

[Here the hammer fell.]

By unanimous consent informal amendments were withdrawn.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I will renew the informal amendment. Mr. Chairman, I want to qualify my statement made to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] a few minutes ago. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. He is not only going to state the truth, but the whole truth. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I believe I stated to the gentleman from New Jersey what I had in my mind at the time and believed to be so, that I had been present at every caucus of the Democratic party in this House, but it has since been brought to my mind and I recollect that there was one at which I was not present.

Permit me to say that at one caucus when I was present such a resolution as was referred to to-day was presented, but did not pass. That is all I know of the matter. [Laughter on the Republican side and applause on the Democratic side.] Of course when I make a denial I wish to limit that denial to caucuses at which I was present and to matters within my own knowledge.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Chairman, I only want a minute to relieve the mind of my friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER]. I want to say I identify that interview, and am pleased to notice on its reproduction with what courtesy and fairness I have stated the truth. There is nothing in the reproduction which affected me at all, except a certain lack of modesty in the gentleman from Iowa that he should publish in this House that interview in which I stated that he [Mr. WEAVER] was "the chief of the grangers and the very center of its activity." [Laughter.] When I said that in choosing a Presidential candidate it would not do to go amongst the extreme grangers, the reason was that the extreme grangers in that State do not belong to the Republican party. Why choose from them? They belong neither to the Republican nor to the Democratic parties, but follow the red banner of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER], whom I regard as not belonging to the Republican party himself, but whom I consider to be, as I said in the interview, the chief of the grangers and the very center of their activity. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman is not ingenuous, I fear, in the remarks he has just submitted to the committee. There is not one word of allusion in that interview to myself.

Mr. PHELPS. Does not the gentleman reside in Iowa?

Mr. WEAVER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PHELPS. Is he not the chief leader of the grangers?

Mr. WEAVER. No, sir; but I am their friend.

Mr. PHELPS. Then if he is not I do not know, and the House does not know, who is.

Mr. WEAVER. I thank the gentleman for the compliment; but I was not a candidate before the Chicago convention, and the gentleman can not shirk the responsibility nor hide the ugly fact stated in his interview. It was Mr. ALLISON who was punished because he lived in a Granger State which had enacted laws unfriendly to the railroads. I have nothing to do with the Republican party of Iowa, except to oppose it, nor do I affiliate with Mr. ALLISON politically nor with those who supported him in the Chicago convention. The gentleman knows this very well, and there is no escape for him whatever. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is the unkindest cut of all for this gentleman, who was a candidate for President and Vice-President, I believe, before the Chicago convention—— [Laughter.]

Mr. PHELPS. No; only for Vice-President.

Mr. WEAVER. I say, Mr. Chairman, that it is the unkindest cut of all for the distinguished gentleman to state in his place on this floor that the railroads punished Mr. ALLISON and the gentlemen supporting him because the Senator happened to live in the same State with myself. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I understand him to say in his interview that the reason the convention was opposed to Mr. ALLISON was because he lived in a Granger State. I am curious to know what my friend from Iowa and colleague [Mr. HENDERSON] thinks of the treatment his distinguished Senator and candidate for President was subjected to in the convention. I would like to hear from my colleague as to whether he indorses what the gentleman from New Jersey stated as a reason for the rejection of the Iowa candidate.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard the pro forma amendment as withdrawn.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I renew it.

I do not rise, Mr. Chairman, to gratify this burning thirst for information on the part of my colleague, nor am I stirred up by the fact that men are often loudest in their proclamations when they know least what they are talking about. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

I am not here to defend the gentleman from New Jersey in his interview. I am not myself a very prolific interviewer; and those who are swift to rush into the press with interviews must take care of themselves when they come home to roost. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] But one thing I do want to say, and that is I think I know something about the operations of the Chicago convention, and what operated upon the minds of the assembled Republican wisdom in that body.

I think I know the reasons that led to the defeat not only of Senator ALLISON, but of that other equally distinguished and honored gentleman and soldier, and pre-eminently the representative, as some claim to believe, of the granger sentiment, Judge Gresham; and while I am not here to entertain my colleague or to entertain my Democratic brethren with the incidents of a Republican convention, I am here to say this, that I do not believe, and to me it is absolute knowledge, that the attitude of Iowa in respect to railroad legislation lost Senator ALLISON a single vote in that convention. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I rank with my colleague in asserting the right of the people of my own State to control the corporations that may be operated under the laws of that State. My friend and neighbor, Senator ALLISON, does not abate his belief that the sovereignty of the people should be recognized in the control of corporations; but neither the Senator from Iowa nor myself attempt to ride into power as some gentlemen do, in season and out of it, by playing the part of the arrant demagogue in regard to corporations. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

I will say this much in regard to the interview of my friend from New Jersey—and in passing let me say that the State of New Jersey in that convention showed by its vote its confidence in the Senator from Iowa as a Presidential candidate—but when my friend from New Jersey said in his interview that even HENDERSON did not dare to claim that Iowa was a doubtful State, he told one solid truth. [Laughter and applause.] I never did so claim, nor do I claim it now. Iowa, as in the past, will this fall, in spite of rantings and misrepresentations, plant herself squarely in the front rank of the Republican States for Harrison and for Morton. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Not only that, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, but Iowa will show that its people, including its honest grangers, believe in a party—that they believe in principles which recognize America and American workingmen, and which do not toady to the dictates of English interests and English representatives, whether they are at home or in the White House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WEAVER. I was not disappointed, Mr. Chairman [laughter on the Republican side], in the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa, my colleague, who has just taken his seat. I knew that he would not take the floor without administering a rebuke to the gentleman from New Jersey. I expected nothing else. I was not surprised, therefore, at what was said, nor was I surprised, forced as he was to make some declaration, that he used, before he took his seat, the word "demagogue." [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.] A man is a demagogue, sir, in this country if he is consistent and persistent in his opposition as against monopolies throughout his whole life.

To avoid being a demagogue, in the opinion of the gentleman from Iowa, a man should go into national conventions with the monopolies, present your candidate, and then, when kicked out and slaughtered in cold blood by the monopolists, he must join in the wild acclaim over his own defeat and the humiliation of his confiding constituents. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There is no demagogy in that. A man may do all that without being a demagogue.

Now, while we have the open confession of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] that his interview was not only correctly reported, but that it was truthful in fact, and as we further have his ideas of Western men and how far they should be trusted in politics, I send forward to be read a letter from the acting Vice-President of the United States, to show what he thinks of an Eastern man.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHICAGO, June 23, 1888.

The following letter from Senator John J. Ingalls was received by a member of the Kansas delegation in the convention:

"VICE-PRESIDENT'S CHAMBER, Washington, June 16, 1888.

"Yours 13th at hand. It does not make much difference who is nominated, in my judgment. The candidates will cut but a small figure in the fight. We can elect anybody or we shall fail.

[Laughter on the Democratic side.]

"The least conspicuous, and therefore the least complicated man will be the best—

[Laughter on the Democratic side.]

somebody like Hayes—

[Renewed laughter long continued.]

in 1876. Among all the men named there is not one leader—no one whose personal or historical relations to the people would make a difference of 1,000 votes in the canvass. SHERMAN, ALLISON, Harrison, etc., have records that would be awkward on the tariff—

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

the currency, the Chinese question—

[Renewed applause on the Democratic side.]

etc.

"Depew's connection with railroads and corporations would be a heavy load, especially in the agricultural States. We might as well nominate Gould or Vanderbilt at once. My impression is that Alger or Gresham comes nearer filling the bill than any of the others, with some fellow like PHELPS, of New Jersey—

[Laughter on the Democratic side.]

who could reach the conservative forces of the East and get contributions—from the manufacturers and Wall street. But you can judge much better than I what is best after consulting with the delegates.

[Renewed laughter.]

"I have the use of the wires during the convention by the courtesy of the company, and you can therefore telegraph me fully at all times if anything of interest transpires.

"Truly yours,

"JOHN J. INGALLS."

[Shouts of laughter and applause on the Democratic side, long continued.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, rose.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the formal amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] may renew it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I did not apply the term "demagogue" to any one in this House; but one member in this House has had the wisdom to make the application. [Laughter on the Republican side.] When consistent records are spoken of by my worthy colleague he introduces rather a dangerous theme, I think; but not for me. I have had an unbroken record since I was born and started in a black abolition underground railroad family of which I am not ashamed. My friend's record I would not dare to trace. Time would not enable me to follow its meanderings. The gentleman has been pleased to give us a little literature to read. It has been suggested it was a stolen letter.

A MEMBER. A forged letter.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I will not say it was forged. I do not think it was. But it was a stolen letter; and those who want to use letters of that kind are at liberty to do so.

Since we are reading letters and looking up the records of great men I send to the desk to have read by the Clerk some extracts from speeches made by my colleague from Iowa, which I think will be appreciated by my Democratic brethren who are always double shotted with applause when my colleague has something to offer that may in any way disturb his Republican brethren.

The Clerk read as follows:

THESE ARE SOME OF WEAVER'S UTTERANCES ON THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY MADE IN PUBLIC SPEECHES.

He said at Albia on July 18, 1866:

"I want to congratulate you first, fellow-citizens, on the suppression of purely Democratic rebellion, gotten up by Democrats for the democratic purpose of dissevering this Union and perpetually establishing human slavery. Now and forever it is establishing as an eternal truth that the Democracy in no place or State can ever be trusted with government. As a party it should disband, just as a section of it did at Appomattox."

He said at Centerville in 1867:

"Again has the Democratic party of Iowa spoken. Why, sir, I am astonished beyond measure that a party with a record so utterly vile and wretched and wicked should be so lost to all shame and decency as to make an appearance before the loyal people of Iowa.

"They should be trampling in the wilderness of oblivion, and never more return."

[Laughter on the Republican side.]

He said in a joint debate with Col. H. H. Trimble, at Bloomfield, on September 4, 1868:

"Here we have the old fight over again. The Confederate Democracy, North and South, in which the infamous copperhead division of Iowa appears, are again contesting with Grant for the safety of the Union. As at Donelson, he proposes to 'move on their works at once,' and there is no escape for this rank, traitorous horde, except in another surrender. Charge on them, fellow Republicans, and spare not one, not even a deputy road superviser, from total political annihilation."

[Laughter on the Republican side.]

He said in Bloomfield on September 26, 1869:

"What is the use of further arraigning the defunct Democracy, with all its hoary crimes, at the bar of public opinion? We know that its acts comprise murder, treason, theft, arson, fraud, perjury, and all crimes possible for an organization to connive at."

[Renewed laughter on the Republican side.]

"It would be a mercy to put its record a million miles deep in the pit that is mentioned in Holy Writ; and I may add that if a large and distinguished assortment of its alleged statesmen were sent along it would only be common justice."

[Applause on the Republican side.]

He said in Fairfield, September 18, 1870:

"The Democracy, as usual, are loud in their opposition, but what did they ever do when they had a chance? Here in Iowa they stole the school fund and nationally they stole the arsenals, the Navy, the Treasury, everything that was not red hot, and created the very devil's rebellion. And these men appear and ask for your support. They should come on bended knee asking your forgiveness for the unspeakable crimes they have committed and the wretched miseries inflicted upon our common country."

[Loud applause on the Republican side.]

He said in Keokuk, September 16, 1871:

"The record of the Republican party appeals to the candid judgment of all men as unimpeachable, save, perhaps, that it was too lenient with the leading Democratic conspirators. The same old gang, save those who were shot or hung, are again conspiring to get possession of the Government next year. Woe to them! for the loyal hosts will crush them, and crush them forever and forever out of all possible danger of such a misfortune to our common country."

He said in Oskaloosa, September 25, 1872:

"No Republican can ever, under any circumstances, have any part or lot with the hungry, rebellious, man-hating, woman-selling gang corporated under the name of Democracy, a name so full of stench and poison that it should be blotted from the vocabulary of civilized man and handed over to the barbarism that it so fitly now and in all the past has represented."

[Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

He said at Stiles, September 11, 1873, in referring to the financial policy of the Democratic party:

"But, then, what could you expect from the poor, blind, diseased, decrepit, dismal, damned old Democratic party?"

[Prolonged laughter on the Republican side.]

He said at Monona, September, 1874:

"There can be no doubt about the question at all. With greenbacks and national-bank notes our business needs are well met. There can be no better unity of the paper currency than these. But the assaults of a party which through its financial legislation inflicted untold wrongs and robberies upon the people by permitting banks without a solid basis to issue a circulating note. * * * The fact is, gentlemen, the Democracy never has been able to comprehend the financial question. Between its inherent dishonesty and apparent senility it makes a petty but not unusual exhibition of its corporate, consolidated idiocy."

[Renewed laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Now, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the motion to strike out the last two words and move to strike out the last three.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I would like to inquire if Mr. BLAND is present?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I will now return the compliment of my colleague from Iowa, who favored me with a question, by asking him if he denies that he made these utterances as just read.

Mr. PERKINS. Ask him if they were true when made.

Mr. WEAVER. I will reply in my time.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. You will not grant me that answer now? Then, Mr. Chairman, I will say I have taken pleasure in having this matter read before the House, because I want to give my colleague credit for some of the best utterances that ever fell from his lips [applause on the Republican side], some of the truest indictments that ever were drawn against the Democracy, drawn when he was one of the standard-bearers of the Republican party.

I did not hear these speeches made, but they have been published again and again in Iowa as having been made by my colleague. I have taken these utterances from the National View, published in Washington, D. C., one of the leading Greenback papers in the United States, edited by one who has been, if not now, the secretary of the National Greenback party, and has trained at different times side by side with my colleague in advocating the interests of the Greenback party.

We certainly have these utterances from sources that are entitled to credit. I have watched with some care in the National View to see any refutation or denial of these speeches by the gentleman from Iowa, but none appeared that I was able to discover, nor have I ever seen any public refutation of them in Iowa from my colleague.

While we are having the views of individuals to entertain the American people I thought it not out of place to give my colleague an opportunity to speak, as he did speak, from his heart and judgment when he gave those eloquent utterances.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. WEAVER. I renew it, Mr. Chairman.

As will be seen, the date of those so-called speeches——

A MEMBER (on the Republican side). You are pleading the statute of limitation, are you?

Mr. WEAVER. No, sir, never. I want to say those remarks were uttered in years past when the situation was entirely different from what it is now, and are the oldest kind of chestnuts in my district and in Iowa. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.] No matter, gentlemen; they laugh best who laugh last. Wait until I get through.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEAVER. No; I can not. I will give the gentleman all he wants.

I was an ardent opponent of the Democratic party during the anti-slavery controversy. I espoused the standard of the Republican party before I was of age, and I followed it through good and through evil report, in peace and in war. The war ended, I opposed the Democratic party in its attitude toward the question of reconstruction and all of the questions that grew out of the war which constituted party issues. I have no doubt that I uttered, if not the words contained in the extracts read before this House, words equally as forcible and substantially similar.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. WEAVER. I have nothing to take back with regard to my course on the issues that arose out of the war. It relates to the distant past, and it is wholly unnecessary. I followed the standard of the Republican party because I believed whilst I was doing it that they were right and were the friends of the poor, the lowly, and the downtrodden; but when I learned that the Republicanism of 1877 was not the Republicanism of 1860; when I found that they had demonetized silver, which had been good enough for everybody from the time of Washington down to the time of General Grant; when I further learned that the Republican party had passed the act of January 14, 1875, to convert the greenbacks into interest-bearing debt, and another act to refund the public debt and make it payable in gold coin, thereby robbing the people of fully $600,000,000 in this single enactment; when I found they had given away hundreds of millions of acres of the public lands and were making no effort to reclaim it; when I learned further that they sought to perpetuate the national debt and intended to make it the chief corner-stone of national banking, and that bank-notes were to be substituted for greenbacks as our sole paper circulation, with the monstrous attendant evils of expansion and contraction at the will of the banking corporations, and when I read in the speech of JOHN SHERMAN, delivered at Mansfield, Ohio, that such was to be the settled policy of the Republican party, I concluded it was time for me to quit.

And although I had been a member of the convention in 1877 that nominated my colleague [Mr. GEAR] for governor of Iowa, and had supported him in that convention for the nomination, when I became acquainted with these facts I wrote him an open and frank letter saying that I could no longer act with the Republican party. I could not do so because I found they were no longer the friends of the poor, and that whilst we had emancipated four millions of human beings, they were now, through vicious legislation, pursuing a policy which would, unless arrested, enslave many more millions of the white people of this country. The events of the past ten years have justified my gravest fears. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I left them then and challenged them to open combat, and have never asked for quarter nor struck my colors. I have delivered blow for blow, ever trying to keep within the bounds of proper political warfare.

I left the Republican party when it had 80,000 majority in Iowa and 4,000 majority in my Congressional district over all opposition. Does that look like hunting for an office? Does it not rather look like I was following my convictions? I leave this House to judge of that matter. When I began with the little band of Greenbackers to denounce these great wrongs I found the Democratic party of the West, which I had so vigorously fought in the past, under the leadership of the gallant gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and others, were leading in the good work of remonetization of silver, and they passed a bill through this House for its full and free reinstatement. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I found, furthermore, that when the bill for the free recoinage of silver reached the Republican Senate they emasculated it, and that a Republican Senator from my own State [Mr. ALLISON] was the gentleman who accomplished the result. Having stabbed every greenback note in the back with the word "except," they now sought to send silver forth maimed and crippled, only to be coined in limited quantities, and then only on Government account.

I found the Democracy of the Northwest and of many other sections of the country bitterly opposed to the destruction of the greenback currency and its wicked conversion into interest-bearing debt, and early in the winter of 1878 they passed a bill through this House which put a stop to this destruction. The little band of Peter Cooper Greenbackers had aroused the country and many stanch old Jackson and Jefferson Democrats rolled up their sleeves and went to work in their own party with the results stated. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Many Republicans, in defiance of their party leaders, joined in the good work also. As the battle for equal rights and fair play waxed hot I sought affiliation with the Democrats of my district and State, and we have ever since in my district, and often in the State, co-operated, and we have made it mighty lively for you from that day to this. And I advise you to keep your eyes open, for there is still more fun ahead. have never joined the Democratic party.

I am a member to-day of the Union Labor party, into which the Greenback party has practically merged, along with some other labor organizations. While it is true that I have never joined the Democratic party, I have felt it to be my duty to affiliate with that party in this House, in my State, and in my district, whenever it was practicable, through the action of separate conventions, because I believe the Democratic party is nearer to the people than the Republican party, and because I find more friends there for the principles which I represent than in any other party outside of my own.

But while thus affiliating, it has been done in the frankest possible manner and with the distinct knowledge that I reserve my independence and the right to strike at wrong wherever found, and the gentleman knows that I have been fearless in the exercise of my independence. I have nothing to conceal here. Those old extracts have been read in all the campaigns in Iowa for the past decade, until they sound like extracts from ancient history. The Democrats there have said, "Yes, he did hit us hard, but we hit him just as hard, and the account is square; and we prefer him to any monopoly Republican that can be put up in the State." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I desire to say a few words.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I rise to oppose the amendment of my colleague.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The gentleman has already spoken. I want to know, Mr. Chairman, whether it is possible to have intelligent, common-sense business done in this House—whether it is not time to end this interjection into the tariff question of this political twaddle which is only wasting the time of the House?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, am I not recognized?

Mr. MILLS. I would like to have an end of this political discussion. Let us vote.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let us go on and work.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment can only be withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I rise to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. "How have the mighty fallen!" My colleague [Mr. WEAVER] confesses that the utterances just read were made by him, but he pleads the "baby act," because they were made in the days of his adolescence. They were made as late as 1872. I wish to ask my colleague, and would like him to answer now, whether when he made those charges against the Democracy he believed they were true?

Mr. MASON. He said so.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman said so, they tell me, and he is silent though in his seat now. Very well. Now he says that he changed his position because the Republican party fell from grace. Ah! Mr. Chairman, I have lived in Iowa since I was a child, and have been an observer of the records of our public men. In 1875 I was a member of the same Republican State convention with my colleague when he was a candidate for nomination for governor.

It was the judgment of the Republican party of Iowa that the old war governor, old Sam Kirkwood, should be nominated instead of my ambitious friend. He was so nominated, and my friend was defeated in that Republican convention. Up to this time he had stood among the foremost champions of every Republican proposition that had been laid before the country—financial propositions and all. In public and in private he stood forth as a gladiator defending Republican ideas and Republican policies. But he was beaten as a candidate for governor in that convention. Matured man as he was, a man of well-formed judgment, well equipped in knowledge of public affairs, he was beaten on the first ballot in that convention. [Applause on the Republican side.] Then, suddenly, within two short years, the grumbling commencing co instanti, this revolution took place; and the convictions which followed his blade at Donelson, that had led him up to a matured manhood, suddenly fell as though stricken by a bolt from God. All at once my colleague finds the Republican party not pure enough for him [laughter], and he suddenly jumps into the ranks of the rotten Democracy, as he has just described them.

And now he gets up and tries to make this House and the country believe that he changed his position because the Republican party had become politically so corrupt. Did it become corrupt between 1875 and 1877? What monstrous political revolution had taken place in the Republican party in those two brief years? Ah, "Consistency, thou art a jewel!" But that does not describe my colleague.

Again, in 1880, he suddenly broke loose from the Democracy and became the Presidential candidate of the Greenback party. At that time, in his speeches in the South and in other parts of the country, he drew an indictment against the Democracy showing how terribly they had fallen, describing their outrages in the South, their ballot-box stuffing; and above all things he appealed to the Greenbackers to oppose going into any combinations with the Democracy. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.] Some are even mean enough to claim that he ran in 1880 as the tail of the Garfield kite to keep fusion from taking place between the national Greenback party and the national Democratic party. I do not say that was the motive; but he did us lots of good in that campaign. God bless him for that! [Laughter and applause.] We "downed" the Democracy.

After that campaign of 1880, before he had time to let the blood retire from his beautiful countenance after the exertions of that campaign, he came back into Iowa and roared for fusion with Democracy, and got it, too; for he is an able man; we all concede and admire his ability. After denouncing fusion in 1880, he has since been working for it, commencing immediately after that campaign, and having obtained his seat in this House on that doctrine. He is now enjoying the fruits of his latest flop as a Democratic member of Congress.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 87, noes 82.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the tariff bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and pending that motion I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes; and on that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion for closing debate was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. I now ask for a vote on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the House all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto has been closed in ten minutes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS], who commenced the debate on the pending paragraph, promised us some proofs in regard to the effect the proposed legislation would have on the industries affected by it. I regret in the interest of practical legislation that the gentleman drifted into a political discourse, but I hope in the five minutes which are allowed to his side of the House he will give us the proofs he has promised. We have had assertions, we have had prophecies, but we have had no proof of any kind submitted to the House.

The present rate in the law is 40 per cent., and the duty on dressed line flax is $40 a ton. The duty on undressed line is $20 a ton. It is proposed by this bill to reduce the tax on the finished article from 40 to 25 per cent. ad valorem, and to put undressed flax on the free-list, and in accordance with the amendment adopted in a previous part of the proceedings of the committee to put dressed line at $10 a ton.

The question for us to consider is the amount of protection left and how it bears upon the labor engaged in this industry. The value of a ton of dressed line on the other side of the ocean is over $525. Ten dollars is less than 2 per cent. tax. If we adopt the form of calculation of deducting that tax on the raw material from the protection given to the finished product we would have a net protection of over 23 per cent. But, sir, the undressed line comes in free, and therefore in one sense and in one form it may be said that protection obtains to the extent of 25 per cent., and in no form or sense to less than 23 per cent.

Let us compare this with the rates which have obtained in this line of business under past laws. Under the tariff of 1857 there was a protection on the manufacture of flax of 15 per cent. ad valorem. Only linen thread or twine had more than this, and that was 24 per cent. There was no tax then on the raw material which enters into flax goods. When that law was passed it received the vote of every gentleman in this House from the State of Massachusetts, and of every gentleman in this House from the State of Maine, and it received in its favor every vote from New Jersey.

The duty proposed in this bill is nearly double that on all flax goods except thread and twine, and equal to the old duty on that. The proposed protection is nearly double.

Is my time out?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I wanted to bring out one or two more facts. I ask that the time be extended ten minutes more; I will consume five, and let five be given to the other side of the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. In 1861 in the Morrill bill the duty was made 30 per cent. on all flax goods and the tax was made $15 a ton, both on dressed and undressed flax. Taking undressed flax as the base and at present prices, a little over $200 for such flax, this was, as we are giving, less than 23 per cent. protection net. But this bill carries over 23 per cent. It was considered entirely adequate then. Mr. MORRILL said some of the rates exceeded the needs of protection. It received every vote but 13 in this House of the entire vote from New England, New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey. The proposed protection, then, is every bit as much as it is in the Morrill tariff bill of 1861, though we all admit that the need of protection grows less as time goes on. In the tariff of 1862 a slight increase was made in the flax schedule.

At that time it was asked of Mr. MORRILL whether this increase was for protection. It was distinctly denied by him and by other members of the committee that it was needed by the industries or intended for the purpose of protection, but for temporary war purposes. This I brought out fully in my speech in the general debate.

It was to be repealed as soon as the condition of the United States Treasury would permit. The title of the bill was "An act increasing temporarily the duties on imports, and for other purposes."

Now, what is the labor cost? If you turn to the document which I hold in my hand, issued from the Interior Department, and from Mr. Seaton, the Superintendent of the Census, you will find he says that in the linen-goods industry, which is a fair sample, in this country 20 per cent. of the value of the goods is the extent of the labor cost in it.

You ask us, therefore, to cover the difference between 20 per cent., shown to be the labor cost even here, and something less than 20 per cent. in other countries. We leave you a considerable margin to do it. We fix the rate at over 23 per cent. We leave, therefore, 3 per cent. more duty than there is labor in the entire product; and yet the gentleman from New Jersey who was going to give us some facts in connection with the matter—which have not been given—takes the position that this is going to destroy the industry in this country, of which fact, however, he has, I say, failed to give any proof. These figures now relate to the industry as it has been built up in recent years.

Sir, this completes the statement I wanted to make, and I now yield the remainder of my time to the other side of the House.

Mr. JACKSON. Before proceeding with my remarks I desire to have read on behalf of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] the telegram which I now send to the desk, so that it may be inserted in the RECORD. This telegram is in confirmation of the statement made by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] during the course of his remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, July 11, 1888.

HON. HERMAN LEHLBACH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We most earnestly urge you to oppose the proposed reduction in the tariff on flax, hemp, and their products. We pay from two to three times more wages than European manufacturers do. We can not, for this reason, even under present tariff, compete in fine grades with foreign manufacturers. The proposed reduction would destroy our industry here, increase the revenue by quadrupling importations, and make the United States dependent on Europe for its supply of flax and hemp products.

MARSHALL & CO.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the peculiar character of the argument made by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE]. It is a form of reasoning to which we have been frequently treated by gentlemen on the other side of the House. The gentleman seems to be able to satisfy his own conscience and the conscience of the majority here upon any of the great questions of protection growing out of this bill, if he is only able to show that at any time in the past the Republican party has not given any higher protection to an industry than they are now offering to give by this bill. It is not often that they fairly have opportunity to make such comparisons, but they are eager to catch at the smallest opportunity of this kind.

Why, Mr. Chairman, we can well admit that there are industries in this country that the Republican party has not yet sufficiently protected.

That was one of the things the Republican party had in mind when,

in its national platform, it pledged itself to a revision of the tariff duties. That revision means revision up as well as revision down. It means to keep in mind the great principle of protection, the great American principle which is to protect all the industries of this country. It is one of the things the Republican party may well be proud of—that it has always striven to improve the laws of the land; that, when new questions and new issues have from time to time arisen, it has been brave enough and honest enough to meet them.

Mr. Chairman, the flax and hemp industries are of the class of industries of this country that never have been sufficiently protected. I confess that the Republican party has not done all it should have done in this direction. I support most heartily the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS], and only regret we can not go further. But we can not expect to induce the committee to go further than the amendment proposes.

I regret very much to be compelled to say that the majority has not, even with the information furnished them by our side of the House, exhibited any great willingness to adopt proper amendments to this bill.

I take issue at once with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], who makes the statement that there is but 20 per cent. of labor in the production of flax and hemp. He certainly is mistaken in that respect. He gives some meager extracts from the census reports as authority. But a moment's thought and reflection ought to convince any one that there is some wrong application in the facts and reports if they appear to show that in the production and manufacture of flax and hemp only 20 per cent. is attributed to labor. Let me call attention to the facts, and he will at once see that in the larger classes of this product the quantity of labor must be far in excess of 20 per cent.

Take flax after it is grown and ready to be cut or pulled. I presume our friends would then call it raw material, but in fact it has required great labor to bring it to that condition. The land had been cleared and fenced by labor; the soil had been plowed and harrowed by labor, and the seed sown by labor. But flax when grown is of very trifling value, so little that in this country thousands of tons are burned because the farmers are unable to utilize it.

But after the flax is grown it goes through the different processes of rotting or retting, rippling, and scutching—each requiring a large amount of skiled labor.

The following description I ask to have printed will show more fully than I can describe the labor that is bestowed on flax before it becomes what is called dressed line and is ready for spinning. It is then worth $200 per ton, nearly all of which is labor. Even then it is treated by this bill as raw material.

There are two ways of retting flax, water retting and dew retting. Water retting is followed mainly in Western Europe. The bunches of flax are sunk in large shallow dams, and held down by turf. The water causes certain chemical changes to take place in the fiber, which softens it and fits it for manufacture. Dew retting is mainly in vogue in Russia. There the stalks are simply left on the ground exposed to the action of the sun, air, rain, and dews until similar chemical changes are brought about.

After the stalks have been retted the seeds or berries are combed out. This is called rippling. Finally the flax is passed through breaking or "scutching" machines, which beat out the shives or wooden cores. It is then ready for the manufacturer.

See, then, how much labor has been expended upon the flax in order to make even raw material of it. It has been sowed, pulled, tied, retted, rippled, and scutched. Or, omitting the work done before it leaves the field in which it grew, it has gone through three separate and distinct processes before it comes to the spinning mill.

Surely a strange sort of raw material this flax. But even yet it is not certain whether it is entitled to be called raw material, for half the people who know all about flax insist that it can not properly be called "raw" until it has gone through still another process, called heckling. Heckling is done both by hand and by machinery. It is a combing process, and the flax that has passed through it is called "dressed line." The waste from the combs is called tow, and is used for coarser kinds of manufacture.

Now, at last we have got to the raw material, for no one will deny that dressed line flax is raw material, except the hacklers who have combed it, the scutchers and ripplers who have thrashed it, so to speak, the retters who have retted it, and perhaps the farmers who have pulled it.

I will not detain the committee with descriptions of the further processes of this manufacture. In short, it must be subjected to drawing, roving, and spinning, each a separate and distinct process. These alone to make thread or yarn, there being in case of twines some additional and different treatment.

The large proportion of the cost of this product when it has become thread and twine that must be attributed to labor is apparent. When we follow it to higher stages of manufacture, such as linens, the cost of labor still increases, and we can see how far wide of the mark is the suggestion that only 20 per cent. of the finished product is attributable to labor.

I have a purpose in making these statements. I want to show that there is no reason why flax in the condition called dressed line should come within the argument urged on the other side in support of this bill; that is, the argument that it should be permitted to come in free as raw material. Raw material is not a proper name for importations under the flax and hemp schedule of any article whatever. For this reason I call attention to the fact that when flax and hemp come here it has then received a large part of its value from labor alone, and is no longer raw material. Labor has taken the straw of little value, and when it reaches us it is worth $200 per ton.

Here at once we have the explanation why the farmers of the Northwest burn thousands of tons of flax. Great labor is required to prepare it for market. Our labor is higher priced than Europe and Asia, and without adequate protection we can not take care of flax. In no industry is the difference in wages between our country and others more plainly shown than in the flax industry. I shall print with my remarks a table showing this difference, and which is a good illustration of the advantages our laborers have over those of other countries.

I want again to call the attention of Congress to the fact that the men engaged in the flax and hemp industries of our country are opposed to this bill.

You tell us that you want raw material free, so we can manufacture more than we do; but the men engaged in the business say no. They understand very well that it is better for them to have laws that will encourage the growth of flax and hemp in this country than to be dependent on foreigners.

Mr. Chairman, my time is so short that I can not say what I would like on this subject. I desire in great earnestness to impress on Congress that the reduction of duties on manufactured articles, as proposed in this bill, means utter destruction of the flax and hemp industry.

There are many irregularities in the proposed bill, and the duties are reduced out of proportion to other kinds of manufactures. This could not well be avoided when the bill was prepared, without the aid of men familiar with business. But I do not consider it necessary to discuss this point. It is apparent from votes already taken that the majority of this committee will not make any changes in this bill, no matter how imperfect it may be shown to be. I ask to have printed with my remarks two letters received from Messrs. Bentley & Gerwig upon this subject. They are gentlemen engaged in my district in the manufacture of flax and hemp. They are intelligent gentlemen, who have had a long experience in the business, men of undoubted honesty and integrity, and what they say ought to have weight with the committee.

As will be observed they corroborate what we have heard to-day from other parties interested in this industry, by telegraph and letters. They all oppose the passage of this bill.

Such statements ought to be sufficient to induce the majority to change their bill. Will they heed this testimony?

NEW BRIGHTON, PA., April 16, 1888.

DEAR SIRS: After struggling forty years, we have succeeded in establishing an important industry for manufacturing flax and hemp twine from American hemp and flax. About the year 1875 we made the first twine that was ever used on a grain-binder. Increasing the quantity each year, we now make about 200 tons annually (in addition to other twines), all from American hemp, thereby contributing to the success of that great labor-saving machine, the grain-binder.

If the duty is taken off hemp and flax, we believe there would not be a pound grown in the United States. We could not compete with foreign manufacturers, nor even with manufacturers in our own country who are located near the seaboard, as the freights would be against us and we would be under the necessity of stopping our mill. Two hundred hands would be thrown out of employment and the savings of two generations, invested in buildings and machinery, would be rendered worthless.

We would, therefore, most earnestly protest against the putting of foreign fibers on the free-list, and the lowering of existing duties on manufactured goods.

Very respectfully,

BENTLEY & GERWIG, LIMITED.

The Hon. the MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

NEW BRIGHTON, PA., July 10, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Permit us to call your attention to a few points in the "Mills bill" that directly affect our interests:

1. Whereas cotton and woolen goods are granted an average protection of about 40 per cent., flax, hemp, and jute goods are reduced to 15 and 25 per cent. This, we think, is a great injustice. While cotton manufacturers get all their supply of raw material in this country, we, as flax, hemp, and jute manufacturers, will probably be compelled to get our supply of stock from foreign countries, on account of their being on the free-list, and thus freights would be against us in competing with foreign countries, while in cotton goods the advantages would be the other way.

2. Then again on machinery. For cotton it is nearly all made here, because the cotton industry has grown so large that the manufacture of cotton machinery has developed as well and in same proportion, while the manufacture of flax, hemp, and jute machinery has not been developed, because the flax and hemp and jute industries are yet in their infancy, not having been sufficiently protected and fostered. Hence the machinery for these fibers is imported at heavy duties, and this is simply because the machinery is quite complicated and expensive. The demand for this class of machinery is yet so small that it will not justify machinists in getting up necessary patterns and tools to make said machinery. The expense would exceed the profits.

Then again, we do not think it right that cordage, both tarred and untarred, should have 25 per cent. duty, while flax, hemp, and jute yarns, and all twines of same should only have 15 per cent. It should be exactly the reverse, as twines and yarns are finer than cordage, and hence more labor on them; they should have 20 per cent. more than cordage, instead of 10 per cent. less. And lastly, it is a mistake to have two duties on twines; one for hemp and jute, and another for flax. It will lead to undervaluations and injustice, as the fibers are so similar that it would require experts to tell the difference; and we could not expect Government inspectors to be experts on this class of goods. Hence the higher class would be brought in under the lower duties, greatly to our disadvantage. In conclusion, we can not see any necessity whatever why a young and struggling industry should be thus harshly, and as we think unjustly, dealt with. Our profits have never been excessive. Our manufacturers have never had any combinations or trusts to control prices or labor. All we ask is reasonable protection, and do trust the honorable House of Representatives will duly consider our claims and our protest against lowering existing duties.

Very respectfully,

BENTLEY & GERWIG, Limited.
JOS. BENTLEY, Secretary.

Hon. O. L. JACKSON,
Washington, D. C.

Average rates of wages paid in the flax-spinning trade, Europe and America.

[Mark equal to 23.8 cents; ruble equal to 50 cents; franc equal to 19 cents.].

Occupations.	Prussia Silesia.*		Rhineland.*		Germany.*		Russia, Eastern.†		Russia, Western.*		France.*		United States.‡	Great Britain.
	Per week of 60 hours.	Equal to United States currency.	Per week of 60 hours.	Equal to United States currency.	Per week of 60 hours.	Equal to United States currency.	Per week of 60 hours.	Equal to United States currency.	Per week of 60 hours.	Equal to United States currency.	Per week of 60 hours.	Equal to United States currency.	Per week of 60 hours.	Per week of hours.
	Marks.	Dollars.	Marks.	Dollars.	Marks.	Dollars.	Rubles.	Dollars.	Rubles.	Dollars.	Francs.	Dollars.	Dollars.	Dollars.
Sorters	8.34	2.00	15.84	3.75	12.10	2.88	.....	.....	.....	.....	20.00	3.85	12.00	4.86
Roughers	6.67	1.60	12.50	3.00	9.60	2.30	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	12.00	4.86
Machine-workers	4.60	1.15	7.50	1.78	6.05	1.46	1.60	.80	2.00	1.00	7.00	1.35	5.60	1.46
Spinners	6.67	1.60	9.17	2.18	7.92	1.98	2.20	1.10	2.25	1.12	10.50	2.02	7.60	1.82
Reelers	6.67	1.60	9.17	2.18	7.92	1.98	.....	.....	.....	.....	17.50	3.37	7.00	1.34
Roving	5.84	1.40	8.34	2.00	7.10	1.70	1.28	.64	2.25	1.12	10.50	2.02	5.00	1.58
Carders	5.84	1.40	7.92	1.88	6.90	1.65	.....	.....	2.25	1.12	11.50	2.20	6.00	2.19
Spreaders	5.00	1.20	7.92	1.88	6.45	1.55	1.20	.60	2.25	1.12	10.50	2.02	8.00	1.70
Drawing	5.00	1.20	7.50	1.78	6.25	1.50	1.08	.54	2.25	1.12	9.50	1.85	5.00	1.95
Doffers	3.75	.90	5.84	1.40	4.80	1.15	1.00	.50	1.50	.75	.....	.....	3.50	1.34

*Work 72 hours per week. †Work 81 hours per week. ‡Work 60 hours per week.

Flax and Hemp Spinners and Growers' Association, 1886.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask that a dispatch of three lines, which I hold in my hand, may be read and published in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

ANDOVER, MASS., July 11, 1888.

HON. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Reduction of duties on manufactures of flax would probably entirely destroy an important American industry.

SMITH & DOVE MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in my remarks a letter to which I referred.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has that right under the general leave to print.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Has all the time been exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. There are three minutes still remaining.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I would like to occupy those three minutes.

Mr. BLAND. As I understand, the House ordered this debate closed in ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The House did.

Mr. BLAND. Then I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri that the gentleman in charge of the bill arose and asked unanimous consent that the debate be continued ten minutes longer. The Chair recognized the fact that that request was not in order, but as it came from the Ways and Means Committee and there was no objection, the debate was allowed to continue.

Mr. BLAND. I was not here or I should have objected. I do now object, and raise the point of order that the committee had no right to extend the time.

Mr. BRUMM. It was done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAND. I withdraw the point and will let the discussion continue.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Some days ago I took occasion while we were on the paragraph in regard to flax to have inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter from Dunbar, McMaster & Co., of Greenwich, N. Y. Since that time, having an interest in this industry, I have taken pains to examine all that is contained in Secretary Manning's volume, which he furnished to the last Congress. Not one of the letters bears on the trend of the reduction of this duty. The gentleman from Arkansas, in the remarks he made a few moments ago, seemed to think there was no infringement at all on the workers' wages here. He fails to take into account this fact: That most of these great industries that are affected now have come into this country and have been built up in this country since the Morrill bill went into effect. Consequently what argument of the gentleman may remain in respect to the wage question and in respect to the difference between raw material products and wages can not certainly hold good now.

Without trespassing further on the time of the House, I desire to send to the Clerk's desk the report of Secretary Manning, and have read a portion of the letter of J. R. Leeson & Co., of Boston, who are the agents of the Grafton Thread Mills. From that letter, Mr. Chairman, the House can get exact data of the difference between one of the best running thread-mills in the world, at Johnstone, Scotland, and the Grafton Mills, in Massachusetts.

The letter is as follows:

BOSTON, November 6, 1885.

SIR: Referring to the Treasury circular sent to the Grafton Flax Mills, asking for information in regard to linen-thread manufacturing, we beg to submit briefly our replies upon the main points suggested therein.

* * * * * * *

Wages.—The wages paid throughout all the manufacturing departments at Grafton are fully double what are paid at the Johnstone Mills for exactly the same work. In many cases the Grafton rates are 200 per cent. greater, and it is certainly within the mark to state that the wages at Grafton are double those paid in Johnstone for the same work and time.

Machinery.—The machinery at Grafton was all imported, as no flax machinery, such as is there used is, to our knowledge, made in the United States. The duty on the machinery was 35 per cent., and on the brass and steel portions 45 per cent. ad valorem. With transit and other incidental charges added, the cost at Grafton was 50 per cent. higher than in Scotland.

Buildings.—Such experience as we have had of building in the United States leads to the conclusion that a mill here costs at least double what the same mill would cost in Scotland. With buildings and machinery costing 100 per cent. higher, it will be seen that a mill in the United States, fully equipped for running, will involve double the capital and interest charges of an establishment in Scotland.

Supplies.—General mill supplies are as a rule dearer at Grafton than at Johnstone, although oils are somewhat less here; but on the whole prices here for supplies are higher than in Scotland.

Coal.—This is a very important item, and it is considerably dearer at Grafton than at Johnstone. Coal has never been lower at Grafton than $4.50 per ton, while at Johnstone a similar quality could be bought for $1.25 to $1.50 per ton. The cost of coal at Grafton, therefore, will be fully three times the cost at Johnstone.

From the foregoing it will be seen that the cost of manufacturing threads at Grafton is very much greater than in Scotland: (1) the duty of 5 to 7 per cent. on the raw material used; (2) building costs 100 per cent. more; (3) machinery costs 50 per cent. more; (4) coal costs 200 per cent. more; (5) wages are at least 100 per cent. higher. Under such circumstances a protective duty on the manufactured thread is absolutely essential to the existence of an American linen-thread mill. Taking into consideration all the various items of increased cost as enumerated, we are fully satisfied that any reduction of the present rate of duty on linen thread, which is 40 per cent. ad valorem, would entail the most serious results upon linen-thread manufacturing in the United States, and would make it extremely difficult for domestic thread manufacturers to hold their own against foreign-made thread.

We beg to remain, sir, with great respect,
Yours, faithfully,

J. R. LEESON & CO.

HONORABLE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C.

The question was then put on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS], and the Chair was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. PHELPS. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 73.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Oil-cloth foundations, or floor-cloth canvas, or burlaps, exceeding 60 inches in width, made of flax, jute, or hemp, or of which flax, jute, or hemp, or either of them, shall be the component material of chief value, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move to amend in line 413 by striking out "twenty-five" and inserting "forty."

Mr. Chairman, our friends on the other side have set us the example of invoking here the opinions of persons not connected with this debate nor with the House of Representatives in regard to the current politics of the day, and the result of that invocation has been to draw out the opinion which was formed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] some years ago as to the consequences that would follow the induction of the Democratic party into power in this country. Following up that line of thought, I desire to have read an extract from a speech by a distinguished Democrat, made within the past few weeks and the sentiment of which has gone unchallenged by the Democratic press and statesmen of this country.

The Clerk read as follows:

A REBEL SPEECH—GENERAL BRADLEY JOHNSON STIRS UP THE SPIRIT OF SECESSION.

WASHINGTON, June 7.

The red-hot rebel speech delivered in Baltimore, yesterday, by General Bradley T. Johnson, formerly of Virginia, at the Confederate memorial ceremonies held there, is not the least interesting subject of gossip here. It is a valuable and timely contribution to the campaign gossip, and comes in good season on top of the St. Louis nominations. General Johnson, among other things, said:

"I expect to live to see the time when the cause of the Confederates will be looked upon as that of true constitutional liberty the world over. When the records shall be truly written and understood of men, the world will learn that our fight was for local self-government—the same battle that Gladstone is fighting for the Irish to-day—which is making a new chapter in the history of the world. Is any feeling more wide-spread to-day than respect for Robert E. Lee? At any time in the past one hundred years were there greater veneration and love for any man than for Stonewall Jackson? Does any story stir the English race deeper than the death of Ashby, who fell, leading a charge, twenty-six years ago to-day? How does the world measure the exploits of the dashing Jeb Stuart? The story of such devotion to a cause, of high courage and manliness in fight, has touched the heart of all this world, and this feeling will grow stronger and more universal as time goes on.

"Never was the South making greater strides in material progress than now. She is acquiring wealth and power swiftly and surely. Material prosperity is something great and worthy of admiration, but there are aspirations higher than mere accumulation of wealth, a feeling nobler than the desire to get rich. Will your new South produce such men as the history of the Commonwealth of the past can point to? Show me a Commonwealth that made such a record as Virginia from 1776 to 1865—from the day of Washington to that of Robert E. Lee—for genius, for patriotism, brains, statesmanship, ideas which characterized the great men who came from the South. The work of these men will go down in history to posterity. So will the deeds of the soldier who followed the Confederate cause in poverty, hunger, without pay and clothing, standing at his post for four years at the risk of his life with no hope of reward or promotion, no pension to look for when he was maimed, and no dream of a land grant for his services. Of all the men of that class—the sterling private soldier—let me put mine ahead of all. It is impossible for such men not to be honored. I did not believe the United States had a right to coerce the Southern people. I said I would fight if they tried to do it, and I did fight.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLS. I hope our friend will now let us have a vote on this paragraph.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I withdraw the amendment, and move to strike out the last five words.

Mr. MILLS. I appeal to our friends on the other side to let us get on with this bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Let me have two minutes more, and I will not further occupy the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] asks unanimous consent for time to complete the reading of this extract.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina objects. If no gentleman on the other side desires to speak in opposition to the amendment, the Chair will recognize the gentleman, Mr. GROSVENOR.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move to strike out the last five words, and I ask that the reading of the extract be continued.

The Clerk continued the reading, as follows:

I would do the same thing to-morrow, as God is my witness.

Many of us might have kept out of that war, but we did not. * * * The South is progressing. She is not dead. These old Confederate soldiers and their descendants elect ninety out of every one hundred Congressmen, thirty-four United States Senators, and the President of the United States. [Applause.] The Government of the United States is controlled by Confederate soldiers. It is always the case that when you get into a position to command respect you will get respect. The old Confederate soldiers are not idle. Their work for twenty-six years in government, in railroads, and industrial enterprises of all sorts is making itself felt all over this land. In 1890 Texas will send twenty-five men to Congress. The anxiety will be then, not who can carry New York in the election, but who can win in Texas. [Applause.]

* * * * * * *

A Maryland man fought a naval battle in Hampton Roads with a Monitor that caused a change in naval warfare all over the world, and there is not a line in the history of this State about him. A Maryland man defended the harbor of Mobile such as no other ever did, but he got no record for it. Every Confederate soldier carries with him, chained to his heart, a casket of his dead hopes and aspirations all through his life, as Douglas did the heart of Bruce to the Holy Land, to show his devotion to the cause for which he fought. If the time should ever come, and it were necessary, there are ten thousand in Maryland who would stand for their cause as Douglas did for Bruce.

"I have no sympathy with that slush and sentimentality that is always gushing over to the other people. I will not do that. I recall the sentimentality exhibited by some just before the eightieth birthday of Jefferson Davis, a man who, of all Confederates, has been singled out by his enemies and branded by malice and prejudice and kept from his rights. He is a patient statesman and a hero. He is renowned for his patriotism. I hope he will go down to his grave with the disfranchisement his enemies have put upon him, for I am sure he has no desire for it to be otherwise, and would never accept the right of suffrage except by unanimous consent, of which there is not the remotest hope."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will report the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Oil-cloths for floors, stamped, painted, or printed, and on all other oil-cloth (except silk oil-cloth), and on water-proof cloth, not otherwise provided for, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move to amend in line 417, page 25, by striking out "twenty-five" and inserting "thirty." Mr. Chairman, one of the inequalities in the present tariff law is that foundations for oil-cloths and oil-cloths which are made from those foundations bear the same rate of duty. This inequality is not corrected in the pending bill, but is preserved, because the bill puts the foundations which are named in the preceding section and the oil-cloths themselves at a similar though a reduced rate. The amendment which I have offered will make a difference of 5 per cent. between the duty on the foundations and the duty on the finished oil-cloths. There should undoubtedly be some difference because of the more advanced stage of manufacture. The amendment which I have offered fixes a very low rate, indeed; much lower than should be given, but I have offered it in order to test this House and see whether they would be willing to make any difference between the lower form and the more advanced form of manufacture. The rate which I propose is the rate provided by the act of July 30, 1846, and from that time until the present, with the exception of a short period between 1857 and 1861, the higher priced oil-cloths have borne a rate varying from 30 per cent. up to 45 per cent. Now, the present bill proposes to reduce the rate to 25 per cent., and my amendment, as I have said, will still leave a great reduction in the present rate, while it puts oil-cloths at the at point which they were in the tariff of 1846. It does, however, allow a slight difference between the duty on the manufactured article and the duty on the materials which enter into the manufacture of it.

Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that the facts which I have stated would be placed within the hearing at least of gentlemen upon the other side who are to vote on this amendment, but I notice that a number of them prefer to discuss these measures in the cloak-room and perform their Congressional duties by coming out and voting after the discussion is over, unheard by them.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before the gentleman sits down I wish to call his attention to the fact that under the tariff of 1846 oil-cloth foundations were free, while the duty on oil-cloths was 30 per cent.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand that.

Mr. DINGLEY. But 5 per cent. difference between the foundations and the completed article is certainly insufficient.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have put the difference at only 5 per cent., but I agree with the gentleman that it is entirely insufficient. I wanted to see, however, whether the men in my city who are engaged in making oil-cloth are to have any consideration at the hands of this House.

Mr. DINGLEY. Had you not better make your amendment 35 at least?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Of course I would prefer 35, but I want to see whether the other side will vote down 30.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, a short time ago in this debate I was very much interested in a controversy between my colleagues, one on the right of this Chamber [Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa] and one on the left [Mr. WEAVER]. It is not for the purpose of criticising either, but for the purpose of correcting, as I may, the record, that I wish to advert to what passed between them.

I was not surprised, in view of the school in which my friend on the right trains, that "demagogue" was one of the first things to come as a sweet morsel from under his tongue, to be applied to any man who does not see fit to square his conduct in harmony with the self-constituted "bosses" of the faction of the party with which he trains.

I know right well, from intimate knowedge of the history of politics in my own State and of the party in which he trains, that I am to-day a better Republican than he is when judged by every public and official utterance of the party, as I can prove beyond the shadow of a doubt if I am permitted to do so in the time accorded me. When he hurls the epithet "demagogue" at my friend across the way [Mr. WEAVER] he is only whipping the Republican Legislature of his own State over the shoulders of our distinguished colleague. The leading paper that is in harmony with the faction (and it is a mere faction) which controls the machinery and organization of conventions there through the help of railroad managers, the leading paper of the State representing that faction, has given the country evidence whom the gentleman means to refer to as "demagogue" when he so flippantly and frequently uses that epithet.

This paper, which is edited by Mr. J. S. Clarkson, a member of the Republican national committee, in an editorial a column long, classed together the present Republican governor of the State of Iowa and my colleague on the left [Mr. WEAVER], and denounced them both as "demagogues," saying "it was no better in Governor Larrabee," the present Republican governor, "to use the dogmas and doctrines and heresies that WEAVER was using than it was for WEAVER himself to use them." And this was the character of the warfare of the corporation end of the party during the session last winter on the governor and the members who favored railroad legislation that the people had been demanding for years.

You question the Republicanism that I profess for the simple reason that I do not square myself at all times in harmony with the dictation of a set of leaders of the party who, in my judgment, are misrepresenting the rank and file.

This same representative of that faction of the Republican party in my State, to which I have alluded heretofore, arraigned me the other day for obstructing the passage of what is known as the Union Pacific refunding bill. I want to say that, so far as the official utterances of the Republican party are concerned, and so far as that question in particular is concerned, I was squaring my conduct in what I did to obstruct the passage of that legislative monstrosity with the last official utterance of the Republican party in my State, which, through the Twenty-first General Assembly, in which there was a Republican majority in both branches, emphatically denounced that proposition and instructed the legislators in Congress from that State to vote and use their influence against the passage of that measure.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. I ask for a vote.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I want just another minute to make more proof with reference to the Republicanism of those whom these self-constituted managers of the Republican party undertake to read out of the party. As an independent Republican candidate, in opposition to a man who is the leader of a faction of the party to which he belongs, I made a joint canvass of my district, holding a joint debate in every county of the eleven constituting the district; and I want to say to him that a Republican Legislature has enacted into law, and a Republican governor has approved as law, every one of the leading fundamental propositions which in that joint debate I affirmed. And when my colleague uses the word "demagogue" he means to include, and does include within his meaning, the members of a Republican Legislature and a Republican governor, who had the temerity to enact into law the statute which the railroad candidate for the presidency at Chicago denounced as the "confiscation laws" of Iowa. And these are the laws that a part at least of the Iowa delegation at Chicago were apologizing for to the railroad barons as the product of a crazy pack of demagogues who misrepresented the real sentiments of the people of the State. This is the sense in which the ordinary party boss uses the word "demagogue." And I want to say right here that the time will soon come, if it has not already, when the epithet "demagogue" as applied by the minions of the corporation bosses will be the only decoration worthy of an American in public life who wishes to represent the will of the people and not the syndicates and trusts. [Applause.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I move pro forma to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, the yearling Democrat who has just taken his seat [laughter] was not in my mind at all in the pleasant little colloquy which I had with my other colleague [Mr. WEAVER], and I confess my surprise that on such a warm afternoon the gentleman should jump into a demagogue suit never intended for him, for his size——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Louder!

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Oh, that is loud enough; the gentleman hears me and understands me.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman repeat the last remark in which he used the word "demagogue?"

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I say it surprised me not a little that my colleague and friend who has just taken his seat, whom I never thought of in my colloquy with the gentleman on the other side [Mr. WEAVER], should jump so hastily, on a hot afternoon like this, into the demagogue suit which was not cut or intended for him.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. "Demagogue" or Democrat?

Mr. REED. Either; it is the same thing. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I have great doubts whether my friend [Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa,] knows himself which name should be applied, if I should discuss him; he raises a doubt in my mind now. But if he thinks our colleague [Mr. WEAVER] is not able to take care of himself, I appreciate his generosity in coming to his aid. If he is defending himself, he is putting up a shield when no man drew a sword or threw a dart at him; and in that defense he is only drawing a swift indictment against himself. I did not draw it. If he wants to air the campaign between himself and Colonel Hepburn, this is not the place, it seems to me; but I am not his guardian. If he wants to air before this House his triumph over his able and distinguished competitor, that is his privilege; I have no quarrel with the gentleman. If he wants to invite a discussion on or a comparison of political records, I am ready——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Will you allow me a question?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Does not the gentleman affiliate with the faction of the party in Iowa who have been arraigning the present governor as a demagogue——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I do not belong to any faction. We have no factions in the Republican party in Iowa.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I want to get the gentleman's definition of what he means when he uses the word "demagogue." I want that to go upon record, because the Republican party, in its majority and its official capacity in Iowa, are demagogues according to his definition.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I do not want this taken out of my time. I want to say that the gentleman should have understood the term "demagogue" before flying into a passion at me, supposing I had made an allusion to him, which I have not. And what the arraignment of any Republican paper has to do with this question I do not understand.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Will you answer my question?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Well, now, just keep quiet for a little while, and I will answer to his heart's content.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Do you deny that it is true that the Legislature of my State has adopted laws that part of the Republican press declares are confiscation laws?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Now, if my excitable friend will just keep his seat——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. And were you not a member of the Iowa delegation representing that faction of the Republican party at Des Moines that was apologizing to Depew and the railroads for this action of the Republican Legislature?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Let the galled jade wince. These gentlemen who have no party and no politics, but who think they are so big that they can be a party unto themselves, are easily disturbed. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I will take care of myself without the assistance of my colleague.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Now, if the gentleman is so anxious to compare records, I am perfectly willing to enter into that contest with him. So far as my belonging to a faction of the Republican party is concerned, I do not belong to a faction of the Republican party either in the State or the nation; nor am I one of these hot-headed fellows that fly into a passion at nothing. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Especially when you are in as tight a place as you are in now.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Well, now, will you just let me proceed and we will see which is in the tight place.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to be interrupted.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. And the gentleman can be exceedingly patronizing when he is in a different position.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] is entitled to the floor and declines to yield.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Now, if I can be permitted to say a word, and occupy the time kindly allotted to me by the committee, I hope I may do so uninterrupted by a gentleman who seems to consider himself hit whenever a gentleman points in his direction, but had not even a thought of him.

He seems determined to thrust his record before this House. He is talking about monopolists and monopolistic legislation, and the criticism of a Republican paper and a Republican governor. I think the gentleman knows that I have been the consistent, lifelong friend of the governor of Iowa, and voted for his nomination when he himself was trying to defeat it. [Applause.] I think, therefore, I have been pretty consistent in my record as a friend of Governor Larrabee, who has stood, as he stands to-day, the champion of honest people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. I hope we will have a vote now.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I have been interrupted so much that I have not been able to say what I started out to say.

Mr. GEAR. I hope the gentleman will be permitted to proceed longer.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I have been interrupted so constantly that I have not spoken two minutes consecutively.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to make some progress with the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman ought to have cried halt when the fight was going on on the other side.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman, my colleague from Iowa, have time to finish his remarks.

Mr. NELSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NELSON. Are we in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or on the State of Iowa to-day? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOCKERY). It seems that we are in Committee of the Whole on Iowa at present.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is an amendment pending.

Mr. BLAND. Both of these gentlemen had five minutes. They are therefore on an equality, and now let us have a vote.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I hope the five minutes' time will be allotted to my colleague.

Mr. BLAND. Then, I want to couple the request with the understanding that five minutes will be the whole time; otherwise I shall object. If it is understood that that closes the debate on this paragraph, I will not object.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It will close the debate on the paragraph so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I must object to that, because if the amendment is rejected I have another substantial amendment to offer, and I desire to talk business, not politics.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman would still have five minutes for that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa, that his colleague be permitted to proceed for five minutes?

Mr. BLAND. I shall have to object. Both have had their five minutes. Let us get on with the public business.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

In line 417 strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty-five."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I will not add anything to what I have already said on this subject. It will be noticed the amendment I offer now is to increase the rate from 25 to 35, which is still 5 per cent. below the present duty. I offered the other amendment at so low a rate to be enabled to ascertain whether this House would make any difference in the rate between the material and the manufactured product. I now offer the amendment at the rate which we should make in order to give anything like adequate protection.

The Chair put the question, and was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let us have a division. I want to see gentlemen on the other side rush out of the cloak-rooms.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 79.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Gunny-cloth, not bagging, 15 per cent. ad valorem.
Bags and bagging, and like manufactures, not especially enumerated or provided for, including bagging for cotton composed wholly or in part of flax, hemp, jute, gunny-cloth, gunny-bags, or other material, 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Strike out as follows:
"In lines 423 and 424 strike out 15 per cent. ad valorem and insert three-eighths cents per pound."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] what rate ad valorem that would be on these goods?

Mr. MILLS. I will state to the gentleman from New Jersey, if my voice can reach him, that we have only changed the ad valorem to a specific duty at a corresponding rate.

Mr. KEAN. Why do you not do that on everything?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Why did you change the rate on cotton from specific to ad valorem and on this from ad valorem to specific?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We have passed over the cotton schedule, and I do not know that it is necessary to discuss it again. If the gentleman has anything to say about the proposed amendment I would like to hear from him on the subject.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would rather have it discussed intelligently than not at all.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARNER. I offer the following amendment to the pending paragraph:

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 421, strike out the words "including bagging for cotton," and at the end of line 424, insert the following:
Bagging for cotton composed wholly, or in part, of flax, hemp, or jute, 1 cent per pound.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose to detain the committee but few moments in the discussion of my amendment. Heretofore in the discussion of that provision of the bill putting burlaps upon the free-list I took occasion briefly to submit to the House certain evidence from the manufacturers of jute bagging in Missouri and from other parts of the country. My excuse for presenting this amendment, if an excuse be necessary, the industry not being in my district, but in a different part of the State, is explained and justified by the fact that the State I have the honor in part to represent on this floor is destined in the near future to take the front rank as the champion of the American system of protection. Her undeveloped resources, in which she is richer than any other State in the Union, will demand this of her Representatives.

It is charged and undenied that every member on the other side of the Chamber is denied, by caucus resolution, the right to offer upon the floor of this House any amendment to this bill, unless his amendment shall first have been submitted in private to the Committee on Ways and Means and its consent obtained. A violation of this decree of King Caucus subjects the offending member to the pains and penalties of the party lash and official displeasure.

The members from my State and other States in which this cotton-bagging industry exists, under the overpowering influence of caucus dictation are compelled to remain silent.

In the presence of the destruction of this purely American industry they are dumb.

The thing which they would do often, as in this instance, they are prohibited from even attempting,

Of the 50,000,000 yards of cotton bagging manufactured in the United States nearly one-half is made in the mills in the city of St. Louis. This is one of the leading of the many industries of that great manufacturing center. Its existence is threatened by the provision under consideration, reducing the duty from 3 cents to three-quarters of a cent per yard. More than fifteen hundred operatives are employed in the mills of St. Louis in the manufacture of jute bagging for cotton.

Messrs. Warren, Jones & Gratz, the agents of these mills in St. Louis, write me:

Missouri manufactures more "bagging for covering cotton" than any other State in the Union. The "bagging for covering cotton" is made especially for that purpose, and is a much coarser grade of goods than "burlaps" bagging, and hence can be made in this country, as it does not require such skilled labor as "burlaps" bagging. At present not a yard of this class of goods is imported; it is all made in this country; hence placing "bagging for covering cotton" on the free-list would not help to reduce the surplus in the Treasury at all, as there is no revenue derived from it. At present the bagging made in this country for covering cotton is being sold at cost, or less than cost, all over the country, the competition among the American mills having brought the market to this condition, in spite of the fact that the industry is protected by a duty on imported goods.

From this letter it will be seen that of the 50,000,000 yards of bagging used in the United States for baling the cotton crop of the South every yard is made in the United States, and, as before stated, nearly one-half is the product of the mills of the city of St. Louis. Therefore this is an American industry built up under the American system of protection.

It is claimed that this is a bill to decrease the revenues and thus reduce the surplus. If so why reduce the duty on bagging for cotton? Not one yard is imported; not one cent of revenue collected.

Should this bill become a law, reducing the duty on this article 2¼ cents per yard and thereby close the doors of the St. Louis and other factories, 50,000,000 yards will be imported each year, yielding a revenue of $375,000 per annum, increasing the surplus by that amount. The reduction of the duty on this fabric certainly will not enable the American manufacturer to sell the bagging to the cotton-planter cheaper than now. As appears from the extract cited it is being sold to-day at nearly cost. The operation of the bill will be to encourage the importation of this kind of bagging, and thus increase the revenue by the amount of duty collected.

I shall now submit to the committee an extract from a letter received by me from the Standard Mills Bagging Company, of St. Louis:

If the bill is passed as it is, it will absolutely ruin every bagging manufactory in the United States. The competition among the bagging manufacturers had already forced prices down to the point that there is but little profit in the business.

Messrs. Warren, Jones, and Gratz, reputable citizens of St. Louis, from whom I have already quoted, say on this subject:

Not a jute manufacturer in the United States could live a day with these products placed on the free-list; so, in addition to the destruction of millions of dollars invested in this class of business, thousands of operatives, absolutely dependent on it for their livelihood, would be thrown out of employment.

Like evidence from manufacturer after manufacturer can be produced, but time will not permit.

Sir, I fully recognize the fact that evidence piled mountain high will not change the vote of a single member on the other side of this Chamber. You will vote on this amendment, as on all others, in accordance with caucus instructions. Yet, sir, I shall submit an extract from a petition to the American Congress signed by 161 workingmen and women:

ST. LOUIS, MO., April 25, 1888.

Memorial of operatives of the Standard Mills Bagging Company of St. Louis, Mo.

To the Congress of the United States:

Your petitioners would respectfully represent that they are operatives and employés of the Standard Mills Bagging Company of the city of St. Louis, Mo.; that the provisions of the Mills tariff bill reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, and now pending in the House of Representatives, reducing the tariff on jute bagging to 15 per cent. ad valorem and placing burlaps on the free-list, will compel all the manufacturers of these fabrics in the United States to permanently shut down their factories, or will compel us, your petitioners, to work for the low wages paid to the operatives of Dundee, and after a short time the still lower wages paid to the pauper labor of Calcutta—in the former case less than one-half and in the latter case less than one-fifth the wages we receive.

Your petitioners would respectfully solicit your attention to the official report of Consul Wells to the State Department on the condition of jute laborers of Dundee (Consular Reports on Foreign Labor, volume 1, page 86, and volume 2, page 954), wherein it appears that the average weekly wages of females are but $2.50; that 23,670 persons live in 8,620 single rooms—"hovels"—with nothing to lie on but the bare floor, and no covering but coarse burlap cloth, and that only occasionally; that 74,374 men, women, and children occupy 16,187 two-room houses, and that thus, from extreme poverty, overcrowding in "these vile dens," filth, and neglect, they are subjected to all kinds of wretchedness, infectious diseases, and immorality, with hardly a chance to raise themselves to the level of a decent manhood and womanhood.

Your petitioners respectfully suggest that provisions of law which subject us as wage-workers to the alternative of such unhappy conditions as are shown in these official reports can not be in accordance with the wisdom of your honorable body, and humbly pray relief therefrom.

Gentlemen, you may, nay, will turn a deaf ear to the pleadings of these and tens of thousands of other laborers of the country, but beware of the ides of November; they will obtain a hearing then. In the name of American labor I plead with you not to strike down this industry in my State, or any industry, to make a market for the product of the half-paid, half-starved laborers of Dundee, or, what is still worse, that of the cooly labor of Calcutta.

Let me call the attention of my Democratic friends to a few facts that can not be successfully controverted by any gentleman on this floor. The finest mills in the world for the manufacture of jute bagging, including bagging for covering cotton, are situate in Calcutta.

The machinery in those mills is the best made. The labor employed is the cheapest in the world. These mills have a capacity to turn out 200,000,000 yards per annum, the entire product being controlled by an English syndicate or trust. The jute of which the bagging is made is grown almost at the door of the mill.

The effect of this reduction of 2½ cents per yard on bagging used for covering our cotton crop is to put American labor in direct competition with the 6-cents-a-day labor of Calcutta. It is not difficult to predict the result. Is it, I submit, the part of wisdom to place the alternative before the intelligent laborer in our jute mills to either work for a wage approximating that paid the cooly laborer in Calcutta or to seek other employment? For one, I had rather so legislate as to increase the daily pay of every wage-worker in the United States than to be a party to any legislation, at the dictation of party or otherwise, to reduce his pay one farthing.

Mr. Chairman, the cotton planter who uses the product of our American mills is not being oppressed by a high or unreasonable price for the bagging he purchases. Before these mills were established in the United States he paid the foreign manufacturer from 18 to 24 cents for every yard of bagging he purchased. Now he gets American-made bagging for 7 cents a yard. Close these mills by unfriendly legislation, and in the near future he will be at the mercy of the English syndicate that controls the entire product of the mills at Dundee and Calcutta, and we will be sending to England $4,000,000 a year for foreign-made bagging that should be expended at home for the benefit of the wage-workers of America.

It is not even contended that any one is suffering from the present rate of duty on bagging for cotton, unless it be the owners of the mills at Dundee and Calcutta. They and they alone will be benefited by the proposed reduction. Their interest and not that of the American manufacturer, laborer, or consumer have been consulted by the committee. The duty under existing law on jute bagging for cotton is but little, if any, above the average duty on all the dutible articles enumerated in the bill. It is less than two-thirds of the duty you have left on sugar, and less than one-half of the duty you have placed on rice, necessaries of life that in my judgment should be free to every laboring man.

It is true you have placed jute butts, from which this bagging is made, upon the free-list. At most this will only reduce the cost of production one-half cent per yard. The present duty is 3 cents a yard—that is, 1½ cents a pound. If you reduce the duty on the bagging an amount equal to the entire duty taken from jute, it would leave it at 1¼ cents per pound or 2½ cents per yard. You are not satisfied with that, but make a cut of 2½ cents upon each yard of the manufactured fabric, while the duty removed from the raw material, jute butts, from which the fabric is made is only one-half cent. In other words, you reduce the wage of the laborer who makes the bagging in the city of St. Louis 1¾ cents on every yard of bagging his toil produces. Thus you give the Dundee and Calcutta manufacturer an opportunity to take possession of the American market. It is not strange, notwithstanding your protestations to the contrary, that you should receive English sympathy in your free-trade tendencies.

As the London Globe puts it:

On the broad question—free trade—Mr. Cleveland's candidature naturally and necessarily carries English sympathy.

The London Times in its issue of the 6th of this month thus speaks of President Cleveland's letter to Tammany Hall:

It would hardly be possible to put the free-trade case more clearly or more strongly, and yet such is the force of words President Cleveland shrinks from the use of the term "free trade," and in fact declares that those who taunt him with being a free-trader are deceiving the country. Free trade appears to be equivalent, in the language of American political controversy, to "enemy of the workingmen and of industrial enterprises."

That it should be so is one of the curiosities of politics and an extraordinary instance of the power of a phrase even over minds which are commonly shrewd and reasonable, for it is certain that the arguments which President Cleveland urges are those which Cobden used to employ forty-five years ago, and which any English free-trader would employ now. Such propositions as that taxation ought to be strictly limited by the needs of the country, that it is unjust to tax the whole community for the benefit of special classes, that import duties stifle production and limit the area of a country's markets, are purely free-trade arguments. As such we are glad to see President Cleveland using them, though we are sorry for the popular infatuation which makes it dangerous to give them their right name.

The Daily News, of London, thus compliments the President:

President Cleveland's speech is more to the point. He discusses the principles at issue in the struggle and shows that he is the free-trade candidate in everything but name. The reservation is an important one for American party purposes. The President feels compelled to characterize the attempt to brand him as a free-trader as deception, but for all that the electoral conflict now in progress is a conflict between free trade and protection and nothing less. This is a very good conflict as things go.

No one doubts but what the President is entitled to all the praise that the free-trade press of England lavishes upon him. The proposed legislation in the pending paragraph leaves no room to doubt that you are his faithful followers in the direction of free trade. Under the plea of reducing the revenue, reducing the surplus in the Treasury, you strike down an American industry that hundreds of thousands of dollars of duty may flow into the Treasury on an article from which under existing law not one farthing of revenue is collected.

Your attempted legislation says "as plain as whisper in the ear" that you are controlled and directed by the free-trade tendencies of your party. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word by way of reply to the gentleman on one or two industrial points presented in his remarks. In the first place, the gentleman mixes up the manufacture of burlaps with that of cotton bagging.

Mr. WARNER. I beg the gentleman's pardon——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I must ask the gentleman not to interrupt me as my time is limited.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to say to the gentleman——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Will the gentleman please be silent and let me alone?

Mr. WARNER. Certainly; but I do not want to be misrepresented.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. You are not misrepresented.

Mr. WARNER. I have not mixed up anything.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman can not bring any manufacturer's statement here to the effect that machinery which makes burlaps is adapted to making this bagging. If he can, I hope he will do it. Furthermore, the gentleman can not bring any manufacturer's statement here to the effect that there is or ever has been a yard of the bagging that is enumerated in this paragraph made anywhere on the face of the earth except in the United States.

Therefore there is not in Calcutta a loom that can make this bagging. Of course they can start factories for the purpose of making it, but there are no such industries now existing in Calcutta, in Dundee, or anywhere else except in the United States, and no other cotton-producing country except the United States uses this bagging. That is the statement of bagging manufacturers in the gentleman's own State, and in other parts of the country.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman pardon me a moment?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman must excuse me. I am speaking on my own authority, and I have these statements of manufacturers——

Mr. WARNER. Well, I have statements, also.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Will the gentleman please not consume my five minutes. I got him an extension of his time to seven minutes, and I have only five myself. Furthermore, the gentleman speaks of the reduction in the price of bagging as resulting from its manufacture here. Now, he knows that when bagging was worth 20 cents a yard it was hemp bagging, not jute.

He must know that the use of the jute-butt for the making of this bagging dates only ten or fifteen years back, and he must know that it is the utilization of the refuse butt of the jute which has brought down the price of bagging. It is because we have substituted a cheap for an expensive material that the price has come down, and the reduction has nothing to do with the establishment of manufactories in this country.

The utilization of jute butts, which could be had at a mere nominal price, which were almost thrown away, which represented no more value than cornstalks do in this country, is what has brought down the price of this bagging. All along down through the period of the war we gave to our finer manufactures of jute no higher rate of protection than is now given to the coarsest manufactures of jute.

If along in 1862 and 1863 the finer manufactures of jute got such protection as 20 per cent. and 25 per cent., with a duty of five and six dollars a ton upon the jute butt, representing a very large part of the value of the butt, certainly when we give them 15 per cent. upon the very coarsest manufactures of jute, with free jute butts, we put them in a relatively better position than they were in with a duty on the butts and the rates I have named upon the manufactured articles; and according to the professions of the manufacturers themselves, and the statements of the men who spoke on this floor for the industry, those rates were higher than were needed.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Arkansas. I am perhaps unfortunate in not having the clearness of expression which so eminently characterizes that distinguished gentleman; but I do not think I had mixed up the question of burlaps with that of bagging for covering cotton. We make little or no burlaps in this country; we do make all the bagging for covering cotton. The machinery used in making this bagging has been imported into this country, paying a duty of 45 per cent., a duty which you propose to remove under this bill. That is a fact, and without raising any question between the gentleman and myself—he may be an eminent machinist—I have the record evidence that the mills of Calcutta can at anominal expense be adapted to the manufacture of this coarser grade of bagging used for covering cotton. The evidence exists, and will not be disputed on this floor, that every yard of the product of those mills is controlled by a foreign syndicate, a foreign "trust." I say to the gentleman that the operatives in the mills in the city of St. Louis, in which nearly one-half of the cotton bagging consumed in the United States is made, as well as the men who own the mills, say that if a duty of 15 per cent. ad valorem and no more is placed upon this article the result will be to shut up those factories. Whether this statement is exaggerated or not I can not say; it is a questson between the gentlemen who operate these factories and the committee. The committee has given us no facts as to the result of the proposed reduction.

One other question. In the course of the debate to-day the distinguished gentleman has seen fit to say that 20 per cent. ad valorem upon a certain article made up the difference between the labor in a foreign country and the labor in this country. Will the gentleman contend that 15 per cent. ad valorem is equivalent to the difference between the cooly labor of Calcutta and the labor in the city of St. Louis and the State of Missouri? Will the gentleman contend——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Would the gentleman like a reply to that now?

Mr. WARNER. Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That, Mr. Chairman, can be answered by giving the figures of an American manufacturer in a conversation with an English manufacturer from Calcutta. I have them in a letter from one of the most eminent textile manufacturers in America. He writes:

> One of my acquaintances came here once from Calcutta, where he had long resided, to find out why jute butts could be sent from Calcutta to be woven into bagging in place of the bagging being woven in Calcutta at 10 cents a day, the rate of weavers' wages. He went to the mill of the New York Bagging Company with my friend, Mr. Marshall, the free-trade manufacturer. When in the mill he asked the question indicated above. Mr. Marshall responded by asking him, "What is the cost of weaving a yard of gunny cloth in Calcutta at 10 cents per day wages?" To which my friend responded, "Two and a half cents." "All right," said Mr. Marshall, "that woman tending two looms earns a dollar and a half a day, but the cost of weaving the gunny cloth is a half a cent a yard." Upon which my friend made his final comment: "That is so, is it? Then I have come half way round the world to discover that I am a fool for putting a question to which I might myself have found the answer."

Bagging is not manufactured in Calcutta; but it is even a coarser line of goods than gunny cloth. And the gentleman from Missouri, I think, is in error when he says that no burlaps are made in this country.

Mr. WARNER. That is the record.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I think not.

Mr. WARNER. There may be a small quantity manufactured here.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. When this manufacturer from Calcutta saw the manner in which this work was being done by intelligent, vigorous American labor, in an invigorating climate, as opposed to the work of a poor, miserable, broken-down effete population, laboring in a climate tropical in its character and enervating in its effects—when he saw that the Americans were turning out many-fold more yards per day, and that the price of labor, per unit of product, was so much less than in Calcutta, he then saw the supremacy which the American manufacturer has, not only with 15 per cent. protection, but even without a protective tariff.

Also, the gentleman will not dispute the statement that you can not bring bagging or burlaps here at as cheap a rate of freight as you can bring raw jute. The manufactured product can not be compressed to the same extent as the jute. Therefore there is a gain in bringing the jute here compressed, just as we now gain in shipping our cotton to Europe compressed, as compared with the manner of shipping when the old-fashioned plantation bags filled up the ship's space before it had acquired its tonnage. We can get along with a duty of 15 per cent., and we could get along without any duty.

Mr. WARNER. As the gentleman used a part of my time, he will permit me to use a portion of his. I am not here to criticise the action of gentlemen of the Ways and Means Committee. It does not become me to criticise the acts of statesmen. But I will say in all frankness to the gentleman from Arkansas that had he consulted the American manufacturers of jute bagging, and followed their advice with the same blind faith that he has followed the views of the manufacturer from Calcutta, the reduction in this bill would not have been made. [Applause on the Republican side.] That is the trouble, gentlemen; you have sought information from realms remote. You talk here to-day of the debilitated pauper labor of Calcutta; but yesterday, when you were defending your rice industry of the South, we heard of the "heathen Chinee" and his products coming here in competition with the rice grown by the Southern planter. You change to suit the occasion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. As the gentleman is occupying my time, he will allow me a word.

Mr. WARNER. Certainly; we have exchanged time; it is not very valuable. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This statement of which the gentleman speaks is the statement of an American manufacturer; it is the boast of such a manufacturer of his superiority.

Mr. WARNER. I understand that it is simply hearsay evidence, which would not be received in any court in Christendom.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It is written evidence.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question recurred on Mr. WARNER'S amendment.

Mr. WARNER demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 65.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Tarred cables or cordage, 25 per cent. ad valorem.
> Untarred manila cordage, 25 per cent. ad valorem.
> All other untarred cordage, 25 per cent. ad valorem.
> Seines and seine and gilling twine, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BUCHANAN. In behalf of my colleague [Mr. LEHLBACH], who has been unable to be present to-day, I move to strike out "25" and insert "40 per cent." in lines 431 and 432.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word here in regard to the position taken by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. He referred to a speech recently delivered by Bradley Johnson, eulogizing the Confederate soldiers and their cause, showing that they were in power in the Union. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.] Now I like to hear those gentlemen talk favorably of their old comrades. [Laughter and applause.]

But I wish to refer to this significant fact, that one of the members of the Committee on Ways and Means in defending this bill made the statement that this Government could not exercise power unless it was expressly granted. His language is as follows:

> We sit here under a written Constitution, exercising only those powers which are expressly granted, and nowhere in that instrument do we find the power to tax for any but a public purpose.

That is the position of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT]. I wish to call attention of the country to the fact that that position was indorsed by the St. Louis convention. I wish to call attention further to the fact that it is the first time the Democratic party has taken that position since 1856. In the convention in 1856 they indorsed the Kentucky and Virginia resolutions of 1798 as a rule of Democratic policy. That was the doctrine of the Democracy of the country, and it was on that doctrine they went into the war.

Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] reasserted that doctrine, and he got it inserted into the Democratic platform at St. Louis for the first time since the war. Amongst its principles is defined "devotion to a plan of government regulated by a written constitution strictly specifying every granted power, and expressly reserving to the States and the people the entire ungranted residue of power."

Now, I renew the assertion, that is the first time the Democratic party of the country has taken that position since 1856; and I wish to say further that that position is in violation of the Constitution of the United States, as interpreted by Mr. Madison; and in support of that assertion on my part I will read from the Federalist, No. 43. In that letter he says, speaking of that clause of the Constitution defining the power of the Federal Government:

> Few parts of the Constitution have been assailed with more intemperance than this; yet on a fair investigation of it, no part can appear more completely invulnerable. Without the substance of this power the whole Constitution would be a dead letter. Those who object to the article, therefore, as a part of the Constitution can only mean that the form of the provision is improper. But have they considered whether a better form could have been substituted?
>
> There are four other possible methods which the convention might have taken on this subject. They might have copied the second article of the existing confederation, which would have prohibited the exercise of any power not expressly delegated; they might have attempted a positive enumeration of the powers comprehended under the general terms "necessary and proper;" they might have attempted a negative enumeration of them by specifying the powers excepted from the general definition; they might have been altogether silent on the subject, leaving these necessary and proper powers to construction and inference.
>
> Had the convention taken the first method of adopting the second article of confederation, it is evident that the new Congress would be continually exposed, as their predecessors have been, to the alternative of construing the term "expressly" with so much vigor as to disarm the Government of all real authority whatever, or with so much latitude as to destroy altogether the force of the restriction. It would be easy to show, if it were necessary, that no important power, delegated by the Articles of Confederation, has been or can be executed by Congress without recurring more or less to the doctrine of construction or implication.
>
> As the powers delegated under the new system are more extensive, the Government which is to administer it would find itself still more distressed with the alternative of betraying the public interest by doing nothing, or of violating the Constitution by exercising powers indispensably necessary and proper, but at the same time not expressly granted.

Now, this strict construction of the Constitution, so strongly assailed by Mr. Madison in this letter, is the very position of the Democratic party to-day, and that is why they, led by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, declare that the Government has no power to levy a tariff except for the purpose of revenue only.

The question was taken on Mr. BUCHANAN'S amendment, and it was disagreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to read as follows:

> Sail duck, or canvas for sails, 25 per cent. ad valorem.
> Russia and other sheetings, of flax or hemp, brown or white, 25 per cent. ad valorem.
> All other manufactures of hemp or manila, or of which hemp or manilla shall be a component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. JACKSON. I move to strike out "25 per cent." and insert "40 per cent."

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Grass cloth, and other manufactures of jute, ramie, China, and sisal-grass, not specially enumerated or provided for, 25 per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That as to jute, jute-butts, sunn, and sisal-grass, and manufactures thereof, except burlaps, not exceeding 60 inches in width, this act shall take effect January 1, 1889; and as to flax, hemp, manila, and other like substitutes for hemp, and the manufactures thereof, upon July 1, 1889.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking gentlemen on the other side to tell me why the rates are fixed as they are.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It was supposed, of course, that this bill, if it took effect at all, would not take effect until long after the present crop had been sown. There are crops in Kentucky and elsewhere of hemp and flax, and necessarily these crops were sown in the spring and will be cut in the fall, and will of course have to be rotted and broken out, and be ready for sale in the spring of 1889.

Mr. ADAMS. Now with reference to the other provision fixing the date July 1.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman will see that this paragraph is divided into two clauses, one the articles which would be apt to come in competition with American-grown articles, but not of the same character.

Mr. ADAMS. Is that the first or second part?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That is the first part; that is, jute, jute-butts, sunn and sisal-grass, and manufactures thereof. None of these are raised in America.

The second clause relates to those articles which can be raised in America and may come in direct competition with a crop which can not come into the market until after the 1st of January, and therefore this later date was fixed to cover the period necessary for the crop sown this spring to be sold.

Mr. ADAMS. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to have leave of the committee at this time to insert in the RECORD a table showing the rate of wages in the State of New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the right under the general leave to do that.

The table referred to by Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, is as follows:

WAGES IN THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

There is probably no State except Connecticut, which is more injuriously affected by the present tariff than the State of New York, and this injury is more serious to those who earn their living by day's wages than to any other portion of the community. A careful examination of the statistics of manufactures in the census of 1880 will show this conclusively. That census shows that the industries, in which the manufacturers of New York are engaged are generally those in which the materials are either the product of the forest and the mine, such as coal, iron ore, and lumber, or else materials in a still more advanced state of preparation. The totals of the census table for this State for the year 1880 are as follows:

Number of manufacturing establishments	42,739
Capital employed	$514,246,575
Average number of hands employed:
Males above 16 years	346,549
Females above 15 years	137,455
Children and youths	29,529
Total number of hands	531,533
Total amount paid in wages during the year	$198,634,029
Value of materials	$679,612,545
Value of products of manufactories	$1,080,696,596

It appears from this table that after paying the entire cost of material and wages and 6 per cent. upon the capital invested, $30,854,794.50, there was a balance to the credit of the New York manufacturers in 1880 of $171,595,227.50. This covered wear and tear, insurance, commission, and other incidental expenses of the business and the manufacturer's profit.

It is apparent from this that the business of manufacturing in New York, in 1880, was a profitable one to the manufacturer, and the question is how legislation can be so shaped as to benefit the workingman without injuriously affecting the business. The argument that is constantly used by the protectionists is that it is of no use to the workingman to cheapen the price of what he has to buy if he will have no work with which to earn money to pay for it. This is undoubtedly true, and what the Mills bill proposes to do is to make such a change in the tariff laws that the price of the material employed in the manufactures of the State of New York will be reduced without diminishing the wages of the workingman, but on the contrary, with a tendency to increase them.

The average duty on materials that enter into the manufactures of the State of New York is 47 per cent. The duty on some of them is a great deal more and in many instances, as in the case of the duty on copper, is so high as to be prohibitory. But taking the average of 47 per cent., what does this mean? It means that for every $100 worth of material purchased, the cost to the manufacturer when delivered in New York is $147; that is to say, that the tax on the material is about one-third of the American value; which is that stated in the census table as that of the materials used in the industries of New York. It is true that in many cases the price of these materials in this country is not increased as much as the amount of the tariff tax. But it is also true that the effect of the tariff tax upon these materials is in many instances to increase their price more than the amount which is paid in taxes to the Government. This is due to two facts:

First. The expense of transporting the material from the foreign country in which it is produced to this country, and Second. The profit which the importer who advances the duties to the Government requires before he will sell the article which he has imported. For example, an importer who has purchased tin-plates, worth in London $100,000, and has paid to the United States $33,000 as the duty upon them, will not sell these tin-plates for $133,000, but will ask for them that price plus interest on his outlay and profit on his investment. This would raise the price to the New York manufacturer who uses tin-plates in the course of his business; as for example, in making tin-ware, or in canning tomatoes, or in roofing a house, or in making a leader or any other purpose for which tin-plates are used, so that it is plain before the goods actually get into the factory in which they are to be worked up, the cost of them would be at least $150,000. It therefore follows that the estimate that has been made, that one-third of the cost of the materials is due to the tariff, is a fair one. If the tariff on these materials were repealed altogether, it would consequently follow that the manufacturers of the State of New York, instead of being compelled as they were in 1880 to pay over $679,000,000 for their materials, could, if these materials had been on the free-list, have bought them for about $450,000,000, making a saving of about $225,000,000. This would have cheapened the price of the product without diminishing the wages of the workman, or the profit of the manufacturer.

In fact, the necessary tendency of such a change in the law would be to increase both. Mr. Wheeler showed very clearly in the recent joint debate in Boston that there were three things which affected the rate of wages—first, demand and supply; second, cost of material; third, the efficiency of the labor. Now, it is plain that if the cost of the finished product, the coat for the shirt or the can of tomatoes or the shoes or the house, is diminished by diminishing the cost of the materials, more persons would be able to buy the one or rent the other than there are now. This would increase the demand, and increased demand would increase the production. The wages of the laborer would at once increase.

In other words, a hundred millions of this saving in the cost of the material could be paid to the laborer, and yet the price of the finished product could be reduced by $125,000,000.

A very striking illustration of this is afforded by the course of the market for quinine. The duty on quinine was abolished, and quinine itself was put on the free-list in 1879. The manufacturers of quinine represented to the tariff commission in 1882 that it would destroy their business to keep quinine on the free-list. The following statements made by them before the commission are so like the statements of many of the manufacturers of the present day in reference to the Mills bill that they deserve to be quoted:

Mr. Charles P. White, of New York City, said: "We ask protection so that we may at least stand on a par with European manufacturers and not be driven out of the business entirely. We should be in a position where we can have some slight protection. If we can have all the duties that now exist on the articles we use removed, a 10 per cent. protection would be helpful to us. Without the removal of such duties we should have at least 15 per cent., and this, I think, can not be considered as an excessive rate of protection."

By Commissioner KENNER, to Mr. S. G. Rosengarten:

"Q. I understand you to say that a moderate tariff on quinine, not exceeding 20 per cent., and certainly equal to 10 per cent., is necessary for the continued manufacture of the article in this country?

"A. Yes, sir, as a business. We should keep on manufacturing it, of course, under any circumstance in order to supply our customers; but to make a successful business we must have some protection. You can see from the figures which have been presented to you how the business has fallen off."

But notwithstanding these arguments, Congress refused to restore the duty on quinine, and it has been on the free-list ever since. At the same time forests of cinchona, from the bark of which quinine is made, have been cultivated, so that the article itself has become a subject of agriculture as well as of commerce.

The effect of this has been greatly to diminish the cost of the material from which quinine is made, and this and the repeal of the tax have had the result of greatly diminishing the cost of quinine, so that one hundred 2-grain quinine pills, which cost the purchaser before the abolition of the tariff tax from $2.75 to $3, can now be bought for 50 cents. And the manufacturers of quinine have never been so prosperous nor the wages of the workmen employed in their factories so remunerative as they are at the present time. What more conclusive evidence could there be that if the manufacturers could get cheap materials they would need no tariff protection, but could raise their wages and make more money than they now do?

Another striking illustration of the statement that has been made is to be found in the legislation in reference to hides and leather. In 1872 the duty of 10 per cent., which up to that time had been levied on raw hides, was repealed, and they were put on the free-list. The effect of this can best be stated in the words of Mr. J. S. Moore:

"In 1872, the last year when a duty was levied on raw hides, our export of tanned leather was valued at $2,865,800. In 1873, the first year after hides were free, the export value of leather arose to $4,362,174. Two years later, in 1875, it rose to $7,064,482." In 1886 the amount exported was $8,737,682; in 1887, $10,436,138. This is four times the amount of the exports of 1872, and the production of the leather thus exported gave employment to many more workmen.

The effect of this reduction has not only been to increase the exports of manufactured leather, but to increase and make more remunerative the wages of men who work in leather and the production of leather and leather goods for home consumption.

I annex a table which shows the cost of material, the amount of wages paid, and value of the finished product, and the amount that remained to the manufacturer after paying his wages and for his materials during 1880, and in the principal industries of the city and State of New York. If any mechanic or workman who works in any of these trades will take up this table and examine the part of it relating to his own trade he will see exactly what part of the cost of the finished product in that trade is made up by the cost of the material and what part by the wages that are paid.

He will find in almost every case that the cost of material is more than three times the amount paid for wages, and nearly or quite three-fifths of the value of the finished product. It will thus be clear to every person who will take the trouble to examine into the facts that the interest of the workingman can best be subserved by the repeal of the duties upon the materials which he uses in his work, and that the only persons that would be injured by such a change in the tariff are the owners of the forests and mines of this country, whose profits might thereby be diminished. But even in their case the probability is that the repeal of the duty on raw materials would give such an impetus to business, would increase so much the demand for the products of our manufacturers, by diminishing their price and increasing the ability of the workman to buy the comforts and necessaries of life, that even those engaged in the production of lumber, the mining of ore, and the making of salt would not be seriously injured. Even if they should, the whole number of persons engaged in these industries is not one-fiftieth of the population of the United States.

The laws of the country have for nearly thirty years discriminated in their favor. On their account, and to benefit them, most burdensome taxes have been imposed upon every other industry. Certainly they have had their share, and they ought not to complain if some attention now is paid to the wants and requirements of the rest of the community, and particularly to the wants and needs of those who work in the factories and mills of America and who are now suffering from a tax imposed ostensibly for their benefit, but which really is an injury to them.

It is all very well to say that the cost of each article is not very much increased by the tariff; but that is poor comfort to the man who earns, let us say, $45 a month. Two dollars a month on his house rent, 10 cents on every hat, 15 cents on every pair of shoes, 5 cents on every can of tomatoes, 15 cents on every yard of carpet, a dollar on every suit of clothes, may not be much to the millionaire. To the workman they would make the difference between pinching economy and comparative comfort. And that is what we are trying to secure for him.

Table of manufactures, New York City, 1880.

Articles of manufacture.	Establishment.	Wages.	Material.	Value finished product.	Difference between value of product and aggregate of wages and material.
Artificial feathers and flowers	141	$934,768	$2,241,302	$4,298,684	$1,122,614
Bags, other than paper	7	317,850	2,919,600	3,584,300	246,850
Belting and hose, leather	11	150,694	1,362,860	1,699,729	186,179
Book-binding and blank-book making	114	1,553,704	2,290,627	4,927,886	1,083,555
Boots and shoes, including custom work	839	2,474,050	3,621,822	7,663,000	1,567,128
Boxes, cigar	20	301,042	433,218	1,035,549	301,289
Boxes, fancy and paper	55	671,620	1,044,409	2,173,565	457,536
Boxes, packing	33	306,682	715,790	1,242,844	220,372
Brass castings	64	576,971	884,737	1,826,845	465,137
Bread and other baking products	782	1,275,723	6,045,762	9,415,424	2,093,939
Brooms and brushes	45	281,924	981,918	1,573,561	308,719
Carpentering	460	2,242,060	3,454,265	7,096,315	1,399,990
Carriages and wagons	139	965,719	1,041,825	2,613,361	505,817
Clothing, men's	736	14,012,805	40,209,340	60,798,697	6,576,552
Clothing, women's	230	3,886,715	11,745,305	18,930,553	3,298,533
Coffee and spices, roasted and ground	30	267,670	4,766,520	5,974,458	940,268
Coffins, burial cases, etc	45	218,175	525,503	1,098,103	344,425
Collars and cuffs, not specified	7	160,033	688,611	1,061,284	212,640
Confectionery	187	542,775	3,057,269	4,592,622	991,848
Drugs and chemicals	27	305,969	2,639,415	3,694,178	648,794
Engraving, steel	21	1,154,510	284,214	1,798,550	259,826
Flouring and grist mill products	15	289,741	5,183,154	6,229,926	757,031
Foundry and machine-shop works	287	5,373,142	6,223,805	14,710,835	3,113,888
Lard, refined	11	254,883	14,317,826	14,758,718	185,999
Liquors, malt	79	2,115,067	10,717,421	19,137,882	6,305,394
Printing and publishing	412	5,876,868	7,359,559	21,696,354	8,460,127
Slaughtering and meat packing	58	575,521	27,763,577	29,297,527	958,429
Sugar and molasses, refined	5	255,783	10,677,746	11,330,883	397,354
Tobacco, cigars, etc	761	6,066,455	8,805,147	18,347,108	3,475,506
Miscellaneous	53	1,479,670	5,693,964	8,968,184	1,784,550
Total, including some not specified above	11,339	97,030,021	288,441,691	472,925,437	87,454,725

Table of manufactures, New York State, 1880.

Agricultural implements	265	$2,513,875	$4,580,010	$10,709,766	$3,603,881
Artificial flowers and feathers	150	950,938	2,257,623	4,343,943	1,131,363
Bags other than paper	8	338,850	3,119,600	3,884,306	425,856
Baking and yeast powder	28	215,585	1,644,714	2,142,730	282,431
Belting and hose, leather	22	196,674	1,904,513	2,365,139	263,952
Book-binding and blank-book making	156	1,680,629	2,445,294	5,296,691	1,230,668
Boots and shoes	272	4,902,132	11,502,251	18,979,259	2,574,876
Cigar-boxes	54	373,228	603,337	1,339,668	362,653
Fancy boxes and paper	113	916,049	1,508,391	3,033,777	609,347
Boxes, wood, packing	156	684,519	2,309,185	3,610,472	616,768
Brass castings	102	683,243	1,301,247	2,458,445	473,955
Bread and other baking products	1,719	2,612,982	13,022,040	19,337,953	4,302,931
Brick and tile	321	1,613,766	1,196,925	4,108,464	1,297,773
Brooms and brushes	215	814,349	2,630,919	3,705,127	859,859
Carpets, other than rag	10	1,952,391	4,453,410	8,419,254	2,013,453
Carriages and wagons	667	2,882,672	4,031,422	8,888,479	1,954,385
Cars, railroad, street, and repairs	26	356,390	1,470,273	2,304,680	277,858
Cheese and butter	1,652	623,391	8,848,708	12,295,353	2,823,254
Clothing, men's	1,583	18,321,466	52,712,947	81,133,611	10,099,198
Clothing, women's	277	4,196,913	12,577,958	20,314,307	3,539,436
Coffee and spices, roasted and ground	58	380,259	6,073,482	7,652,672	1,168,931
Confectionery	392	835,204	4,304,832	6,686,389	1,546,353
Cooperage	740	1,676,719	3,913,531	6,765,719	1,175,469
Cordage and twine	37	632,748	4,110,112	5,207,135	464,275
Cotton goods	57	2,218,121	5,627,299	9,723,527	1,878,107
Drugs and chemicals	112	993,556	6,978,755	9,991,259	2,018,948
Fertilizers	75	287,859	2,242,511	3,150,312	519,942
Flouring and grist mill products	1,768	1,587,899	43,226,194	49,331,984	4,517,895
Foundry and machine-shop products	883	14,828,342	20,214,369	44,714,915	9,672,201
Furnishing goods, men's	73	1,790,514	3,770,374	7,147,443	1,376,554
Furniture	849	4,997,041	6,749,672	15,210,879	3,364,166
Gloves and mittens	199	1,245,013	3,404,937	5,718,529	1,068,579
Grease and tallow	23	178,898	6,623,526	7,322,970	520,546
Hats and caps	168	1,877,123	3,335,778	6,464,058	1,251,157
Hosiery and knit goods	75	2,035,076	5,072,058	9,899,540	2,791,400
Iron and steel	89	4,999,451	13,395,229	22,219,219	4,714,539
Lard, refined	11	254,883	14,317,826	14,758,718	186,009
Leather, tanned	386	1,819,742	18,014,683	23,652,366	3,817,941
Liquors, malt	325	3,912,798	19,823,853	35,392,677	11,656,026
Lumber, sawed	2,832	2,162,972	9,119,263	14,356,910	3,074,675
Malt	111	513,229	7,781,359	9,874,098	1,579,500
Marble and stone work	560	3,496,242	4,055,445	10,189,267	3,637,580
Mixed textiles	134	3,049,305	6,935,558	13,376,380	3,391,517
Musical instruments	82	3,213,481	3,579,131	8,084,154	1,292,542
Paints	73	831,863	6,934,561	9,455,900	1,529,476
Printing and publishing	712	8,059,487	9,518,171	27,885,376	10,307,718
Ship-building	457	2,907,129	4,055,637	7,985,044	1,022,278
Shirts	195	2,730,571	6,410,261	11,014,820	1,273,988
Silk and silk goods	151	2,599,025	5,331,804	10,179,140	2,248,311
Slaughtering and meat-packing	128	1,029,790	40,149,850	43,096,138	1,916,498
Soap and candles	97	494,903	4,889,625	6,574,939	1,190,411
Sugar, molasses, refined	17	1,218,212	67,273,614	71,237,051	2,745,225
Tinware, copper, and sheet-iron ware	1,190	2,151,397	5,217,864	9,858,768	2,500,507
Tobacco, chewing, smoking, and snuff	45	1,103,435	5,337,075	8,907,737	2,467,227
Tobacco, cigars and cigarettes	1,683	7,671,831	11,942,043	24,767,504	5,153,730
Miscellaneous industries	12,913	18,337,158	29,039,931	64,355,479	26,978,390
Total, including some not specified above	42,739	198,634,029	679,612,545	1,080,696,596	202,450,022

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next paragraph.

Mr. MILLS. I want to make a proposition now similar to that which was made by my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] the other day in reference to the sugar schedule. I propose that the Clerk read the entire third section of the bill, which embraces the woolen schedule, and then have the debate upon the entire schedule or any portion of it, with the right to offer amendments to all or any of these paragraphs.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman first permit a suggestion? I have an amendment which I have not quite prepared to this preceding paragraph, and I would like to have the right to offer that amendment as soon as I can get it ready.

Mr. MILLS. Very well. I have no objection.

I ask now that the entire woolen section be read, and then that it be open to amendment and debate.

Mr. ADAMS. How far?

Mr. MILLS. The whole of section 3, comprising sixty-one lines.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas that the entire schedule be read as one paragraph, and be then open to debate and amendment?

Mr. DINGLEY. Before consent is given, I would like to inquire of the gentleman with reference to the time to be given for debate? If this is read as simply one paragraph, of course it is then in the power of the gentleman to move that the committee rise and close debate.

Mr. MILLS. We have no intention of proceeding otherwise than was done in the sugar schedule. I propose this with a view of saving as much time as possible. Let the debate go on, and after awhile we will come to some conclusion as to the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. On and after July 1, 1888, there shall be admitted, when imported, free of duty:

All wools, hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals.

Wools on the skin.

Woolen rags, shoddy, mungo, waste, and flocks.

And on and after October 1, 1888, in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed on the articles hereinafter mentioned in this section, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following rates of duty on said articles severally:

Woolen and worsted cloths, shawls, and all manufactures of wool of every description, made wholly or in part of wool or worsted, not specially enumerated or provided for, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Flannels, blankets, hats of wool, knit goods, and all goods made on knitting-frames, balmorals, woolen and worsted yarns, and all manufactures of every description, composed wholly or in part of wool or worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, or other animals, not specially enumerated or provided for, 40 per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That from and after the passage of this act, and until the 1st day of October, 1888, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to classify as woolen cloth all imports of worsted cloth, whether known under the name of worsted cloth or under the names of "worsteds" or "diagonals," or otherwise.

Bunting, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloths, and goods of like description, composed in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, or other animals, 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Clothing, ready-made, and wearing apparel of every description not specially enumerated or provided for, and balmoral skirts and skirting and goods of similar description or used for like purposes, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, or other animals, made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, except knit goods, 45 per cent. ad valorem.

Cloaks, dolmans, jackets, talmas, ulsters, or other outside garments for ladies' and children's apparel, and goods of similar description or used for like purposes, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, or other animals, made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer (except knit goods), 45 per cent. ad valorem.

Webbings, gorings, suspenders, braces, beltings, bindings, braids, galloons, fringes, gimps, cords, cords and tassels, dress trimmings, head-nets, buttons, or barrel buttons, or buttons of other forms for tassels or ornaments wrought by hand or braided by machinery, made of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, or other animals, or of which wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca, goat, or other animals is a component material, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

All carpets and carpetings, druggets, bockings, mats, rugs, screens, covers, hassocks, bedsides of wool, flax, cotton, hemp, jute, or parts of either, or other material, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

Endless belts or felts for paper or printing machines, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

During the reading of the above,

Mr. REED said: How does it happen that this is being read in this manner?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asked unanimous consent that the whole of section 3 might be read as one paragraph, and then be open to amendment and debate.

Mr. REED. To be considered as one paragraph?

Mr. MILLS. We are going to consider this just as we did the sugar schedule at the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. If any gentleman wants to offer a substitute for the whole, of course he can do so, and amendments to any part of it will be in order.

Mr. REED. But we are to vote on the separate items?

Mr. MILLS. Oh, yes.

Mr. REED. And no limitation as to the debate?

Mr. MILLS. Not yet. We will debate it for awhile.

Mr. REED. But the understanding was here, I am informed, that there was to be no limitation to the debate.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman from Maine, Governor DINGLEY, said that if there was reasonable debate it would be satisfactory.

Mr. REED. Reasonable debate is rather an indefinite term.

Mr. MILLS. I propose that there shall be a fair and reasonable debate. If you say two days, I shall not object.

Mr. REED. Two days!

I think there has been a misunderstanding in regard to this matter.

Mr. MILLS. Not at all. I simply did as my friend from Illinois invited us to do the other day in regard to the sugar schedule.

Mr. REED. If there is an understanding that there is to be no limitation as to the debate, there is no objection to the other part of it.

Mr. MILLS. I would not say that there should be no limitation. It would mean the giving up of the bill.

Mr. REED. Not at all. Of course if it was in any bad faith, or anything of that sort, I would not expect you to stand by it.

Mr. MILLS. Let us take the same course that we took in regard to the sugar provision. What time does the gentleman propose? Let us see if we can agree upon something.

Mr. REED. I do not propose any time. I always understood as a matter of parliamentary propriety that there is no method of fixing any limitation to debate before the debate has begun. There can not be from the very nature of the case.

How can you tell how many arguments you will allow before you know how many arguments are going to be started?

Mr. MILLS. I am not proposing to limit the debate, but I do not say I never would move to close the debate. I will give you fair and liberal time, as I did on the sugar schedule. You ought to be satisfied with the way we did about that. I do not propose to take snap judgment on anybody at all.

Mr. REED. Of course we have the matter in our own hand; only I want it understood that we are not to be regarded as filibustering if we do not get what we consider the proper amount of time for debate.

The reading of the section as above was then concluded.

Mr. BUCHANAN. There was a section passed over temporarily to allow me to prepare an amendment. I have the amendment ready and will now send it to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Page 27, after line 440, insert:

"Provided further, That wherever any of the goods, wares, and merchandise in this section mentioned are the product in whole or in part of convict labor the same shall pay treble the said rates by this section imposed."

The Chair put the question on the amendment, and was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 65.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I desire to state that I may print a few remarks on the item of oil-cloth. I know it is permitted under the order, but I do not care to avail myself of it without giving notice.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no objection.

Mr. CASWELL. Before the committee rises I ask unanimous consent that leave be now given to offer amendments to this section and that the amendments may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MILLS. I have no objection.

Mr. CASWELL. Several gentlemen have prepared amendments, and if they can be offered now and printed in the RECORD, members will be able to see what they are.

There was no objection; and under the leave thus given amendments were offered as follows:

By Mr. PUGSLEY:

To strike out the entire section.

By Mr. O'DONNELL:

"That the rates of duty to be levied, collected, and paid upon the three several classes of wool and hair from the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, as now classified by law, which may be imported from foreign countries, shall be restored and fixed at what they were on each of the three classes, respectively, of said articles at the time of the passage of the act of March 3, 1883, entitled 'An act to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and for other purposes,' any law to the contrary notwithstanding."

By Mr. BOOTHMAN:

Amend line 2, on page 27, by striking out the words "there shall be admitted" and in lieu thereof insert the words "all wools, hair of the alpaca goat, and other like animals;" and after the words "when imported," in said line 2, insert the following:

"Shall be divided, for the purpose of fixing the duties to be charged thereon, into the three following classes:

"Class 1, clothing wools.—That is to say, merino, mestiza, metz, or metis wools, or other wools of merino blood, immediate or remote, Down clothing wools and wools of like character with any of the preceding, including such as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Buenos Ayres, New Zealand, Australia, Cape of Good Hope, Russia, Great Britain, Canada, and elsewhere, and also including all wools not hereinafter described or designated in classes 2 and 3.

"Class 2, combing wools.—That is to say, Leicester, Cotswold, Lincolnshire, Down combing wools, Canada long wools, or other like combing wools of English blood, and usually known by the terms herein used, and also all hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals.

"Class 3, carpet wools and other similar wools.—Such as Donskoi, native South American, Cordova, Valparaiso, native Smyrna, and including all such wools of like character as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Turkey, Greece, Egypt, Syria, and elsewhere.

"The duty on wools of the first class which shall be imported washed shall be twice the amount of the duty to which they would be subjected if imported unwashed; and the duty on wools of all classes which shall be imported scoured shall be three times the duty to which they would be subjected if imported unwashed. The duty upon wool of the sheep, or hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, which shall be imported in any other than ordinary condition, as now and heretofore practiced, or shall be changed in its character or condition for the purpose of evading the duty, or which shall be reduced in value by the admixture of dirt or any other foreign substance, shall be twice the duty to which it would be otherwise subject.

"Wools of the first class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall be 30 cents or less per pound, 10 cents per pound; wools of the same class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall exceed 32 cents per pound, 12 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 10 per cent. ad valorem.

"Wools of the second class, and all hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, the value whereof, at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall be 32 cents or less per pound, 10 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 11 per cent. ad valorem; wools of the same class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall exceed 32 cents per pound, 12 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 10 per cent. ad valorem.

"Wools of the third class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall be 12 cents or less per pound, 3 cents per pound; wools of the same class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall exceed 12 cents per pound, 6 cents per pound.

"Wools on the skin, the same rates as other wools, the quantity and value to be ascertained under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe."

Also further amend by striking out lines 3, 4, 5, and 6.

By Mr. CASWELL:

Amend the bill by striking out lines 4, 5, and 6, of section 3, placing wools upon the free-list, and insert the following:

"All wools, hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, as aforesaid, shall be divided for the purposes of fixing the duties to be charged thereon into three classes, to wit:

"Class 1. Clothing wools.

"Class 2. Combing wools.

"Class 3. Carpet and other similar wools according to and in the manner provided in section 1 of chapter 197 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1867.

"And upon wools of the first class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall be 32 cents or less per pound, the duty shall be 10 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 11 per cent. ad valorem. Upon wools of the same class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall exceed 32 cents per pound, the duty shall be 12 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 10 per cent. ad valorem.

"Upon wools of the second class, and upon all hair of the alpaca, goat, and other like animals, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall be 32 cents or less per pound, the duty shall be 10 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 11 per cent. ad valorem. Upon wools of the same class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall exceed 32 cents per pound, the duty shall be 12 cents per pound, and in addition thereto 10 per cent. ad valorem.

"Upon wools of the third class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall be 12 cents or less per pound, the duty shall be 3 cents per pound.

Upon wools of the same class, the value whereof at the last port or place whence exported to the United States, excluding charges in such port, shall exceed 12 cents per pound, the duty shall be 6 cents per pound.

Provided, That the duty upon wool of the first class, which shall be imported washed, shall be twice the amount of duty to which it would be subjected if imported unwashed, and that the duty upon wool of all classes which shall be imported scoured shall be three times the amount of the duty to which it would be subjected if imported unwashed.

On sheep skins and Angora goat skins, raw or unmanufactured, imported with the wool on, washed or unwashed, the duty shall be 30 per cent. ad valorem, and on rags, shoddy, mungo, waste, and flocks, the duty shall be 12 cents per pound.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MILLS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Was to-night set apart for the consideration of bills in relation to the census, in accordance with the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX]?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. STEELE, until further notice.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9345) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889; and also that the Senate further insisted upon its amendment numbered 7.

RECESS.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House was called to order at 8 p. m. by Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN as Speaker pro tempore, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 11, 1888.

SIR: I hereby designate Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House this evening.

JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK,
Clerk House of Representatives.

The Clerk read the order on which the House assembled, as follows:

On motion of Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that a recess be taken this evening until 8 p. m., the evening session to be devoted to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1659) to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill assigned for this evening be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1659) to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses.

[Mr. COX withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. COX. I now ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill by sections with the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a census of the population, wealth, and industry of the United States shall be taken on or for the date June 1, 1890.

The committee propose to amend in line 4, by striking out "for" and insert "of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That there shall be established in the Department of the Interior an office to be denominated the Census Office, the chief officer of which shall be called the Superintendent of the Census, whose duty it shall be, under the direction of the head of the Department, to superintend and direct the taking of the Eleventh Census of the United States, in accordance with the laws relating thereto, and to perform such other duties as may be required of him by law.

The committee propose in section 2, line 4, to strike out the word "the" before the word "census."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. The Superintendent of Census shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and he shall receive an annual salary of $5,000; and for the purposes of taking the Eleventh Census of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior may appoint a chief clerk of the Census Office at an annual salary of $2,500, two stenographers, and ten chiefs of division, at an annual salary each of $2,000, ten clerks of class 4, twenty clerks of class 3, thirty clerks of class 2, with such number of clerks of class 1, and of clerks, copyists, and computers, at salaries of not less than $720 nor more than $1,000 per annum, as may be found necessary for the proper and prompt compilation of the results of the enumeration of the census herein provided to be taken. And upon such compilation and publication of said census the period of service of said clerks shall end. All the clerks of classes 4, 3, and 2, above provided for, may be statistical experts.

The committee propose the following amendments to section 3:

In line 3 strike out "five" and insert "six."

After the word "stenographers," in line 7, strike out the word "and," and after the word "division," at the end of the line, add "and one disbursing clerk."

After the word "taken," in line 15, add the following:

"And the Secretary of the Interior may also appoint one captain of the watch, at a salary of $840 per annum, two messengers, and such number of watchmen and assistant messengers and messenger boys, at salaries of $400 each per annum, laborers and skilled laborers, at $600 each per annum, and charwomen, at salaries of $240 each per annum, as may be found necessary to carry out the provisions of this act."

In line 17, after the word "clerks," where it first occurs, add the words "and employés."

In line 19, after the word "experts," add the following:

"The disbursing clerk herein provided for shall, before entering upon his duties, give bond to the Treasurer of the United States in the sum of $50,000, which bond shall be conditioned that the said officer shall render a true and faithful account to the Treasurer, quarter-yearly, of all moneys and properties which shall be by him received by virtue of his office, with sureties to be approved by the Solicitor of the Treasury. Such bond shall be filed in the office of the First Comptroller of the Treasury, to be by him put in suit upon any breach of the condition thereof."

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. As I did not enter the Hall till a few minutes ago, I wish to inquire what arrangement has been made in regard to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill, by unanimous consent, is being considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The first reading was dispensed with, and the bill is now being read by sections for amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] what increase of force the pending section—section 3—provides in comparison with the act for the taking of the last census. I find here a provision for ten chiefs of division. I supposed there was now some sort of organization in the Interior Department with reference to the census; if not, it has been very recently abolished. I desire to ascertain whether this bill proposes the organization of an entirely new force—a new bureau, as it were, in that Department.

Mr. COX. Some five years ago the census bureau was abolished, and the whole business connected with the census was placed in the hands of a chief clerk in the Interior Department, who has taken charge of the archives and other matters connected with the last census, as well as to some extent the preparation for the next. This bill is substantially the same as the act for the taking of the census of 1880.

Mr. ROGERS. Is the force the same?

Mr. COX. The force is not exactly the same; there is an increase.

Mr. ROGERS. To what extent?

Mr. COX. The third section of the act of 1879, under which the census of 1880 was taken, reads as follows:

The Superintendent of Census shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and he shall receive an annual salary of $5,000; and the Secretary of the Interior may appoint a chief clerk of the census office, six clerks of class 4, ten clerks of class 3, fifteen clerks of class 2, with such number of clerks of class 1, and of copyists and computers, at salaries of not less than $700 or more than $1,000, as may be found necessary for the proper and prompt compilation and publication of the results of the enumeration of the census herein provided to be taken.

Most of the clerks for whom this bill provides will not be called into use until the actual and active work of taking the census has been begun; then there must be almost a regiment of people to digest, tabulate, and copy the results of the census. Of course there must be an increase of force to some extent as our population has increased since the last census from 51,000,000 to something like 64,000,000.

Mr. ROGERS. The matter which attracted my attention was the creation of ten separate divisions in one bureau. Ten chiefs of divisions struck me as a rather large force.

Mr. COX. Instead of providing that these officers be appointed at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior or the Superintendent of the Census, we classify them and fix the salaries. I think classification has now become a rule in the business of our Departments, and a very valuable rule. This arrangement has been recommended by those familiar with this business—men who have been engaged in statistical work and know all about it. I accept their judgment as superior to my own in a matter of this kind.

Mr. ROGERS. This is a matter to which I have not given any consideration, and, of course, I would not venture to criticise anything that has been done by the committee; but noticing the organization proposed in the bill, it seemed to me the force was very large, and I thought that some explanation of this matter ought to be made, and go upon record, if we are to create a great bureau of this description.

Mr. COX. I suppose this bureau will not be at work for some time; we must first organize the business. Many of these officers will not be called into active duty until the work really begins; but the bureau must be created now.

Mr. FULLER. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee [Mr. COX] why the committee has recommended an increase of the salary of the Superintendent from $5,000 to $6,000. It occurs to me $6,000 is a high salary—entirely too high. It is higher than is received by the head of any bureau that I now think of—higher than the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions. There are very few judges of our United States courts who receive such a salary. This work does not require a very high order of talent. Of course, it calls for accuracy and painstaking application; but I see no reason why the salary should be increased $1,000.

Mr. COX. The Superintendent of the Geological Survey gets $6,000. I do not believe the Government can get the right kind of service in this case unless the salary be raised to $6,000. I think we all have in our minds a gentleman, now superintendent of the Department of Labor, who, if he chose to go into other business outside of official station, could command a salary of $10,000. It was the judgment of the committee that $6,000 would not be too much for an office of this character, for there is scarcely any office connected with the Government requiring harder work. Some of the officers who were connected with this work in the last census broke down. The chief clerk, Mr. Seaton, became insane in doing work upon the last census; for this business does not merely involve taking the census and tabulating the results, it runs forward into apportionment and all sorts of calculations ramifying therefrom.

Mr. DOCKERY. It should be remembered, also, that this is a temporary service.

Mr. COX. It is. I do not object, however, to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. FULLER] moving an amendment to reduce this salary. I would like to test the sense of the House upon it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Allow me to suggest, also, to the gentleman that this is a temporary service for which this gentleman has to abandon his present business.

Mr. COX. I would not object to the gentleman making a motion if he chooses to do so, as I should like to have the sense of Congress upon it. I believe the committee was unanimous, or practically so, in its recommendation.

Mr. FULLER. Do we not take a vote upon the committee amendment? If necessary, however, I move to amend that amendment by reducing the salary to $5,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman that a vote will be taken upon the committee amendment to strike out five thousand and insert six thousand. If that amendment is rejected, the gentleman accomplishes his purpose.

Mr. SENEY. I would like, before the question is taken, to ask the gentleman from New York to state how the salaries prescribed here in the third section compare in amount with those prescribed under the act of 1879?

Mr. COX. I have just read in section 3 of the former act what the salaries were. I have not made a computation in the aggregate, but there is not much increase over the former salaries. There is a proportionate increase of the force by reason of the increased work.

Mr. SENEY. About what is the rate of increase?

Mr. COX. It is about equal to the increase in population.

Mr. SENEY. I mean the rate per cent.

Mr. COX. Not exceeding 10 or 15 per cent. at the most.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, another matter occurs to me in this connection, and in order to be formal I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of stating it.

I would inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] what part of this bill will indicate to the Secretary of the Interior when these parties are to be employed?

I do not see anything in the third section in regard to it except the creation of these offices and the authority to employ clerks at given salaries. Where is the limit upon the Secretary in this respect as to the date of the appointment?

Mr. COX. The great body—the great army of officers—will not be employed until 1890; but the bureau will call into its service according as the emergency may arise such clerks as they may need, at which time their compensation will begin.

Mr. CHIPMAN. When does the bureau begin?

Mr. COX. On the passage of the law.

Mr. ROGERS. But when are these appointments to be made?

Mr. COX. When the necessity for the service arises; not before.

Mr. ROGERS. Unless there is some subsequent provision which I have not been able to discover in the bill, I do not think this section is explicit enough on that point, and should be amended.

We all know that these bureaus are matters of growth. When first created they started out with a small beginning, and have gradually grown until they have become, in some instances, great Departments. We create here, of course, this bureau in accordance with the judgment of men who are more capable of passing upon the question than myself, or, perhaps, than the House, unless it be those who have given careful consideration to the subject—we establish, I say, a great bureau where we employ so many officials at such and such salaries attached to the offices, and there is no discretionary power, so far as I am able to see, fixed in the Secretary of the Interior. The appointments are authorized under the bill, but as to when they shall begin or whether he shall appoint them directly the bill is silent.

It occurs to me, therefore, that there should be some provision leaving it discretionary with the Secretary of the Interior, and not compel him by a public law to create a great bureau to remain some time at least with a large force of officers in it with nothing to do, and at the same time to be drawing large salaries from the Government.

Mr. COX. Of course we will have to trust something to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. The language of the bill is based upon that of the old law, and of course we do not presume that the Secretary will appoint this force until the emergency comes. They do not go to work at the beginning. There is a large amount of preparatory work to be done before these clerks will be employed, or the great bulk of them.

I will say to my friend, further, that in former bills on this subject, and especially the bill providing for the Tenth Census, no such provision limiting the matter in the manner suggested was enacted.

Mr. ROGERS. I know that the gentleman from New York is more familiar with this subject than any other member, and I would like to ask him if there were any complaints of abuses under the former act?

Mr. COX. None whatever. The law was well executed by the Secretary of the Interior and by General Walker. I do not think I would restrict the Secretary of the Interior in the respect the gentleman suggests. These clerks are only employed, as under the last census bill, when needed.

Mr. ROGERS. I was going to suggest to my friend from New York that it might be well—it would certainly do no harm—to incorporate in this section that for the purpose of taking the Eleventh Census of the United States the Secretary of the Interior may, as the exigency requires, make these appointments.

Mr. COX. I have no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. I will offer that as an amendment, using the words "as the necessities of the service may require."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the committee amendments will be first in order.

Mr. ROGERS. I will commit my amendment to writing, then, while they are being acted upon.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether the object of the bill is to create a permanent bureau?

Mr. COX. Not at all.

Mr. PERKINS. Is that not the effect of the language of the second section?

Mr. COX. No. This is a copy in that respect of the law of 1879; and we were compelled by act of Congress to abolish the bureau after a time, for it had gone along owing to the large number of publications that were to be gotten out that dragged their slow length along through many years.

Mr. PERKINS. Is there any limit in the bill in that particular?

Mr. COX. We can not limit it, because we do not know exactly when all these various results will be tabulated and put in proper shape. It would be unusual, and I think it would be an embarrassment to the service, to make the amendment which the gentleman suggests.

Mr. PERKINS. I am not suggesting an amendment to put a limit in the bill, but I thought the phraseology in the second section was such as to create a permanent bureau.

Mr. COX. I wish we could do that. It would be wiser to have all our statistical bureaus coalesced into one. They do that in England, they do it in France, but we have not come to that point yet. The moment the census officials get through their work it is turned over to a clerk in the Interior Department, where it is laid away and cared for until the next decennial period comes around.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments except the one making a change in the salary?

Mr. FULLER. Only on that.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to what I think is a needed amendment. In line 18 the salaries of the messengers and watchmen are grouped in with the messenger boys at $400 per annum. I think it would be better to strike out, in lines 19 and 20, the words "messenger boys at salaries of four hundred dollars each per annum," and to insert the same words in line 21, after the words "per annum," where they properly come in.

Mr. COX. There is no objection to that.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Then I move that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 19 and 20, after the word "messengers," the words "and messenger boys at salaries of four hundred dollars each per annum," and insert the same words in line 21, after the words "per annum."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINSON. I wish to ask a question of the gentleman from New York in charge of this bill. I observe that there are ten chiefs of divisions provided for in this bill, whilst in the act of 1879 there were no chiefs of divisions. There are also ten clerks of class 4 provided for here, whilst in the act of 1879 but six clerks of that class were provided for. There are twenty clerks of class 3 provided for in this bill, whilst in the act of 1879 there were but ten. This bill provides, also, for thirty clerks of class 2, whilst in the act of 1879 there were but fifteen clerks of that class provided for. What I wish to ask the gentleman is whether this increase in the number of clerks is necessary.

Mr. COX. Absolutely necessary. In the work of the former census the clerks worked all day and sometimes half the night, and also on Sundays. They were driven all the time in order to get up the statistics for our apportionment, and no body of men ever worked more faithfully. They were mere temporary clerks, as has been already stated, and this increase is considered indispensable by those who are experts in the matter.

Mr. ATKINSON. I observe, also, that the increase is in the more expensive class of clerks, but perhaps that also is necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If no separate vote be demanded on the amendments, the Chair will put the question on them in gross, except the one as to the change of salary. The Clerk will report that amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, strike out "five" and insert "six."

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there ought to be a separate vote upon each proposition to increase the number of employés.

The SPEAKER pro tempore put the question, and was in doubt as to the result.

A division was called for.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 9.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COX. I will say in reference to the question asked me by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] that the chiefs of divisions in former censuses were chosen from experts and paid out of another fund. They were compelled to have experts at that time, as I recall. That will account for the apparent discrepancy between the act of 1879 and the present act.

Mr. ATKINSON. I was not familiar with that fact. All the information I had on the subject I gathered from the text of the act of 1879.

The Clerk reported the next amendment, as follows:

In section 3, line 7, it is proposed to strike out the word "and" after the word "stenographers," and to add, at the beginning of line 8, the words "and one disbursing clerk."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the next amendment, as follows:

After the word "taken," in line 15, add:

"And the Secretary of the Interior may also appoint one captain of the watch at a salary of $840 per annum, two messengers and such number of watchmen and assistant messengers and messenger boys at salaries of $400 each per annum, laborers and skilled laborers at $600 each per annum, and charwomen at salaries of $240 each per annum, as may be found necessary to carry out the provisions of this act."

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by providing salaries of $400 each per annum for the charwomen, instead of $240.

The Clerk reported the amendment, as follows:

It is proposed to strike out "two hundred and forty," in line 22 of the section, and insert "four hundred."

Mr. PERKINS. Before voting on that amendment I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana or of some other gentleman present, what salaries are paid to the charwomen in the other Departments.

Mr. HOLMAN. Two hundred and forty dollars.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Two hundred and forty dollars everywhere.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I do not care for that information. My impression was they were paid the amount provided in this bill. Nevertheless that is no reason why the salaries of these women should be fixed according to what charwomen are paid in other Departments. The salary is too low. I for one believe the rates should be increased. I think it is discreditable to this Congress to attempt to employ women at the rate of $240 per year. Congress ought to set the example to our people of being liberal, especially with the poor. I voted to increase the salary of the chief to $6,000 per annum.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does the gentleman from Indiana employ any female help in his own house?

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I do.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What rate per week do you pay?

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. We pay the girl that we hire at our home $3 a week and board.

Mr. GROSVENOR. One hundred and fifty dollars a year.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Yes; and her board. Does the Department board the women? If the Department boards the women and pays them $240 a year I shall be satisfied. The girl that I hire gets her board and her bed. I say the poor are continually ruled against in Government employ. I see that plainly in the case of laborers employed in the Departments. I have no objection to paying large salaries to the heads of Departments. I do not begrudge them their salaries, and have never voted against them. I voted in favor of paying the chief of this bureau $6,000. I think it is due to this House that we agree to the trifling addition I propose in the compensation of these poor women, who are more in need of money than the heads of the Departments.

The amendment was rejected.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the next amendment, as follows:

In line 17, after the word "clerks" where it first occurs, add the words "and employés."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the next amendment proposed by the committee, as follows:

In line 19, after the word "experts," add the following:

The disbursing clerk herein provided for shall, before entering upon his duties, give bond to the Treasurer of the United States in the sum of $50,000, which bond shall be conditioned that the said officer shall render a true and faithful account to the Treasurer, quarter-yearly, of all moneys and properties which shall be by him received by virtue of his office, with sureties to be approved by the Solicitor of the Treasury. Such bond shall be filed in the office of the First Comptroller of the Treasury, to be by him put in suit upon any breach of the conditions thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk reported the amendment, as follows:

After the word "may," in line 5, insert "from time to time as the necessity therefor arises."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior shall, on or before the 1st day of March, 1890, on the recommendation of the Superintendent of Census, designate the number, whether one or more, of supervisors of census, to be appointed within each State or Territory, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The total number of such supervisors shall not exceed one hundred and seventy-five. Each supervisor shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation: "I, ——— ———, supervisor, do solemnly swear or affirm that I will support the Constitution of the United States, and perform and discharge the duties of the supervisor of census according to law, honestly and correctly, to the best of my ability;" which oath shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior.

The committee recommend the following amendments:

In section 4, line 5, strike out the word "or" and insert the word "and," and after the word "Territory," in the same line, add the words "and the District of Columbia."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HOVEY. I offer the following amendment, in line 12, section 4.

The Clerk reported the amendment, as follows:

In line 12, section 4, include in brackets the words "or affirm."

Mr. COX. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After section 4 add the following:

"And any supervisor may at the discretion of the Superintendent be detailed for service in any other State."

Mr. COX. I do not see the object of that.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Those who are familiar with some charges and counter charges that were attendant upon the taking of the last census will see the object.

Mr. COX. I beg to say to the gentleman that I never heard of any complaints about the taking of the last census except in two places, one in Missouri and the other in South Carolina. General Walker, the Superintendent of the Census, and the gentleman then at the head of the Interior Department, a Republican, had the census retaken in those places under the supervision of the very men who had made the complaints, and the retaking showed the normal increase between the first and the second taking. I do not think the complaints were well founded, and although they had some little run in the newspapers, I believe no man ever made any charge in the House that was not satisfactorily answered.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What is the objection of the gentleman from New York to an amendment like this?

Mr. COX. Well, it is rather incongruous to have men designated to go from one State to another.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I suppose it would not be done except in a case where there was some suspicion of wrongdoing of some kind.

Mr. COX. It would introduce confusion into the system and destroy its unity.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very large interests hinge upon this question.

Mr. COX. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] that there was no trouble about this subject in the taking of the last census. This provision of the bill was drawn by the late General Garfield very carefully for the bill for the Ninth Census, and I copied it in my bill for the taking of the Tenth Census. Many of the features of this bill, in fact the main features of it, were drawn by General Garfield after most careful study, and experience has since demonstrated the value of his study of the subject.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. This amendment does not propose that the discretion shall be exercised unless an emergency calling for the exercise of it arises.

Mr. COX. Well, you do not want to provide for every imaginable emergency in a bill of this kind.

Mr. KERR. Would not the superintendent have this discretion without the amendment?

A MEMBER. No.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have offered this amendment in order to relax to some extent the rule laid down in this section, which provides that these officers shall be appointed "within each State and Territory." My amendment simply allows the Superintendent of the Census, in his discretion, to detail some of these gentlemen for service elsewhere. Of course he would not exercise that discretion unless he thought it was necessary, and where it became necessary he should have the power to do it. As the bill stands it would be impossible for him to order a supervisor from Missouri into Illinois for example, or vice versa, and therefore it would be necessary for him if he desired to make such changes to come to Congress for additional legislation, or else to allow to pass what he believed to be defective work. The amendment leaves it all in the discretion of the Superintendent.

The amendment was rejected—ayes 12, noes 18.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. Each supervisor of census shall be charged with the performance, within his own district, of the following duties: To propose to the Superintendent of Census the division of his district into subdivisions most convenient for the purpose of enumeration; to designate to the Superintendent of Census suitable persons, and, with the consent of said Superintendent, to employ such persons as enumerators within his district, one for each subdivision, and resident therein, who shall be selected solely with reference to fitness, and without reference to their political party affiliations, according to the division approved by the Superintendent of Census; but in case it shall occur in any enumeration district that no person qualified to perform and willing to undertake the duties of enumerator resides in that district, the supervisor may appoint any fit person, resident in the county, to be the enumerator of that district; to transmit to enumerators the printed forms and schedules issued from the Census Office, in quantities suited to the requirements of each subdivision; to communicate to enumerators the necessary instructions and directions relating to their duties, and to the methods of conducting the census, and to advise with and counsel enumerators in person and by letter, as freely and fully as may be required to secure the purposes of this act; and under the direction of the Superintendent of Census, and to facilitate the taking of the census with as little delay as possible, he may cause to be distributed by the enumerators, prior to the taking of the enumeration, schedules to be filled up by householders and others; to provide for the early and safe transmission to his office of the returns of enumerators, embracing all the schedules filled by them in the course of enumeration, and for the due receipt and custody of such returns pending their transmission to the Census Office; to examine and scrutinize the returns of enumerators, in order to ascertain whether the work has been performed in all respects in compliance with the provisions of law, and whether any town or village or integral portion of the district has been omitted from enumeration; to forward to the Superintendent of Census the completed returns of his district in such time and manner as shall be prescribed by the said Superintendent, and in the event of discrepancies or deficiencies appearing in the returns from his district, to use all diligence in causing the same to be corrected or supplied; to make up and forward to the Superintendent of Census the accounts required for ascertaining the amount of compensation due under the provisions of this act to each enumerator of his district.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Insert after the word "census," in line 11, the following:

"Provided, That in the appointment of enumerators preference shall in all cases be given to properly qualified, honorably discharged soldiers or sailors of the United States Army or Navy residing in the respective districts."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER].

Mr. ROGERS. Let it be reported again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. COX. Let it go. I have no objection to it as long as the matter is left discretionary and the soldier is required to be fit for the purpose. But the soldiers are getting old now and we want young enumerators.

Mr. CONGER. The work comes at a pleasant time of year.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no objection to it.

Mr. ROGERS. The only point I see against it is one which somebody has whispered in my ear, that there may be some districts where properly qualified soldiers can not be found.

Mr. ATKINSON. The matter is discretionary. The amendment only provides that "preference shall be given."

Mr. MATSON. It seems to me that the language of the amendment just acted on ought to be a little different. In its present form it appears to provide for the appointment of only such soldiers as have been in the regular Army. I presume the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] intended to provide more especially for those who have been soldiers in the volunteer service.

Mr. CONGER. I certainly did, and I supposed the language of the amendment would accomplish that object.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the amendment be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment of Mr. CONGER.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That is all right.

Mr. CONGER. If there is any question about the construction of this amendment, I ask unanimous consent to insert the words "either in the regular or volunteer service."

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest that the amendment should read in this form:

Provided, That in the appointment of enumerators preference shall in all cases be given to properly qualified persons who have served in the military or naval service of the United States.

Mr. ATKINSON. During the war of the rebellion.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], though I think the amendment in its original form includes every one that will be covered by the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. COX. There is no objection to that amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is necessary that the amendment be acted on by the House. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri as taken down by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That in the appointment of enumerators preference shall in all cases be given to properly qualified persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service of the United States residing in the respective districts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] has been adopted in the form originally offered this substitute can not be entertained except by unanimous consent or by a reconsideration of the vote already taken. Is there objection to the entertainment of this amendment in lieu of that already offered by the gentleman from Iowa? The Chair hears none.

The amendment of Mr. DOCKERY was adopted.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 9 and 10 of section 5 strike out the words "and without reference to their political party affiliations," and insert "and from each of the political parties in proportion to the number of votes cast for each party at the last preceding election for member of Congress in the Congressional district within which appointed, and."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer this amendment, knowing that the language in this bill is the language of the law of 1879, but remembering also the fact that in the execution of that law the enumerators, at least in my section of the country, were appointed equally from the two political parties then existing.

My amendment provides a broader method of appointment. It provides that these enumerators shall be appointed according to the number of votes cast by each political party at the preceding Congressional election. Enumerators will thus be secured not only from the two great political parties, but also from parties casting a smaller number of votes. This will serve to bring these enumerators as close to the people as any arrangement which could be made, and will make them as nearly as possible in harmony with the sentiments of the people. I think the amendment should be adopted, as thereby we shall secure a proper distribution of these enumerators and possibly save our friends on the other side from the consequences of a change of administration on the 4th of March next.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not like to delay the proceedings on this bill; but I can not myself see how this amendment will work. Take for illustration the State of Georgia: our side will not get any votes there, and therefore no enumerators.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Of course not; I understand that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Nor any supervisors or anything else.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This does not refer to supervisors.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would be willing to put this matter on the basis of the vote, if I could find out what the vote is; but where one side does not vote, I can not find out.

The amendment of Mr. BUCHANAN was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. Each supervisor of census shall, upon the completion of his duties to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, receive the sum of $125, and in addition thereto, in thickly-settled districts, $1 for each thousand or majority fraction of a thousand of the population enumerated in his district, and in sparsely-settled districts $1.40 for each thousand or majority fraction of a thousand of the population enumerated in such district; such sums to be in full compensation for all services rendered and expenses incurred by him, except that an allowance for clerk-hire may be made, at the discretion of the Superintendent of Census. The designation of the compensation per thousand, as provided in this section, shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior at least one month in advance of the date for the commencement of the enumeration.

SEC. 7. That all mail matter of whatever class, relative to the census and addressed to the Census Office, to the Superintendent of Census, his chief clerk, supervisors or enumerators, and indorsed "Official business Department of the Interior, Census Office," shall be transported free of postage; and if any person shall make use of any such indorsement to avoid the payment of postage on his private letter, package, or other matter in the mail, the person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and subject to a fine of $300, to be prosecuted in any court of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 8. No enumerator shall be deemed qualified to enter upon his duties until he has received from the supervisor of census of the district to which he belongs a commission, under his hand, authorizing him to perform the duties of an enumerator, and setting forth the boundaries of the subdivision within which such duties are to be performed by him. He shall, moreover, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation:

"I, ——— ———, an enumerator for taking the —— census of the United States, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will make a true and exact enumeration of all the inhabitants within the subdivision assigned to me, and will also faithfully collect all other statistics therein, as provided for in the act for taking the —— census, and in conformity with all lawful instructions which I may receive, and will make due and correct returns thereof as required by said act, and will not disclose any information contained in the schedules, lists, or statements obtained by me to any person or persons, except to my superior officers.

(Signed) ——— ———."

Which said oath or affirmation may be administered by any judge of a court of record, or any justice of the peace, or notary public empowered to administer oaths; and a copy thereof, duly authenticated, shall be forwarded to the supervisor of census before the date fixed herein for the commencement of the enumeration.

The amendment reported by the committee to section 8 was read, as follows:

In line 23 strike out "and a copy thereof" and insert "which oath."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to inquire what is the object of the obligation of secrecy which is imposed on the enumerators in the affidavit. The language is:

And will not disclose any information contained in schedules, lists, or statements obtained by me to any person or persons, except to my superior officer.

Mr. COX. The object is this, as any one can understand on a moment's reflection from the nature of the census. People come to the enumerators and ask for all sorts of information of the wealth or poverty, as it may be, of their neighbors. We do not propose to have any such troublesome thing in order to accommodate any one seeking that sort of information and making inquiries of the enumerators. It prevents the taking of the census if a man is at the mercy of his neighbors, who may gossip about his prosperity or otherwise.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I can say from my own personal observation that it is impossible fully to take the census without some such requirement as this.

Mr. COX. It has always been the case in every census which has been taken, from the enumeration of the people of Israel, when they feared to be taxed or conscripted, down to the present time.

Mr. BUCHANAN. They do not want the facts about their affairs to be published in the newspapers.

Mr. COX. They are often reluctant to give information to the enumerators when people are inquiring as to their standing in the community from idle curiosity or otherwise.

There being no amendment offered to the section, the Clerk read the next section (9), as follows:

SEC. 9. It shall be the duty of each enumerator, after being qualified in the manner aforesaid, to visit personally each dwelling-house in his subdivision, and each family therein, and each individual living out of a family in any place of abode, and by inquiry made of the head of such family, or of the member thereof deemed most credible and worthy of trust, or of such individual living out of a family, to obtain each and every item of information and all the particulars required by this act, as of date June 1, 1889. And in case no person shall be found at the usual place of abode of such family or individual living out of a family competent to answer the inquiries made in compliance with the requirements of this act, then it shall be lawful for the enumerator to obtain the required information, as nearly as may be practicable, from the family or families, or person or persons, living nearest to such place of abode. The Superintendent of Census may employ special agents or other means to make an enumeration of all Indians living within the jurisdiction of the United States, with such information as to their condition as may be obtainable, classifying them as to Indians taxed and Indians not taxed.

The committee amendment was, in line 10, to strike out "eighty" and insert "ninety;" so it will read, "1890."

The amendment was agreed to.

Section 10 was read, as follows:

SEC. 10. And it shall be further the duty of each enumerator to forward the original schedules, duly certified, to the supervisor of census of his district, as his returns under the provisions of this act.

There being no amendment offered to the section, the Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 11. The compensation of enumerators shall be ascertained and fixed as follows: In subdivisions where the Superintendent of Census shall deem such allowance sufficient an allowance not exceeding 2 cents for each living inhabitant, 2 cents for each death reported, 15 cents for each farm, and 20 cents for each establishment of productive industry enumerated and returned, may be given in full compensation for all services: Provided, That the subdivisions to which the above rate of compensation shall apply must be designated by the Superintendent of Census at least one month in advance of the enumeration. For all other subdivisions rates of compensation shall be fixed in advance of the enumeration by the Superintendent of Census, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, according to the difficulty of enumeration, having reference to the nature of the region to be canvassed and the density or sparseness of settlement, or other considerations pertinent thereto; but the compensation allowed to any enumerator in any such district shall not be less than $3 nor more than $6 per day of ten hours' actual field-work each, when a per diem compensation shall be established by the Secretary of the Interior, nor more than 3 cents for each living inhabitant, 20 cents for each farm, and 30 cents for each establishment of productive industry enumerated and returned, when a per capita compensation shall be deemed advisable by the Secretary of the Interior. No claim for mileage or traveling expenses shall be allowed any enumerator in either class of subdivisions, except in extreme cases, and then only when authority has been previously granted by the Superintendent of Census. The Superintendent of Census shall prescribe uniform methods and suitable forms for keeping accounts of the number of people enumerated or of time occupied in field-work, for the purpose of ascertaining the amounts due to enumerators, severally, under the provisions of this act.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] is the compensation provided here the same as that which was provided in the old law?

Mr. COX. It is not. It is a little larger. It is provided here where the Superintendent of Census shall deem such allowance sufficient an allowance not exceeding 2 cents for each living inhabitant, 2 cents for each death reported, 15 cents for each farm, and 20 cents for each establishment of productive industry enumerated and returned may be given in full compensation for all services.

Under the act of 1799 10 cents was the allowance for each farm. It is 15 cents here.

Mr. PERKINS. Is it a fact that the compensation under the old law is not a fair compensation?

Mr. COX. No, it is not. They came back to Congress and asked for relief. Members of Congress had many petitions from them. We find, too, that we want a little better class of men for enumerators to take account of farms and establishments of productive industry. It is proposed to give them for that purpose a larger compensation than is allowed under the old law of 1799. Those who have watched the operation of the old law acknowledge this to be necessary.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ought not to raise any objection to this increase, as I ought to have been present when this matter was being considered in the committee. I live in a country of about the average population, having a number of manufacturing establishments. I do not remember to have heard complaint that a good class of men could not be obtained for the compensation provided in the act of 1799. This is a material increase, and although I shall not make an amendment, I would prefer to have the compensation remain as it is provided in the old law, because the cost of living is less now than it was when former censuses were taken.

Mr. GROSVENOR. A great many men who were offered the position of enumerator declined to take it on account of the smallness of the compensation, and a great many who did take it found the compensation inadequate and withdrew. I was not in Congress, and do not know of the application for increased compensation.

The census is taken on the 1st of June, and in farming districts at that time the farmers are in the height of their work. It is provided the enumerator must be a resident of his district. Take agricultural districts and you will scarcely find a man competent to do the work successfully who would be willing to take less compensation than that which is provided in this bill.

Mr. COX. One idea I suggest to the gentlemen of the House is this: In order to take the value of farms or establishments of industry the enumerator has to go again and again. After he leaves his schedule he has to go after it. He has to assist the farmer or small manufacturer to make his return.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Is the compensation provided on the top of page 10 to apply to enumerators of certain districts?

Mr. COX. It is. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not insist on changing this well-considered compensation, as it really is the most difficult part of the census.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Census why they make a difference between the enumeration of the farms and the enumeration of the establishments of productive industry, the one being placed at 15 cents each and the other at 20 cents each?

Mr. COX. There is more trouble in making an enumeration of the one than of the other, as the gentleman from Mississippi will surmise. It requires more technical knowledge to make an enumeration of manufacturing establishments than of farms.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi. I think there should be the same compensation for each; and I move to amend by placing them on the same footing; that is, to strike out, in the sixth line, the word "twenty" and insert "fifteen."

Mr. COX. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. The discrimination should be made between manufacturing establishments and farms, in this respect.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read section 12, as follows:

SEC. 12. That the subdivision assigned to any enumerator shall not exceed 4,000 inhabitants, according to the census of 1880: Provided, That in the Territories and in the States admitted into the Union since 1880, the supervisor of census may appoint additional enumerators in cases where, in his judgment, the census can not be properly taken in thirty days by reason of the increase of population or the physical features of the said district. The boundaries of all subdivisions shall be clearly described by civil divisions, rivers, roads, public surveys, or other easily distinguished lines.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

In section 12, line 2, after the word "inhabitants" add the words "as near as may be."

In the same section strike out the paragraph commencing with the word "Provided," in line 3, and ending with the words "said District," in line 9, and change the colon after the word "eighty," in line 3, to a period.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether they mean by this section to make these districts or subdivisions to include 4,000 inhabitants under the act of 1880?

Mr. COX. That is the object of the committee.

Mr. CONGER. The reason I ask is because there are many places, in the West especially, where towns of four, five, six, and ten thousand inhabitants exist now where perhaps there were not fifty people living in 1880. It will make some of the divisions exceedingly large.

Mr. ROGERS. If my friend will pardon me, I will state that by the census of 1880 the town in which I live contained but 3,300 people. It is estimated now at 17,000.

Mr. COX. This provides that they shall not exceed 4,000, as near as may be.

Mr. CONGER. Yes; but look at the remainder of the paragraph: "According to the census of 1880." Now, how would that operate in these places that I have referred to?

Mr. COX. They will be divided into a number of districts.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Look at Dakota.

Mr. COX. That will be divided.

Mr. CONGER. Can they divide it under that bill?

Mr. COX. Certainly; it is to be divided into districts of 4,000 inhabitants as near as possible.

Mr. CONGER. But as near as may be according to the census of 1880; that would have to be the basis.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Why not strike out "according to the census of 1880?"

I make that as a motion.

Mr. COX. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The committee amendments are first in order.

The amendments of the committee were adopted.

The amendment of Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois, was also adopted.

The Clerk read section 13, as follows:

SEC. 13. That any supervisor or enumerator, who, having taken and subscribed the oath required by this act, shall, without justifiable cause, neglect or refuse to perform the duties enjoined on him by this act, or shall, without the authority of the superintendent, communicate to any person not authorized to receive the same, any information gained by him in the performance of his duties, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall forfeit a sum not exceeding $500; or, if he shall willfully and knowingly swear or affirm falsely, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and, on conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned not exceeding three years, or by fine not exceeding $800; or if he shall willfully and knowingly make false certificates or fictitious returns, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction of either of the last-named offenses, he shall forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding $5,000 and be imprisoned not exceeding two years.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move, in line 17 of this section, to strike out "and" and insert "or."

It will be noticed the punishments provided for here are both by fine and imprisonment. The previous punishment was fine or imprisonment both; and my own experience is such as to teach me that convictions are far more certain by juries when the punishments are in the discretion of the court in the alternative. I ask that this be changed by striking out "and" and inserting "or," and perhaps it should be followed in the eighteenth line by adding the words "or both."

Mr. COX. I have no objection to that. But we followed the language of 1879.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the present law had better be adhered to.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am sorry the chairman of the committee has given his assent to this, if he has done so. I think that in the crimes of perjury and forgery there is no State in this Union that would permit any man to escape with a slight fine, and possibly not pay a cent of the fine. They are two of the worst crimes known to the category of crimes against property; and one of them is the crime of the false certificate to the aggregate of the enumeration which affects the representation in Congress.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I drew my amendment hastily as the Clerk was reading, under the impression that this referred to the punishment for forgery. I ask to withdraw it, as I see it was not this section to which I wanted to apply it.

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, this section provides for a penalty where supervisors or enumerators shall, "without justifiable cause," refuse to perform the duties enjoined by this act. But suppose a supervisor or enumerator, with justifiable cause, should fail to perform the duties of the office, and therefore the duties of the office would not be performed, what arrangement or provision is there to provide for such an emergency?

Mr. COX. There is a provision in a subsequent section for that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Where?

Mr. ROGERS. Permit me a moment. I wish to submit a remark that this language "without justifiable cause" is objectionable here, and I move that it be stricken out. There is no court on earth that would give any legal sanction to such words. I do not recollect to have seen any legal sanction ever given to them by any court. Who is to determine what justifiable cause is? The words in themselves do not mean anything, and they ought to be striken out.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will ask my friend if he will not in the same motion provide for putting in some words that ought to go there; "willfully," "maliciously," or some other word that imports a crime.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, they ought to be inserted. I wish first to move to strike out these words because they have no legal signification. Suppose the court tells the jury it must acquit a man if he has shown justifiable cause. How is the court to determine what is justifiable cause? There is no legal signification to any such term. It is wholly unknown to the practice of the law, so far as I am advised.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. In case of a trial would not that matter be left to the jury?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; but who ever heard of the question being submitted to a jury as to what was justifiable cause? It is usual to tell what the murder, the assault, or the crime is.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Justifiable cause is a matter a jury is called upon to decide almost constantly.

Mr. ROGERS. Whenever that is the case the law defines what the crime is. Suppose a man is indicted for homicide and sets up justification. The court defines what is justifiable homicide. But what is justifiable cause here? Nobody can tell.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Although it may not be the case in your State, in our State juries find the presence or absence of justifiable cause.

Mr. ROGERS. They find the facts, but the court tells what the law is.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. This comes under the class denominated mixed questions of law and fact, which are always submitted to the jury.

Mr. ROGERS. Suppose one man curses another and that other shoots him and kills him. Would you submit to the jury the question whether he was justified in killing the man who cursed him? In our country that would not be done.

Mr. KERR. I suggest that the gentleman move to strike out the words "without justifiable cause" and insert "willfully."

Mr. ROGERS. That is exactly what I propose to do. I propose to strike out the words "without justifiable cause" and insert the words "willfully neglect or refuse."

Mr. SAWYER. As I understand it, the point sought to be guarded against is this: That a man having taken the oath shall go on and perform the duties. Suppose that man is taken sick and can not perform the duties. It is a willful act on his part not to do so. It is an intentional act on his part, but he has justifiable cause for failing to perform his duties. I do not see any difficulty about leaving the matter to the court, or to the jury under the direction of the court, to decide what in a given case is justifiable cause. In my State it is very common to submit such matters to the courts.

Mr. ROGERS. My friend from New York is in error in his definition of "willful." If a man was taken sick and neglected his duties, the neglect on his part would not be willful.

Mr. SAWYER. The failure is an intentional act on his part.

Mr. ROGERS. It would not be a willful act, but an act over which he would have no control.

Mr. ATKINSON. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that this is precisely the same language that was used in the act of 1879, "without justifiable cause." It appears that that act operated satisfactorily. I do not see that there is any marked difference between the expressions "willfully" and "without justifiable cause." It seems to me that in practice the words are synonyms.

I know full well that "willfully" is the expression generally used in criminal codes, but I believe that this language is synonymous with it, and I see no reason why an amendment should be made when practically it has no value.

The question was taken on the amendment, and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BACON. I call for a division.

The House divided; and they were—ayes 7, noes 16.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee, and I do it modestly and respectfully, to what seems to me to be a defect in this bill which perhaps requires amendment. The gentleman has said that in a subsequent section of the bill the difficulty pointed out by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] has been met. It seems to me, however, that the trouble lies right here. The Superintendent of the Census has general power; he is not limited geographically, but all the other officers provided for here, as far as I am able to discover, have no jurisdiction outside of certain geographical limits. The supervisor is limited to his district; he has no power outside of it; and at every point in the bill the words are carefully inserted "within the district." The same is true as to the enumerator. He is not only limited to taking the enumeration within his district, but he must live there, except that in one place in the bill it is provided (and this strengthens the view I have taken) that if no suitable person can be found within the district another enumerator may be appointed to go into that particular district and take the census there.

Mr. COX. Provided he resides in the county.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; he must reside in the county. Now, the power to appoint a person living outside is limited to a certain occasion, and that occasion is expressed in this language: "in case it shall be found in any enumeration district that no person qualified to perform and willing to undertake the duties of enumerator resides in that district." If there is a person inside of the district who is qualified and willing to undertake the duty, then there is no power to appoint an enumerator outside of the district. Now, take the case suggested by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS], where the enumerator is qualified and is willing to undertake the duty, but does not perform it, either neglects or fails to perform it. It is true there is a provision in the bill for his removal and the appointment of somebody else, but there are extreme cases which might not be covered by that provision, and it seems to me that a statute of so great importance as this ought to contain a provision that would be an effectual barrier against any accident or any design on the part of anybody defeating the operation of the law.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will turn to section 22 he will see this provision:

That the Superintendent of Census, with the consent of the President, may at any time remove any supervisor of census and fill any vacancy thereby caused or otherwise occurring; and the supervisor of census may, with the consent of the Superintendent of Census, remove any enumerator in his district and fill the vacancy thereby caused or otherwise occurring.

That provides for every possible contingency. There was no trouble about this in the taking of the last census. No vacancy occurred that was not properly and promptly filled under the law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But if the gentleman will bear with me, that provision does not meet the point which I make. It says that—the Superintendent of the Census, with the consent of the President, may at any time remove any supervisor of census and fill any vacancy thereby caused or otherwise occurring; and the supervisor of census may, with the consent of the Superintendent of Census, remove any enumerator in his district and fill the vacancy thereby caused or otherwise occurring.

But if the supervisor removes an enumerator he must appoint another man in the district, and if a superintendent removes a supervisor he must appoint another one in the district. My point is that somewhere in the bill power ought to be lodged in the Superintendent of the Census, in case any supervisor and his successor and the enumerator refuse to do their duty, to send somebody to take the census in that district. I only submit this as a suggestion. I am not going to offer an amendment, and if the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] is of the opinion that the bill is sufficiently guarded on this point I have nothing further to say.

Mr. COX. Judging by the operation of the former statute, it was sufficiently guarded. In every case of a vacancy occurring from any cause there was power to fill it promptly, and no trouble occurred.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. That if any person shall receive or secure to himself any fee, reward, or compensation as a consideration for the employment of any person as enumerator or clerk, or shall in any way receive or secure to himself any part of the compensation provided in this act for the services of any enumerator or clerk, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $3,000, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. ATKINSON. I move to amend by striking out, in lines 7 and 8 of section 14, the words "less than $500 nor;" so as to read, "shall be fined not more than $3,000 in the discretion of the court."

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] is in the right line, but I think the language should read, "shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $3,000," etc.

Mr. ATKINSON. My amendment amounts to precisely the same thing. "Not more than" and "not exceeding" are synonymous phrases.

The amendment of Mr. ATKINSON was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] what is to be done where the man can not or does not pay the fine? I think the alternative of imprisonment in the discretion of the court should be provided.

Mr. WHEELER. Have not all the States a general law regulating matters of this kind?

Mr. BUCHANAN. We are not legislating for the States, but for the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If no amendment is offered, the Clerk will report the next section.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will ask to recur to this section hereafter for the purpose of amending it.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. That each and every person more than twenty years of age, belonging to any family residing in any enumeration district, and in case of the absence of the heads and other members of any such family, then an agent of such family, shall be, and each of them hereby is, required, if thereto requested by the superintendent, supervisor, or enumerator, to render a true account, to the best of his or her knowledge, of every person belonging to such family, in the various particulars required by law, and whoever shall willfully fail or refuse shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding $100. And every president, treasurer, secretary, general agent, or managing director of every corporation from which answers to any of the schedules provided for by this act are herein required, who shall, if thereto requested by the superintendent, supervisor, or enumerator, willfully neglect or refuse to give true and complete answers to any inquiries authorized by this act, such officer or agent shall forfeit and pay a sum not less than $500 nor more than $10,000, to be recovered in an action of debt in any court of competent jurisdiction, in the name and to the use of the United States, and in addition thereto shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned for a period not exceeding one year.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

After the word "agent," in line 13, strike out the word "or;" and after "director," in the same line, insert "or other general officer."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I now desire to offer an amendment to section 14.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment will be entertained.

Mr. COX. I wish the gentleman would defer that until we get through the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It will take only a moment.

Mr. COX. Very well.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move to amend by inserting, in line 9 of section 14, after the word "dollars," the words "or be imprisoned not more than one year, or both."

Mr. COX. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. ROGERS. I desire to offer an amendment to the pending section—section 15. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "act," in line 18, the words "or willfully give false information." The object of this amendment is to punish any one of the officers of these corporations who may willfully give false information to the supervisor or enumerator.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is already provided for. There is provision for the punishment of any one who shall "willfully neglect or refuse to give true and complete answers." The giving of a false answer is the neglect to give a true answer.

Mr. COX. I think the gentleman from Arkansas will find that the purpose of his amendment is accomplished by the language already embraced in the section.

Mr. ROGERS. I think the present language of the section is not broad enough. It reads:

Who shall, if thereto requested by the superintendent, supervisor, or enumerator, willfully neglect or refuse to give true and complete answers.

Now, a person may neglect to give a true answer, and that is punishable by the language of the bill. He may refuse to do so; that is also punishable by the language of the bill. But a person may give other information which is false. I think that ought to be punishable.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If a person gives false information he "neglects or refuses" to give true information.

Mr. PETERS. If he gives false information he can not give "true and complete answers."

Mr. ROGERS. The answers which he gives may be true; but he may give other information that is false.

The amendment of Mr. ROGERS was agreed to, there being—aye 12, noes 11.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the closing portion of section 15 is the only provision in this bill embracing the anomaly of a forfeiture to be recovered in a civil action, and also a prosecution of the offense as a misdemeanor. It seems to me if it were provided that the agent or officer who refuses to give correct answers shall be subject to fine not exceeding $3,000 it would be at least as well as to have two forms of action, for as a general thing the two forms of action would not be resorted to. There would not be the enforcement of a fine and also a prosecution by indictment for a misdemeanor. I do not know whether the attention of the committee has been called to this matter or not.

Mr. COX. We have simply followed the provision of the previous law. There has never been any prosecution under it, and is not likely to be.

Mr. HOLMAN. Section 16, which we are next to consider, embraces a very anomalous provision that—

All fines and penalties imposed by this act may be enforced by indictment or appropriate action at law in any court of competent jurisdiction where such offenses shall have been committed or forfeitures incurred.

This language may have been intended to cover only the last clause of the preceding section, where a civil action is provided on the one hand and a penal prosecution on the other; but in fact this provision of section 16 is applicable in terms to all the other sections of this act which impose a fine or enforce a penalty.

Mr. COX. Section 16 provides the jurisdiction.

Mr. CHIPMAN. The language of section 16 is, "where such offenses shall have been committed or forfeitures incurred." It is not confined by any means to the offenses referred to in the preceding section.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is provided in section 16 "that all fines and penalties imposed by this act may be enforced by indictment or appropriate action at law in any court of competent jurisdiction where such offenses shall have been committed or forfeitures incurred." The fines and penalties imposed for a misdemeanor may be enforced by a civil action. It seems the provision as to civil suits should be stricken out, as it occurs nowhere else in the bill. Section 15 would not seem to be required.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Why put this in at all?

Mr. HOLMAN. It becomes necessary on account of the anomalous condition of a criminal action on the one hand and a civil action on the other. In line 19, I move to insert, "such officer or gentleman shall be guilty of misdemeanor and subject to a fine not exceeding $10,000," and then strike out after the word "dollars," to the end of the section, and section 16 will be unnecessary.

Mr. ATKINSON. The gentleman from Indiana proceeds on the idea or the theory that there is but a single penalty to be enforced.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; criminal.

Mr. ATKINSON. But in addition to that there is to be a fine to be enforced by civil action.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is forfeiture.

Mr. ATKINSON. Debt would be the appropriate action to enforce this penalty, but in addition to that, where a criminal offense has been committed it is provided the offender shall be imprisoned for a period not exceeding one year. So there are two penalties, one to be recovered under a civil action and the other by criminal prosecution. The section is right as it is, and section 16 is in harmony with it. I believe these two sections are copied from the act of 1799.

Mr. COX. They are.

Mr. ATKINSON. There is no reason growing out of that act which would lead to any change like that which is proposed. When a law has worked well is it not better to stand by it rather than to create a new law, the former one having been found efficient?

Mr. HOLMAN. I tried to express the idea which the gentleman has stated, that the last clause of section 16 contains a provision not found elsewhere in the law, and that is, it provides for a civil action on one side to enforce particular offenses and a criminal prosecution on the other.

Mr. COX. In section 13 the gentleman will find the same thing.

Mr. HOLMAN. The chairman of the committee prefers the language of the present law, which any one will see is not artistically drawn.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to ask a question in reference to this section. It provides that these penalties may be enforced in any court of competent jurisdiction. Does that mean a United States court?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. ROGERS. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if he would not consent to strike out, in this section, in line 19, the words "less than $500, nor more than" and insert the word "exceeding."

Mr. COX. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the next section.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before that I would like to suggest to the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], who calls my attention to the fact, that where a forfeiture to enforce any civil action to the amount of $500 would only be within the jurisdiction of the State courts, yet you would have the anomalous character of a statute where the civil feature to compel the forfeiture was to be placed in one tribunal, while the penalty was to be enforced in another.

Mr. ATKINSON. That would be the case in any State court, if you were there, as well as in the United States court. The criminal cases are tried in a court of quarter sessions and a court of oyer and terminer, while the civil causes are tried in the court of common pleas in all States where the common-law practice prevails. You would have the indictment here triable in a district court of the United States and would have the civil action triable in the circuit court of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. I presume not——

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. ATKINSON. They are the same action.

Mr. HOLMAN. I presume the gentleman is correct, because this, of course, would come under the provision of an act of Congress, and be in the nature of a forfeiture, and places the question of jurisdiction in the particular court suggested.

Mr. MORROW. By a recent decision of the United States circuit court for California the statute conferring upon the United States the right to sue has been recently declared subject to this limitation as to amount; so where the United States under the statute is authorized to pursue a defendant to recover, say, $500, under a recent statute of last year changing the jurisdiction of the circuit courts, it is now necessary for the United States to go into the State courts.

Therefore my suggestion to the gentleman from Indiana was, that as an objection to the form of the statute it had this further objection—you might so divide this one offense that you would be required to prosecute in the State courts for the penal sum to be recovered under the form of the civil debt, while the penal offense would be answerable in a United States court. Now, the gentleman from Indiana proposes an amendment which leaves the whole case in the United States courts, to be recovered under its criminal jurisdiction.

Mr. ROGERS. My attention had not been called to this before, and I was not aware of the decision of the court of California. But unquestionably the gentleman states what is the law; and in order to get into the Federal court less than the minimum now fixed by law you must confer special jurisdiction, or else when you go into the court with something less than the minimum amount you are met with a statute that says jurisdiction is not here, and you must go into some other court. You have thus under a statute of the United States to prosecute a man upon an offense under an indictment in the courts of the United States, and to prosecute him for the minimum amount under the State courts. It is doubtful to me whether you can carry your case there, and put the man under trial twice for the same offense.

Mr. MORROW. In this case the penalty to be inflicted is one that Congress designs to inflict. Hence the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana is correct, that it gives the United States court power to inflict the punishment designed to be inflicted by this section.

The Clerk read sections 16 and 17, as follows:

SEC. 16. That all fines and penalties imposed by this act may be enforced by indictment or appropriate action at law in any court of competent jurisdiction where such offenses shall have been committed or forfeitures incurred.

SEC. 17. That the schedules of inquiries at the Eleventh Census shall be the same as those contained in section No. 2206 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, of 1878, as amended by section 17 of the act entitled "An act to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1879, with such changes of the subject-matter, emendations, and modifications as may be approved by the Secretary of the Interior; it being the intent of this section to give to said Secretary full discretion over the schedules of such inquiries. The report which the Superintendent of Census (if directed by said Secretary) is required to obtain from railroad corporations, incorporated express companies, telegraph companies, and insurance companies, and from all corporations or establishments reporting products other than agricultural products, shall be of and for the fiscal year of such corporations or establishments having its termination nearest to the 1st of June, 1890; the Superintendent of Census shall collect and publish the statistics of the population, industries, and resources of the district of Alaska, with such fullness as he may deem expedient, and as he shall find practicable under the appropriations made, or to be made, for the expenses of the Eleventh Census.

The Clerk read the following amendment recommended by the committee:

In section 17, at the end of line 11, make the comma a semicolon, and add the following proviso:

"Provided, however, That said Superintendent, under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, cause to be taken in the same schedule of inquiry, according to such form as he may prescribe, the names of those who had served in the Army of the United States in the war of the rebellion, and who are survivors at the time of said inquiry, and surviving soldiers' widows.

Mr. ATKINSON. I have an amendment I wish to offer here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To the committee's amendment?

Mr. ATKINSON. Yes, sir.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "Army" in the proviso proposed by the committee the words "Navy or Marine Corps."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. ATKINSON. I offer a further amendment to the same provision.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, after the word "inquiry" in the same proviso, the words "together with period of service of each and the command or vessel in which such service was rendered."

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that amendment. It is almost impossible to include it under our schedule, it is so large now. I trust the gentleman will not insist. It may result in striking out all the gentleman wishes to accomplish, if you embrace more than can be accomplished.

I will say to my friend, from my observation and experience with this business and with these immense schedules that are made up at the Census Office and are carried around in the pockets of the enumerators, that it is almost impossible now to get correct reports on these matters; and if you cumber the census-taking you defeat its object. I think we have done very well in adding the section which provides for the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. But so far as the present amendment is concerned we might as well propose to name the various regiments, the different departments of the service, cavalry, artillery, infantry, etc., and have a schedule for the Army alone. We favor the amendment providing for giving the names of soldiers that survive and their widows, because there has been a call for it from various quarters, not only in this House, but outside; and the information thus gathered will be of great use. In one State, New Hampshire, they have already by State action taken a census including this feature.

I hope the gentleman will not insist on the amendment. If he does it will so encumber the schedule that we can not get men to do the work except at a largely increased expense, and then very bunglingly.

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly to find myself in antagonism with the chairman of the committee. I regard the inquiry which is proposed to be made by this amendment as of the greatest importance. I do not believe it will complicate or swell to an improper volume the papers of the census. At the present time we have the Commissioner of Pensions engaged in trying to obtain the names, residence, company, and regiment of all the surviving soldiers. He has established what is known as the record division in the Pension Office, that is intended exclusively for that purpose. The information obtained by the record division of the Pension Office is entirely for the purpose of facilitating the consideration of pension cases pending. If these enumerators will take the names of the soldiers together with the company and regiment in which they served we will then have a more accurate list than it is possible for the Commissioner of Pensions to obtain by any means in his power; and such a list would be of very great value. Besides that there are scientific reasons for taking a census in this way.

It will be of great interest to us and those who come after us to know the effect of military or naval service upon the longevity of those who were engaged in the Army or Navy during the war. For that reason I believe the period during which these men served should be taken. Besides this the country has been agitated by what is known as service-pension legislation, and the question always arises as to what such legislation will cost, and we never can know what it will cost until we have obtained the information that this amendment provides for securing through the medium of the Census Bureau. We must know how many soldiers and sailors are living, and how long they served during the war before we can tell what the cost of a service-pension bill will be.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore put the question on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] and was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. ATKINSON. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 5, noes 17.

Mr. ATKINSON. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. I hope my friend will not insist upon his point.

Mr. ATKINSON. No, sir; but I should like to make this arrangement, that we may have a vote in the House upon my amendment. If that is agreed to, I will at once withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. ROGERS. This is the House now.

Mr. ATKINSON. I refer to a quorum of the House.

Mr. COX. I hope my friend will not insist on breaking down the bill now.

Mr. ATKINSON. I will not do that.

Mr. COX. We can not get any other time in the House. We have done as well as we can.

Mr. ATKINSON. If the previous question is considered as ordered on this amendment, we can have a vote in the House.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will allow the proceedings to run along, I will endeavor, with due consideration, to see what can be done with his amendment when the bill goes to the Senate. From my present observation of the matter it is impossible for us to make this schedule without incurring an enormous additional expense.

Mr. ATKINSON. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to offer an amendment to come in after the word "widows," in line 14, as follows:

And also a separate schedule showing the names of such surviving soldiers as on the 1st day of June, 1890, are inmates of almshouses.

The reason I offer this amendment is because there has been considerable agitation of the question of pensioning the soldiers who are in the almshouses. I think the facts can be obtained with very little trouble.

There has been a very decided issue between those who are now in the legislative branch of the Government upon this precise question. Upon one hand it has been alleged that there is a large number of soldiers in the almshouses, and upon the other that there are very few, and it seems to me that this information can be had with but little difficulty.

Mr. COX. I will say to the gentleman that if he can only formulate his proposition in some way so as not to encumber this schedule with it there will be no objection. I think the desired information could be obtained by correspondence through the officers of the bureau with the officers of the various infirmaries and almshouses, and it will be much better to obtain it in that way than to encumber this schedule. Gentlemen must remember that we have more than sixty millions of people, and that we must have an army of 40,000 men to go around and make this enumeration. If the gentleman will put his proposition into such a shape that the experts to be employed in this business can also collect the information that he desires about the soldiers, I shall be pleased to have it provided for in a proper place in the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Let me suggest that most of this information could be very readily obtained from most of the States by correspondence conducted by these experts with the State authorities.

Mr. MATSON. I have no disposition to insist upon the particular manner in which it shall be done, but it seems to me that it is of great importance that this census should settle this question.

Mr. COX. Draw up your proviso and I will add it to the bill at the proper place.

Mr. MATSON. If the objection is that this schedule would be encumbered by this proviso, I will change the amendment so as to read:

And also the Superintendent of the Census shall ascertain how many of the surviving soldiers are inmates of almshouses.

Mr. COX. That will be satisfactory. We have a schedule by which all paupers in almshouses are enumerated.

Mr. MATSON. That does not apply to the soldiers.

Mr. COX. Draw up your proviso, but do not put it in this schedule.

Mr. MATSON. I withdraw the amendment for the present.

Mr. ROGERS. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that the word "surviving," at the bottom of page 13, ought to go out.

Mr. ATKINSON. I have prepared an amendment which I think will cover the proposition which the gentleman from Arkansas is about to make. I move to strike out the words "and surviving soldiers' widows," in line 17, and to insert the following: "and the surviving widows of soldiers, sailors, and marines."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ROGERS. I suggest to my friend from Pennsylvania that he ought to strike out the word "surviving." If a widow is dead, she is no longer a widow. [Laughter.]

Mr. ATKINSON. The gentleman is correct. I took the words from the bill which speaks of "surviving soldiers' widows." I accept the gentleman's suggestion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 17 and 18, the words "and surviving soldiers' widows," and insert "and the widows of soldiers, sailors, and mariners."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINSON. I wish to offer another amendment. I move to amend by inserting after the word "superintendent," in line 12, the word "shall."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to this section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will please withhold his amendment until the amendments proposed by the committee are disposed of. The Clerk will report the next amendment of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 17, lines 19, 20, and 21, strike out after the word "obtain" the words "from railroad corporations, incorporated express companies, telegraph companies, and insurance companies and"

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the chairman if it is the intention to take the railroad statistics as provided for under the act of 1879?

Mr. COX. We take the statistics of all corporations.

Mr. CONGER. I notice that you leave it discretionary with the Secretary of the Interior to say what the schedule shall be.

Mr. COX. We want to leave it in that way because we have had a great many imperfect reports on these subjects.

Mr. CONGER. Suppose the Secretary of the Interior should conclude that he would not take statistics in regard to railroad corporations, express companies, etc.?

Mr. COX. We shall have to trust him to do his duty.

Mr. CONGER. I shall, at the end of the section, propose an amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether his understanding of the effect of striking out these words is strictly correct. If they be struck out, the Secretary of the Interior will have no right to make these requirements of railroad corporations, express companies, etc. The language will then be limited to "all corporations or establishments reporting products other than agricultural products." A railroad company reports no products of any kind. Will not the striking out of this language deprive the Secretary of the Interior of the right to make these inquiries?

Mr. PERKINS. The words, "reporting products other than agricultural products," limit and describe the corporations from which this information is to be obtained.

Mr. COX. As gentlemen object to this amendment I will, in order to facilitate the passage of the bill, withdraw the amendment on behalf of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment proposing to strike out the words indicated in lines 19, 20, and 21, will be withdrawn. The Chair hears no objection.

The next amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

After the word "census," in line 30, insert the following:

"He shall also, at the time of the general enumeration herein provided for, or prior thereto, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, collect the statistics of and relating to the recorded indebtedness of the people, and make report thereon to Congress; but the amount expended for the collection of such statistics of indebtedness shall not exceed the sum of $250,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, and shall be immediately available, in addition to the $6,000,000 appropriated in section 20 of this act. The only volumes that shall be prepared and published in connection with said census shall relate to population and social statistics relating thereto, the products of manufactories, mining, and agriculture, mortality and vital statistics, valuation and public indebtedness."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Has the committee any definite understanding as to the meaning of the language "recorded indebtedness of the people," as used in this amendment?

Mr. COX. It means all judgments, all mortgages (chattel mortgages and mortgages on land), all liens of any kind information of which we can get by record.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Government bonds?

Mr. COX. Information as to Government bonds is easily obtainable from the Department.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The people of the United States owe in fact the bonded indebtedness of the Government—the greenbacks and all that sort of thing.

Mr. COX. Those matters appear of public record and are provided for in another part of the bill. We can obtain all that information by calling on the Departments.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why not say "mortgages, bills of sale, and chattel mortgages?"

Mr. COX. Because "indebtedness" is a generic term and includes everything.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is it not a little too "generic?"

Mr. COX. I think it fits the case exactly. We studied this matter a good deal. If we should undertake to obtain statistics of the whole indebtedness of the people throughout the United States, it would probably cost a million dollars additional; therefore we propose to collect information as to indebtedness in certain representative portions of the United States, and then make estimates. We were led to adopt this provision by reason of expressions made in this House by various members on both sides—by references which we have had in the debates here to the indebtedness of the people. Among other indebtedness, that of the farmers of the West has been called in question; nebulous statements of various kinds have been made, to which the gentleman from Ohio himself has called attention. We propose therefore to get as nearly as we can the statistics of the indebtedness of the people in certain representative localities, which would not cost the large sum that would be required if we should undertake to ascertain the whole indebtedness of the people. We do not propose to inquire as to promissory notes and debts of all kinds, but only as to recorded indebtedness, ascertaining perhaps 15 or 20 per cent. of the whole indebtedness of that kind, and then forming an estimate as to the rest. The collection of even this information will, according to the judgment of the Commissioner of Labor, cost at least $250,000.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In the absence of data as to how much of the recorded indebtedness has been paid but not canceled upon the record, you will be just as much in the dark as ever.

Mr. COX. The gentleman in his speech the other day referred to the fact that the commissioner of statistics of Michigan had undertaken to collect statistics in regard to some forty-seven counties of Michigan, making, I think, about 17 per cent. of the indebtedness of the people of the State, and forming a basis for an approximate estimate as to the rest. I think that was the only proximate accurate statement of the kind presented here. We propose to do something of the same sort in this case, so far as we can consistently with a reasonable expenditure. We have drawn this clause very heedfully, both as to economy and as to the accomplishment of the object to be subserved. I desire to make a part of my remarks a letter on this subject from Mr. Carroll D. Wright, the Commissioner of Labor. From an examination of this letter the House will see how carefully and upon what advice the committee has acted.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., May 9, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your verbal request as to methods which might be adopted in the Eleventh Census for the collection of the statistics of indebtedness of record other than public indebtedness, I have the honor to submit the following statement:

The statistics of the indebtedness of individuals, whether the same be in the form of mortgages or debts otherwise secured, or general indebtedness through notes and bills payable, would constitute one of the most valuable lines of information that could possibly be collected.

There are three methods which naturally suggest themselves to one's mind for the collection of such data.

First. Through the population schedules of the census, by an inquiry directed to the head of every family or individual, responsible for any business transaction. This would include all farmers, business men, and others owning houses or having the care of families, or in any way individually responsible to the public. The addition of the proper inquiries to secure this information to the population schedule would involve great expense, probably increasing the cost of the enumeration proper from one-third to one-half; that is, adding from $800,000 to $1,000,000 to the expense of the enumeration.

On the other hand, the addition of proper inquiries to the population schedule would antagonize the census, so far as the enumeration is concerned, before it commenced, and the enumerators would be handicapped from the start. The success of any enumeration depends very largely upon the goodwill of the public and the willingness of persons to comply with the reasonable request of the Government for information concerning their affairs. All inquiries, however, regarding the financial condition of the people have heretofore been met with great opposition, and undoubtedly would be again, although should such inquiries be added to the population schedule it is safe to say that from 10 to 15 per cent., judging from past experience in such matters, would comply with the request of the Government and furnish the information relative to their indebtedness. Of course, this indebtedness should be in connection with the value of the property owned by the individuals furnishing information. Such a canvass, therefore, would have for its result partial success in certain directions, at great expense, and a damaging influence upon the whole census enumerations, both as to population and manufactures, as well as agriculture.

Considering the expense and the general injury to the work of the census, this method hardly seems advisable.

Second. The collection of the facts relating to recorded indebtedness, meaning thereby all chattel and real-estate mortgages, which are the subjects of record from the records themselves. Chattel mortgages are usually recorded in municipal records, while real-estate mortgages are usually extended on the records kept at county seats. If real-estate mortgages only were to be considered, the registers of deeds in all the counties of the United States would have to be visited and the records thoroughly compiled. There are, in round numbers, 2,700 counties in the United States. To collect the information regarding mortgages recorded in these counties could not cost less than $40 per county, or a total of $108,000. I think it would be quite impossible to do it for this sum, because, in order to secure any information that would be of value and which would lead to any just conclusions, the records would have to be searched for a series of years, and all mortgages minuted with reference to the assessed valuation of the towns, or townships, or of the whole county in each case.

The proper sum of estimate for this work, confined entirely to county records, would be $200,000. It would be quite impossible to collect the information from the municipal records, so far as chattel mortgages are concerned, without either visiting every municipal government in the United States or corresponding with the proper officer in each municipal government, to secure the information, in which latter case compensation would have to be given. It is safe to assume that the expense in securing the indebtedness under chattel mortgages by this method would be far greater than by securing it through the population enumeration. Even if the expense of securing the information relating to indebtedness through records was not objectionable on account of expense, there are obstacles in the way which render such a method unadvisable. The records of mortgages would, in all cases, give the amount of the original mortgage debt; but, as a rule, payments on the original mortgage debt are not made matters of record. So, where a man had given a mortgage on his place of $10,000, and had paid, say, $9,000 in part liquidation thereof, the indebtedness would still stand on record at $10,000; so the facts, or rather the results of any collection of data from records would lead to vicious conclusions.

This second method, however, would relieve the census of all antagonism through the inquiry into the financial affairs of individuals.

Third. The employment of specially qualified experts to collect the information desired from representative communities; such collection to be made subsequent to and independent of the enumeration of the people in general. This method is free from objection in every direction except that of expense. It would not antagonize the public in any way, but it would lead to the most valuable results; that is, it would give the valuation and the indebtedness thereon to such extent as the appropriation made for it might warrant. It would not give the facts for every farm and every property-holder in the United States, but it would give the facts for representative towns or counties, and by selecting counties the information might be collected so as to show the property value of each holding, and the indebtedness thereon, as originally made and as shown through the registry of deeds, further information being sought as to the payments in part liquidation of the recorded debt.

This method seems the most feasible and the most desirable, taking all things into consideration. With an appropriation of $200,000 or $250,000 a very general idea of the indebtedness of the country might be gained; certainly it would be approximately correct so far as it went. If Congress saw fit to carry the matter still further it would be merely a question of money; but to make any reasonable collection, on which any fair or just conclusions could be based, the sum named should be appropriated in addition to that named in your bill for the general purposes of the census. That is to say, if Congress desires to have the facts for representative districts or localities regarding recorded indebtedness collected, it should make an extra appropriation for census purposes of at least $250,000.

Trusting I have covered the points named by you,

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CARROLL D. WRIGHT,
Commissioner.

Hon. S. S. COX, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CONGER. If the indebtedness appearing upon record in the various counties of the States be taken as the basis of these statistics the information will be so inaccurate that it would be unjust to publish it to the world. At one time an attempt of this sort was made in the State of Iowa; but it was ascertained that in probably every county of the State at least three-fourths of the chattel mortgages which had in fact been paid remained uncanceled on the records. In view of such facts, it would be unfair and unjust to publish to the world information obtained in that way as exhibiting the indebtedness of the people.

Mr. COX. I concur with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] in what he says to a great extent. It is the same with mortgages in several of the States. In Ohio mortgages are not canceled until the last installment is paid. We shall have to make inquiry with the aid of experts as to what indebtedness has been paid, and how much remains. It will help a nation as well as an individual to know just what burdens it is laboring under.

Mr. CONGER. It is all guess-work.

Mr. COX. It is more or less an estimate, I admit.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I would ask why the words in line 31, "or prior thereto" are used? Why are those words inserted there in regard to collecting the statistics relating to recorded indebtedness?

Mr. COX. The object is to commence the examination now, to begin the correspondence, to reach out as soon as the bureau is organized to get the proper correspondence so when 1890 comes it will have some of the material on hand to make the proper calculation in reference to this indebtedness.

Mr. ROGERS. I agree with my friend from Iowa. I think this would be an unwise and unsatisfactory work. To illustrate. I do not know in how many States South, but in my own State agricultural operations are carried on upon liens—crop liens—which are never recorded. They are filed. They stand as filed. It may be half is paid or a third is paid; no one knows what is paid, so far as that is concerned. When paid they are taken up and destroyed.

No party who undertakes it can in the limit of thirty days go through the county offices and ascertain just what the indebtedness is. In the first place, in many cases it would take a good lawyer to tell whether an instrument was a mortgage or not. These things have all to be considered. You will have a class of men dabbling with a subject they are incapable of understanding. Instead of giving us information the result would be to fill the country with a lot of misinformation. We can not get anything accurate unless we employ proper parties. We can not get the desired information unless we get a better class of men to do the work.

Mr. COX. I have conferred with my colleagues on the committee and they are not pertinacious as to this amendment. It adds to the expense of the census $250,000 for the collection of statistics of indebtedness perhaps, which after all may be an uncertain element. Beside, we will cut out this great expense. If any gentleman wants a vote on it in the House, or if any gentleman wants a vote now, the committee will not insist on it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to be hardly practicable. It would have to be more definite to accomplish anything. The information sought for would have to be presented in such form as to give the general fact affecting localities. In going into localities, counties, townships, cities, and towns, it is a subject which ought to be carefully thought over before definite action is taken by Congress.

Mr. COX. I withdraw the amendment at the request of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. CONGER. Before we pass away from the amendment of the committee I desire to make a remark on the subject.

Mr. COX. I have withdrawn it in deference to the criticism of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. CONGER. Can the gentleman from New York withdraw it except by unanimous consent? I make that inquiry of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the amendment were offered by an individual he could perhaps withdraw it. The Chair understood the withdrawal by the gentleman from New York was not objected to. Does the gentleman from Iowa object to the withdrawal of the amendment?

Mr. CONGER. I do, unless I can have an inquiry answered.

Mr. COX. I will be glad to answer the gentleman.

Mr. CONGER. How much of the amendment does the gentleman desire to withdraw?

Mr. COX. I move to withdraw from "he," in line 30, to "act," in line 39. In other words, I withdraw the following part of the amendment:

He shall also, at the time of the general enumeration herein provided for, or prior thereto, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, collect the statistics of and relating to the recorded indebtedness of the people, and make report thereon to Congress; but the amount expended for the collection of such statistics of indebtedness shall not exceed the sum of $250,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, and shall be immediately available, in addition to the $6,000,000 appropriated in section 20 of this act.

Mr. CONGER. That is right.

Mr. COX. That cuts out twenty-two volumes in the last decade. I wish to save expense in that particular.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That portion of the amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk will now read the remaining portion of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The only volumes that shall be prepared and published in connection with said census shall relate to population and social statistics relating thereto, the products of manufactories, mining and agriculture, mortality and vital statistics, valuation and public indebtedness.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in this section:

"And he shall cause to be taken an enumeration of the membership of all labor, agricultural, and other like industrial societies, associations, unions, and other like organizations."

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi. That amendment may be broader somewhat than I intended, but the object in view is this: We know that there are certain industrial organizations in this country which are playing a very important part in its development, and are having their effect upon the progress of the country.

I think, sir, it is important that we should provide ourselves, through the medium of the census, with the means of determining the growth and progress of these organizations.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? I understand that the larger number of industrial organizations, labor organizations, in the country refuse to give their membership to anybody, and how are you going to get them? They are secret, and they refuse to give you the number even of their assemblies. How are you, under this act, going to compel them, the Knights of Labor for instance, to give up their secrets? Do you propose to apply the penal provisions of the bill to them?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi. I did not yield to the gentleman for an argument, but only for a question. The amendment, I will answer the gentleman, is confined solely to the industrial associations, and I intended it to refer to what are known as labor organizations in the common acceptation of the term as we know and understand it, and the various agricultural organizations, granges, alliances, etc. I do not know that they object to giving their membership, but as I understand it they desire for their own information to determine and that the country may understand their growth and development, the progress they are making, and the effect they have upon the development of the industries of the country.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the Congress of the United States will never attempt by any criminal procedure, by the enforcement of penalties, fines, or imprisonment, to break down and make public the rules adopted by the secret organizations of labor in this country. It is an inquisitorial use of the power conferred under this statute for which we get nothing in return and violate one of the plainest principles of our social organization.

Now, it is within my personal knowledge that one of the rules of the Knights of Labor is an inhibition against giving to anybody these facts which the gentleman wants to demand. If you desire to send public documents, labor reports, etc., into the country to individual members of labor assemblies of your agricultural district, you will be compelled to send them to the local assembly, because you can not ascertain the names of the members.

And there are many other things in connection with it that in order to get this growth that the gentleman talks about we would have to violate the rules of these organizations and turn them over to the inquisition of the Bureau of the Census. I do not think we ought to do that. They can make known their own progress. They can make known their organization in their own way. We know how many men work for a living, because we can get that information from the census. We get such information of all kinds that is valuable from the census, and it would be recognized by the labor organizations as an attempt to break in upon them by the organic law and against the provisions they have made in their own associations and societies to manage their own business in their own way.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the proposition will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me that that is hardly practicable.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi. I wish to say but this in answer to the gentleman from Ohio, that the first time I ever heard of a census being called an "inquisitorial concern" was in his remarks.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In the way the gentleman wants to apply it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi. That amendment embodies no such idea as the gentleman asserts; but I am perfectly willing that it shall be modified, so it can not possibly be so construed as having that effect or purpose, in order to get at such statistics as are accessible without the violation of any of the rules of these organizations. It is far from my design to accomplish anything of that sort or interfere in any manner with them.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But if the amendment is modified, as the gentleman suggests, it will be absolutely worthless. Suppose the facts that the gentleman wants to ascertain are not given. As a member of the Forty-ninth Congress investigating the several railroad strikes it was proved abundantly over and over again by members of one of the labor organizations that no one member would reveal the name of any other member. How could the gentleman then, under the circumstances proposed, accomplish anything by his amendment? The returns could only be partial, and hence worthless.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi. But there are organizations which are not secret, and there can not be a partial return except with reference to organizations that have a rule of secrecy, and then, of course, we can not get any statistics. It is only those societies who are willing to proclaim to the country the number of their membership that this will affect. It does not attempt or undertake in any manner to interfere with the rules of any of these orders, or seek to invade the precincts of the assemblies and obtain the names of members or the number of the membership of the different organizations that are secret.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi, and it was rejected.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to offer an amendment, which is simply the provision of the old law as to taking statistics in regard to railroads, express companies, and insurance companies. It is a very long amendment, occupying nearly two pages in the statutes. I do not desire to delay the work of the House by having the amendment read. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment may be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. ATKINSON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa if he does not think that is already included in section 17, which provides that the schedules of inquiry of the Eleventh Census shall be the same as those contained in section 2206 of the Revised Statutes of the United States?

Mr. COX. That is the fact.

Mr. CONGER. In answer to the gentleman's question I will say that it is, provided the Secretary of the Interior concludes to take this information; but there has arisen in my mind a suspicion that this was not intended, from the fact that the committee propose to strike out, in lines 19, 20, and 21, so much as refers to railroad corporations.

Mr. COX. That is to be retained. There is no such object on the part of the committee.

Mr. CONGER. In order to be certain to obtain this information I propose this amendment.

Mr. COX. It is already provided for.

Mr. CONGER. It is if the Secretary of the Interior is inclined to take it.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read section 18, as follows:

SEC. 18. That each enumerator in his subdivision shall be charged with the collection of the facts and statistics required by each and all the several schedules, with the following exceptions, to wit: In cities or States where an official registration of deaths is maintained, the Superintendent of Census may, in his discretion, withhold the mortality schedule from the several enumerators within such cities or States, and may obtain the statistics required by this act through official records, paying therefor such sum as may be found necessary, not exceeding the amount which is by this act authorized to be paid to enumerators for a similar service, namely, 2 cents for each death thus returned. Whenever he shall deem it expedient, the Superintendent of Census may withhold the schedules for manufacturing and social statistics from the enumerators of the several subdivisions, and may charge the collection of these statistics upon experts and special agents, to be employed without respect to locality. And said Superintendent may employ experts and special agents to investigate in their economic relations the manufacturing, fishing, mining, cattle, and other industries of the country, and the statistics of telegraph, express, transportation, and insurance companies as he may designate and require. And the Superintendent of Census shall, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, prepare schedules containing such interrogatories as shall, in his judgment, be best adapted to elicit this information, with such specifications, divisions, and particulars under each head as he shall deem necessary to that end. Such experts and special agents shall take the same oath as the enumerators of the several subdivisions, and shall have equal authority with such enumerators in respect to the subjects committed to them, and they shall receive compensation at rates to be fixed by the Superintendent of Census with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the same shall in no case exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses.

The Committee propose the following amendment:

In line 18, after the word "agents," add the following:

"To collect the statistics of and relating to indebtedness as provided in the foregoing sections and."

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the amendment?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the next amendment of the committee, as follows:

In line 20 strike out the word "railroads."

Mr. COX. I withdraw that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the amendment?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the next amendment of the committee, as follows:

In lines 21 and 22 strike out the words "and the statistics of telegraph, express, transportation, and insurance companies."

Mr. COX. I withdraw that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the amendment?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read sections 19 and 20, as follows:

SEC. 19. That the enumeration required by this act shall commence on the first Monday of June, 1890, and be taken as of that date, and each enumerator shall prosecute the canvass of his subdivision from that date forward on each week-day without intermission, except for sickness or other urgent cause; and any unnecessary cessation of his work shall be sufficient ground for his removal and the appointment of another person in his place; and any person so appointed shall take the oath required of enumerators, and shall receive compensation at the same rates. And it shall be the duty of each enumerator to complete the enumeration of his district, and to prepare the returns hereinbefore required to be made, and to forward the same to the supervisor of his district on or before the 1st day of July, 1890, and in any city having over 10,000 inhabitants under the census of 1880, the enumeration of population shall be taken within two weeks from the first Monday of June; and any delay beyond the dates above respectively, on the part of any enumerator, shall be sufficient cause for withholding the compensation to which he would be entitled by compliance with the provisions of this act, until proof satisfactory to the Superintendent of Census shall be furnished that such delay was by reason of causes beyond the control of such enumerator.

SEC. 20. That the sum of $6,000,000 is hereby fixed and limited as the maximum cost of the census herein provided for, exclusive of printing and engraving, and it shall not be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior or the Superintendent of Census to incur any expense or obligation whatever, in respect to said census, in excess of that sum; and the sum of $6,000,000, in addition to any sums which may be received for copies as provided in section 23 of this act, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, and continue available until the completion of the Eleventh Census.

The committee propose the following amendments:

In section 20, line 3, strike out the word "and" between "printing" and "engraving," place a comma after the word "printing," and after the word "engraving" add the words "and binding," placing a comma after the word "binding."

Mr. ROGERS. For the purpose of presenting this matter I move to strike out, in line 7, the words "six million," and insert in lieu thereof the words "two hundred and fifty thousand dollars." I do this for the purpose of getting certain information, and also for the purpose of expressing some views on the subject. I would ask the gentleman from New York whether or not in the passage of the former bill the full sum provided for taking the census was made available at the time and continued available until the census was completed?

Mr. COX. No, sir; only three millions. We had great trouble and criticism for coming to Congress again and again for renewed appropriations; and so we considered it best in this case to give the full amount to complete the census without the printing and binding.

The average is about the same now as it was in the Ninth and Tenth Censuses, say 10 cents per head. If my friend from Arkansas wants to have a statement of the expense of the former census I have it before me, and can give it to him.

Mr. ROGERS. I would like to have the aggregate.

Mr. COX. For the Tenth Census the total cost, including printing, was $5,785,254.72, divided as follows: Enumerators, $2,095,563.32; special agents (which we have disposed of a good deal in this bill), $625,067.29; printing reports, $678,624.61; superintendent's office, $2-385,999.50. One-half the expense named for special agents will be saved by this bill, because we do not order so many expert essays on subjects connected with science, like mining, etc.; and only pretend to give the product of our manufacturers in addition to the ordinary enumeration, reports, etc. Deducting this saving in cost of printing leaves the total cost of the Tenth Census $4,794,096, or about 9½ cents per capita of the population of 1880.

Mr. ROGERS. How much did you spend the first year?

Mr. COX. I think it took the whole three millions the first year.

Mr. ROGERS. In other words, there will be very little of this money that can be expended before the 1st of next July; and in the mean time Congress will assemble. It does not seem to me essential to make an appropriation of $6,000,000 for the purpose when there will be no use for a considerable portion of the sum for about a year.

It occurs to me that that is unwise and that it is not a proper expenditure to make. It may be that it will be wiser to increase the sum that I have proposed in my amendment $250,000, though I really do not see what they are going to do with any of it now. I do not know anything that can be done with any portion of this appropriation until after the next session of Congress, and therefore I think it unwise and improper to make an appropriation at this time of $6,000,000 when we have not a particle of use for the money at present.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What difference does it make when our Treasury, as we are told constantly on the other side, is bursting with a surplus?

Mr. ROGERS. Well, it makes a good deal of difference in many directions.

Mr. MORROW. Oh, yes; it will make a difference in the election.

Mr. ROGERS. This appropriation locks up in the Treasury unnecessarily a large amount of money. Another point about it is that all political parties want to avoid as far as possible the semblance of anything that is improper. We do not need to appropriate now $6,000,000 when the purpose for which we appropriate it can not be carried into effect at present and when the money is not really necessary. If we were appropriating for the building of a court-house or anything of that kind I would not propose to make "two bites of a cherry," because in such a case we begin the work and go right along; but in this case we do not and can not commence until about the beginning of the next fiscal year. Therefore what is the object of appropriating $6,000,-000 and having the statement sent out to the country that we have appropriated six millions for which there is not a particle of present use? It has at least the semblance of wrong doing, and it is important to the whole country and important as a party measure that we refrain from doing anything that would bear that construction, and I do not think the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] ought to insist upon our making an appropriation like this at this time. I speak openly and frankly about the matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] replies to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], I ask him to observe the fact, which has been heretofore overlooked, that the three millions appropriated for the taking of the last census was appropriated on the 3d of March, 1879, just as an appropriation might be made before the end of the next session of this Congress. Of course the appropriation must be made before the 4th of March, as the Congress expires at that time. Therefore, judging from past experience upon this subject, it seems to me that no large sum need be now appropriated, and I do not think that any very large sum ought to be placed within the control of any Department which is not to be used within a short period of time.

Mr. ROGERS. I suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] that the appropriation can go into the sundry civil bill at the next session of Congress and answer all the purposes for which it is required just as well as if it were appropriated now, and I hope the gentleman will not insist on the appropriation being made at this time. If any sum is necessary now, I am willing that it shall be provided for in the bill, but I certainly do not see any necessity for appropriating the whole amount.

Mr. HOLMAN. There has got to be an office organized.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes. Possibly the sum I have proposed in my amendment is too large for present requirements, but it may be necessary to organize an office and get ready for the work, and whatever amount is required for that ought to be appropriated, but nothing beyond that.

Mr. COX. I have had no opportunity to confer with the committee on this, because the question did not come before them in the light in which it is presented by the gentleman from Arkansas. It will be necessary to organize an office, with rent, etc.; and we shall have to buy certain material in advance to prepare for the printing, etc. We have to get a certain kind of paper prepared especially for the enumerators, because ordinary paper gets worn out by being carried by them hither and yonder. Evidently, therefore, there must be a considerable expenditure almost at once; but, in view of the suggestions that have been made, I am willing to cut down this present appropriation to $1,000,000.

Mr. ROGERS. I will accept that.

Mr. COX. And then we can provide for a further appropriation at the next session.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It seems to me that that is sailing somewhat under false colors. We pass a bill here providing for the expenditure of $6,000,000, and then we appropriate only one million, and go to the country with the proposition that this administration is spending $1,000,000 only, when it is really providing for the expenditure of six millions.

Mr. COX. If we are to be discredited by reason of the expenditure of so much money, we shall get the discredit next year also.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We do not propose to give you that opportunity next year.

Mr. COX. I am sure that gentlemen on either side are not afraid to take the responsibility of appropriating all the money needed at present, trusting to the future for further appropriations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But we have this money on hand, and we may as well appropriate it. I do not think you are going to reduce the surplus before 1890 by the Mills bill or in any other way.

Mr. COX. I would be very glad to take the judgment of the House on this subject, and will abide by it, of course.

Mr. ROGERS. If we appropriate this money we do not turn it loose; it still can not be used except as may be necessary under the law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is all true; I understand that. But why not make provision in a business-like way now?

Mr. HOLMAN. The appropriation of the money makes the Department responsible for it.

Mr. COX. I should like to hear from the gentleman on the other side [Mr. MCKENNA], my colleague on the committee.

Mr. MCKENNA. I think it will no doubt be sufficient for the present to appropriate only $1,000,000 of the $6,000,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7 strike out "six millions" and insert "one million."

Mr. HOOKER. I would like to make an inquiry of my friend, the chairman of the committee [Mr. COX]; and I wish also to say a word upon a particular portion of this bill which, so far as I know, has not yet been adverted to. I think a sufficient amount ought to be appropriated at once to organize this bureau efficiently. What I desire to inquire of the chairman of the committee is whether provision is made in this bill for the immediate printing of the reports which may be made to the Superintendent of the Census. I would like to know also whether the publication of the information obtained under the last census has yet been completed. We shall soon be in the ninth year of the present decade; yet, as I understand, the publication of the reports of the Census Bureau is not yet entirely completed.

Mr. COX. In response to the last part of the gentleman's suggestion, I will say that every one of the reports provided for or called for by the Census Office has been ordered to be printed. In the deficiency bill passed at the beginning of the present session $67,000 was appropriated to wind up the whole concern. Only three or four books yet remain to be published. They are all stereotyped, though not all printed and bound. The reason why these books have not been printed earlier is that some of the essays or manuscripts had not been prepared. Those manuscripts have not reference especially to the year 1880, but apply to the whole decennial period, having relation to matters connected with mining, petroleum, and other subjects of general interest, and there will be no necessity of taking up those subjects in the future.

I say, therefore, to my friend from Mississippi that the business of the Tenth Census is entirely wound up—wound up, I know, with some little discredit, because of its dilatoriness, resulting from the fact that some of the men engaged in connection with this office broke down in their health in consequence of the arduous nature of the work.

We are now ready to take hold of this matter for 1890. We have barely time enough to get this bill through the Senate, and have the proper preparations made for tabulation, the paper manufactured, etc. I think the sum of $1,000,000 is all that need be appropriated now for organizing the office and preparing to enter upon the work.

Mr. HOOKER. After hearing what my friend, the chairman of the committee, has just said, I wish merely to remark that the publication of the census reports of 1880 has been exceedingly dilatory. Two volumes of the Compendium of the Census, as I understand, were published in 1883 and there are some volumes not yet published; so that now, in 1888, we are making appropriations for the completion of the publication of the census taken in 1880. I wish to suggest to my honorable friend from New York, to the Committee on the Census, and to the House that it is important that whatever census publications be made should be made rapidly and promptly, so as to give the country early information with reference to all the various schedules in regard to vitality, population, production, etc. We want these publications as rapidly as practicable, and therefore, in my judgment, the appropriations for the organization of the bureau ought to be liberal and they ought to be made available at such time, that the publication may commence as soon as the returns come in and be completed as early as possible. This was my idea in making my inquiry of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX. I will say that of the twenty-six different publications which have been made upon the various subjects connected with the last census, only seven will be published under this bill. We have cut off all provisions for the others; and the seven volumes provided for in this bill will no doubt be published immediately after 1890.

As to the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] I will remark that, while the aggregate appropriation is limited to six millions, we shall not need all of it until 1890 shall have rolled around, when the information collected will have to be digested in the Census Office. It will then be time enough to make the full amount of the appropriation.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. ROGERS, it was adopted.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to strike out in section 20, the words "in addition to any sums that may have been received for copies as provided in section 23 of this act." Those words seem to be superfluous.

The amendment was agreed to.

Section 21 was read, as follows:

SEC. 21. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized whenever he may think proper, to call upon any other Department or office of the Government for information pertinent to the enumeration herein required. And he may rent convenient quarters in the District of Columbia for the office work of the census.

The committee's amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the words, "and he may rent convenient quarters in the District of Columbia for the office work of the census."

Mr. COX. Let those words be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

Section 22 was read, as follows:

SEC. 22. That the Superintendent of Census, with the consent of the President, may at any time remove any supervisor of census, and fill any vacancy thereby caused or otherwise occurring; and the supervisor of the census may, with the consent of the Superintendent of Census, remove any enumerator in his district, and fill the vacancy thereby caused or otherwise occurring; and in such cases but one compensation shall be allowed for the entire service, to be apportioned among the persons performing the same in the discretion of the Superintendent of Census.

There being no amendment proposed, the next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 23. That upon the request of any municipal government, meaning thereby the incorporated government of any town, village, township, or city, or kindred municipality, the Superintendent of Census shall furnish such government with a copy of the names, with age, sex, and color, of all persons enumerated within the territory in the jurisdiction of such municipality, and such copies shall be paid for by such municipal government at the rate of 20 cents for each one hundred names, and all sums so received by the Superintendent of Census shall be accounted for in such way as the Secretary of the Interior shall direct, and covered into the Treasury of the United States to be placed to the credit of, and in addition to, the appropriation herein made for taking the Eleventh Census.

Amendments of the committee:

Insert "birthplace" after the word "sex;" and strike out "20" and insert "25."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I am requested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] to offer the following amendment as an additional section:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 24. That the Superintendent of Census shall ascertain the names of those who had served in the military or naval service, and who are survivors on the 1st of June, 1890, and who are then inmates of almshouses.

Mr. ROGERS. Do I understand the gentleman wants to get the names of these people? I should think the number would be all that is wanted.

Mr. CONGER. I have offered it at the request of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ROGERS. Does the gentleman from New York desire that amendment?

Mr. COX. I do not want to expose the names of those who are in almshouses.

Mr. CONGER. I do it at the request of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. It may be well to ascertain the number of persons.

Mr. COX. But not the names of those in almshouses.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that amendment, to strike out the names, providing only for the number. I wish to have a vote on my colleague's proposition, but in the first place I want to put it in such a form as he would agree to have if he were here. I do not object to the number, but I do not think we should provide for the names.

Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to strike out the words "and who are survivors on the 1st day of June, 1890;" so it will read, "who served in the military or naval service and who are in almshouses." They must be survivors if they are in almshouses.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. CONGER'S amendment as amended.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 3, noes 9.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question next recurred on the following amendment of the committee:

Insert as section 24 the following:

"SEC. 24. That the Secretary of the Interior may authorize the expenditure of necessary sums for the traveling expenses of the officers and employés connected with the taking of the census, and the incidental expenses essential to the carrying out of this act, including the rental of convenient quarters in the District of Columbia and the furnishing thereof, and an outfit for printing small blanks, tally-sheets, circulars, etc."

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to add the following words: "and shall from time to time make a detailed report to Congress of such expenditures."

Mr. COX. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was adopted, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next section of the bill was read, as follows:

SEC. 25. That the act entitled "An act to provide for the taking of the tenth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1879, and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed; and all censuses subsequent to the Eleventh Census shall be taken in accordance with the provisions of this act unless Congress shall hereafter otherwise provide.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent to recur to page 15, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. WEAVER. I want to make an inquiry about this matter, whether the proviso——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to recur to page 15, section 17, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONGER. I move to insert the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after the word "indebtedness," in line 44, "and to statistics relating to railroad corporations, incorporated express, telegraph, and insurance companies."

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not that covered by the last clause on the fifteenth page?

Mr. CONGER. I think not.

Mr. HOLMAN. It provides for the collection of statistics relating to railroad, telegraph, express, transportation, and insurance companies.

Mr. CONGER. Where do you find that?

Mr. HOLMAN. In section 18.

Mr. CONGER. But I am referring now to the provision for the publication of certain volumes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Ah, that is different.

The amendment of Mr. CONGER was adopted.

Mr. HOVEY. I want to add another clause to the same section, to follow what has just been adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman from Indiana offering a further amendment to the section?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the last amendment "and a list of surviving soldiers, sailors, marines, and the widows of soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Mr. HOVEY. There is no publication authorized of that class.

Mr. COX. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call attention to the language of the fifteenth section, in reference to the penalties and forfeiture; and I ask leave to submit the following amendment, to strike out all after the word "shall," in the nineteenth line, as follows:

Forfeit and pay a sum not less than $500 nor more than $10,000, to be recovered in an action of debt in any court of competent jurisdiction, in the name and to the use of the United States, and in addition thereto shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned for a period not exceeding one year.

And insert what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $10,000, to which may be added imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year.

Mr. COX. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. ROGERS. Now, for the sake of perfecting the language of the bill, in section 13, line 8, I ask unanimous consent to recur to this part of the bill and strike out the words "forfeit a" and insert "be fined in any sum;" so that it will read:

And upon conviction shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $500.

This provides a fine instead of a forfeiture.

Mr. COX. All right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ought there not to be a minimum sum? That might bring it down to a dollar. It might be no punishment at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just submitted.

Mr. MCKENNA. Why not say "fined in a sum?"

Mr. ROGERS. All right; I will accept the modification.

The amendment as modified was adopted.

Mr. ROGERS. Now, in line 16 of the same section, the words "forfeit and pay" should be stricken out, and insert in lieu thereof "be fined in a;" so that it will read:

He shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $5,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, this amendment will be adopted.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. Again, in section 15, line 11, in order to make the bill conform, strike out the words "forfeit and pay" and insert in lieu thereof "be fined in."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. ROGERS. Again, section 10 should be stricken out in toto. That has no application since the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COX. There is no objection to that, I presume, now.

Mr. MORROW. I suggest that there is no need for striking that out.

Mr. HOLMAN. You do not want to enforce these by a suit in the State court.

Mr. MORROW. No; but this provides now that these fines may be enforced in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. ROGERS. As the bill is framed now, the jurisdiction is in the Federal courts. The Government loses nothing under the amendments which have been adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest that the section be amended so as to provide that "all fines and penalties imposed by this act may be enforced by indictment in any court of competent jurisdiction where such offenses may be committed or forfeiture incurred."

Mr. ROGERS. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Arkansas indicate his amendment?

Mr. ROGERS. The words I propose to strike out are in line 2, "or appropriate action at law."

Mr. HOVEY. Let me suggest that you can not enforce an indictment. You punish by indictment.

Mr. ROGERS. The word "prosecuted" might be substituted.

Mr. MORROW. "That all fines and penalties imposed by this act may be prosecuted by indictment or information."

Mr. MCKENNA. The words used are good enough.

Mr. ROGERS. I will not ask to have the word "enforced" changed. I think that is sufficient. I move to strike out "or appropriate action at law," in lines 2 and 3, and "or forfeitures incurred," in line 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORROW. I suggest that we insert after the word "indictment" "or by information."

Mr. ROGERS. I would not add those words.

Mr. MORROW. I move to amend section 16 by adding, in line 2, after the word "indictment," the words "or by information."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COX. I now demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. COX. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. T. J. CAMPBELL: A bill (H. R. 10796) granting a pension to Francis Pohl—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: A bill (H. R. 10797) for the relief of James W. Kraggs—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DARLINGTON: A bill (H. R. 10798) granting a pension to John Oakes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FINLEY: A bill (H. R. 10799) granting a pension to Tyrel Hamblin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10800) for the benefit of Thomas Kinney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FITCH: A bill (H. R. 10801) for the relief of Samuel B. Jones—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HIESTAND: A bill (H. R. 10802) to increase the pension of James M. Etter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE: A bill (H. R. 10803) for the relief of David Jones—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAFFOON: A bill (H. R. 10804) for the relief of Jacob Held, sr.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LAGAN: A bill (H. R. 10805) for the relief of Mrs. Anna Hernandez—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LANE: A bill (H. R. 10806) granting a pension to Eugenia A. Helston—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCREARY: A bill (H. R. 10807) granting a pension to Mary Speaks—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SENEY: A bill (H. R. 10808) for the relief of James W. Byrd—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WHEELER: A bill (H. R. 10809) to refer the claim of Andrew J. Kirby against the United States to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10810) granting a pension to John W. Curtis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRUMM: Petition of H. T. Baily and others, against the internal-revenue tax—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Henry Schlotman and others, favoring the anti-convict labor bill—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: Petition of James W. Knaggs, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of David Dawson and others, for licensing certain engineers—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, petition of Ellen A. McInerney, widow of Lott McInerney, Company G, One hundred and sixteenth New York Volunteers, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. R. H. M. DAVIDSON: Petition of citizens of Tampa, Fla., for an appropriation for the improvement of Tampa Bay—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Memorial of Resolute Council, No. 27, and of Industry Council, No. 163, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, in favor of Senate bill No. 553, restricting immigration—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. GLASS: Papers in the claim of Nancy P. Garison, of Benton County, Mississippi—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HERMANN: Petition of 75 citizens of Oregon, for prohibition in the District of Columbia—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. McCREARY: Petition for the relief of Dawson T. Lamb, late of Companies C and D, Kentucky Volunteer Infantry—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, petition of N. W. Morris, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LAFFOON: Petition of Jacob Held, sr., of Henderson, Ky., for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LONG: Petition and affidavits of Thomas Coyle and wife, for relief—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MILLIKEN: Resolution of the Congregational churches of Maine, against the production, importation, and exportation of intoxicating liquors—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. RAYNER: Petition of Richard N. Bowerman, late lieutenant-colonel Thirty-sixth Regiment United States Infantry, for reference of his case to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SAWYER: Petition of 130 citizens of Wyoming County, New York, for reduction of postage—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SENEY: Petition of James W. Byrd, for the removal of the charge of desertion—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SIMMONS: Petition of Jasper B. Mann, of Carteret County, North Carolina, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SOWDEN: Petition of George W. Weitknecht and others, citizens of the Tenth district of Pennsylvania, for continuing work looking to the eradication of pleuro-pneumonia, etc.—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. STEELE: Petition of L. J. Gibble and 100 others, asking that each honorably discharged soldier be allowed to enter 160 acres of public land—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. TILLMAN (by request): Petition of John G. Goettee, administrator of Eliza Goettee, of Robert C. Bowers, and of Elizabeth Youmans, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WASHINGTON: Petition of J. B. White, of Davidson County, Tennessee, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WHITTHORNE: Petition of E. J. B. Smith, of Williamson County, and of heir of Giles T. Harris, of Maury County, Tennessee, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. YARDLEY: Petition of 51 citizens of Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, protesting against a reduction of the duty on window glass—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The following petition for the repeal or modification of the internal-revenue tax of $25 levied on druggists was received and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

By Mr. LEE (by request): Of citizens of Loudoun County, Virginia.

The following petition praying for the enactment of a law providing temporary aid for common schools, to be disbursed on the basis of illiteracy, was referred to the Committee on Education:

By Mr. HITT: Of Ira Mettler and 33 others, citizens of Creston, Ogle County, Illinois.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 12, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. PLATT. From the reading of the Journal I notice that there is an order for the withdrawal of papers, I think in the case of Mrs. Frances M. Wilkinson, where there had been an adverse report. I wanted to inquire—as the order seems to have been adopted absolutely—whether the parties would have the right to withdraw the papers? The rule is——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such orders are always taken subject to the rule of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. So that the rule interprets itself?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; the rules impose the duty upon the Secretary, so that it is not necessary formally at this time to enter "subject to the rule."

If there be no motion to correct or amend the Journal, it will stand approved as read.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SABIN presented a petition of 146 citizens of Faribault, Minn., praying Congress to take steps looking towards the purchase of the Island of Cuba by the United States Government; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of 17 citizens of Carver County, Minnesota, praying for certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred an amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. PADDOCK to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported it favorably with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 98) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to accept the surrender of and cancel land patents to Indians in certain cases, reported it with amendments.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported it favorably, and moved that the amendment, together with the accompanying report in regard to the subject-matter, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. BOWEN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5259) to relieve Jacob G. Bostalter from the charge of fraudulent enlistment, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1493) for the relief of J. Schriber & Co., of Cleveland, Cuyahoga County, Ohio, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4659) for the relief of George M. Ochiltree, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. DAWES. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report a resolution for action at the present time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed, either by full committee or such subcommittee as may be appointed by the chairman thereof, to continue during the recess of Congress the investigation authorized by the resolution of March 1, 1887, with the authority and in the manner and to the extent provided in said resolution; and also to visit any reservations where, in the opinion of said committee, it may be necessary to extend their investigations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that as the resolution proposes a charge on the contingent fund the rule might require a different disposition of it.

Mr. DAWES. Let it be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Chief Clerk again read the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

REPORT ON COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably the joint resolution (S. R. 99) providing for the printing of the portion of the annual report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics on Commerce and Navigation for the year ending June 30, 1887, entitled "Annual report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics in regard to imported merchandise entered for consumption in the United States, with amounts of duty and rates of duty collected." I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed 20,000 copies of the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics in regard to imported merchandise entered for consumption in the United States, with rates of duty and amounts of duty collected, for the fiscal year 1887: 14,000 for the use of the members of the House of Representatives; 5,000 for the use of members of the Senate, and 1,000 for the use of the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department. The sum of —— dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the cost of the publication of said report.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move to fill the blank with "fifteen hundred." The cost will be about $1,100.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 11, after the words "sum of," it is proposed to fill the blank by the insertion of the words "fifteen hundred;" so as to read:

The sum of $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why the discrimination in this case? I thought we had established a rule that the Senate was to have one-third and the House two-thirds of such documents. Now there comes in a very valuable document, and 14,000 is for the House of Representatives, 5,000 for the Senate, and 1,000 for the Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. MANDERSON. That does not depart very far from that general rule. These figures were fixed because the resolution in that form came from Mr. Switzler, the chief of this bureau, and it seemed to the committee that it was well enough to leave it as suggested by him, giving 5,000 to the Senate and 14,000 to the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think we are quite competent to judge of the number we want.

Mr. MANDERSON. I suppose so.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think the proportion fixed in the resolution is proper. I move to make it 6,500 for the Senate and 13,000 for the House, in lieu of the 5,000 and 14,000.

Mr. MANDERSON. Then the Senator will have to amend the number.

Mr. COCKRELL. The resolution makes 20,000 the number.

Mr. MANDERSON. You had better say 6,000 for the Senate, 13,000 for the House, and 1,000 for the Chief of the bureau.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall not object to that.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the resolution in line 7, so as to make it read:

Thirteen thousand for the use of the members of the House of Representatives, 6,000 for the use of members of the Senate, and 1,000 for the use of the Bureau of Statistics.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3314) for the relief of the heirs of Peter Poorman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3315) to remove the charge of desertion from the military records of William F. Pritchard and William S. Pritchard; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 3316) granting a pension to Jasper N. Warren; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa (by request), introduced a bill (S. 3317) for the relief of John F. Riley, collector of the estate of Samuel R. Hamil, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SABIN introduced a bill (S. 3318) to provide for the revocation of the withdrawal of lands made for the benefit of certain railroads, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3319) granting the right of way through certain Indian lands in the State of Minnesota to the Moorhead, Leech Lake and Northern Railway Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3320) granting to the Duluth and Winnipeg Railway Company the right of way through the Fond du Lac Indian reservation, in the State of Minnesota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. VANCE introduced a bill (S. 3321) to incorporate the Washington and Great Falls Narrow Gauge Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That Mrs. A. A. Coolidge have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate her petition and accompanying papers.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6612) to grant right of way through the Indian Territory to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7261) granting the right of way through certain lands in the State of Minnesota to the Moorhead, Leech Lake and Northern Railway Company;

A bill (H. R. 7223) to grant the right of way through the Public Land Strip and Indian Territory to the Montana, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7843) granting to the Citrous Water Company a right of way across Papago Indian reservation, in Maricopa County, Arizona;

A bill (H. R. 7964) granting to the Aberdeen, Bismarck and Northwestern Railway right of way across a portion of the Sioux reservation, in Dakota Territory; and

A bill (H. R. 10028) granting to the Wyoming Midland Railway Company the right of way through the Wind River or Shoshone Indian reservation.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 9th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 2610) authorizing the construction of railroad bridges across the Snake River and across the Clear Water River by the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company;

An act (S. 1525) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Cumberland River, between Burnside, Ky., and Carthage, in Tennessee, or the south fork of said river, between Burnside and Tateville, Ky.;

An act (S. 23) to authorize Dalles City to construct a bridge across the Columbia River, in the State of Oregon and Territory of Washington;

An act (S. 1851) providing for an international marine conference to secure greater safety for life and property at sea;

An act (S. 1484) to fix the status in the Navy of certain cadet engineers;

An act (S. 1004) granting a pension to Ann Verneuil;

An act (S. 1192) granting a pension to Judson Knight;

An act (S. 1193) granting a pension to John R. Wheelock;

An act (S. 1906) granting a pension to Matilda Bleumner;

An act (S. 1997) granting a pension to Peter Thompson;

An act (S. 2100) granting a pension to Charles Tidmarsh;

An act (S. 2151) granting a pension to Mrs. Aurelia Hillyer;

An act (S. 2183) granting a pension to Rachel Plummer;

An act (S. 2255) granting a pension to Amanda W. Beach;

An act (S. 2331) granting a pension to Mary J. McGregor;

An act (S. 802) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Wilcox, now Roberts; and

An act (S. 1844) granting an increase of pension to Ann Atkinson.

The message also announced that the President had, on the 10th instant, approved and signed the joint resolution (S. R. 26) to arbitrate and settle the questions at issue between the District of Columbia and Samuel Strong.

The message further announced that the following bills were presented to the President June 29, 1888, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which they originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, they had become laws without his approval:

A bill (S. 808) granting a pension to Julius C. Monson;

A bill (S. 1827) granting a pension to Philomelia L. Dartt; and

A bill (S. 2168) granting a pension to Francis Marion Walker.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GIBSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

VETOED PENSION BILLS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I made a report a few days ago from the Committee on Printing upon a resolution to print 5,000 additional copies of Senate Report 1667, being a formal report by the Committee on Pensions upon seven vetoed pension bills. The matter lay over under objection or at the request of some Senator, I do not remember who. I call the matter up again now, and ask for its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution referred to by the Senator from Connecticut will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That 5,000 extra copies of Senate Report No. 1667, on certain pension bills returned to the Senate by the President without his approval, together with the views of the minority of the committee, be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the report of the Senator from Connecticut in regard to vetoed pension bills?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. When it was made I asked that it lie over.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is the report of the Committee on Printing on the proposition to print the report of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand; but I thought probably the Senator would like to have incorporated in that report the message of the President which was received, I believe, on last Monday, which referred to another bill vetoed by him. It would be good reading matter to have that included. It treats directly of his duties as Chief Executive and his action upon these various bills.

Mr. DAWES. There are several. Would the Senator like all the veto messages on pension bills printed?

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to God that they could all be printed and go before the country.

Mr. HAWLEY. They have gone.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought that was an exceedingly important one, probably more important than some of the others, and that Senators would like to have it printed. They want to distribute that literature, and I thought they would jump at the chance to have that message printed now and sent broadcast.

Mr. DAWES. I do not think the Senator need express his wish in that manner, but he can offer a resolution to print all those veto messages in one document.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was making the suggestion, if this resolution be passed, to have this particular message inserted in the document. I do not want to force it, but simply make the suggestion, hoping that my friends will gladly acquiesce in it.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest that it would be more interesting reading, and that a more effective document would be the collection of all the veto messages on the vetoed pension bills.

Mr. COCKRELL. There could be no more interesting document issued to the American people, and if the Senator will offer such a resolution I will gladly and cheerfully vote to print 100,000 copies.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator expressed his wish in such profound and reverent language that it might be done that I thought perhaps he would introduce such a resolution himself.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will introduce a resolution, and I will test whether Senators desire to have that document sent broadcast over the country.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator to be sure to get them all.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will do that right now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution reported from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, at the last session of Congress, on my motion, a work was compiled embracing all the veto messages of the Presidents of the United States from the commencement of the Government down to the close of the last session, if I am not mistaken; and that embraced all the veto messages of President Cleveland up to that date. I think it is very proper that that document should be supplemented, but I hope it will not be done upon this particular matter. It ought to follow the course that was pursued in regard to the compilation of that document.

I am not quite sure what message it is that the Senator from Missouri refers to now, for we have them almost every day. I suppose it is some one particular veto message that he wants to have printed. I wish he would specify which one it is.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will show my colleague what it is; I have it.

Mr. President, the report of the Committee on Pensions which it is proposed to print is the report of the committee on the veto messages in the case of seven vetoed bills, with an argument which I beg leave to say is very able, but too short, upon the general question of the extent of the President's proper function in these cases. That is as far as the committee cared to go. It is probable it will exercise its own discretion in making a further report on other vetoed bills. But I do not think the Senator from Missouri, upon careful consideration, would care to give very general circulation to that veto message of which he spoke.

My attention was attracted to its peculiar language, and without a thought of using it in debate I penciled some of its felicitous observations. The President dwells with apparent satisfaction upon the idea that he had got the better of the committee in having discovered that the beneficiary in this case was a woman, to use his words, "of very bad character, and that she had been under arrest nine times for drunkenness, larceny, creating disturbance, and misdemeanors of that sort."

I do not know how that may be. The Senate is not a police court. The committee, I suppose, reported, upon examination of the facts directly bearing upon the petition, that Mrs. Dougherty ought to receive a small pension, or that it would be wise and generous to give her one, and probably did not search after her whole life. But after having somehow discovered and cheerfully set forth that she had been arrested many times for drunkenness, larceny, creating disturbance, and misdemeanors of that sort, the President proceeds to make a remark which will be agreeable reading to the scores of thousands of soldiers' widows and daughters who are the beneficiaries—not the beneficiaries in the proper sense, but who are the creditors of the Government—in these words:

But there is much reason to fear that this case will find its parallel in many that have reached a successful conclusion.

I have had relatives and friends who are among these so-called "beneficiaries" of the Government. They are included in this general reflection. Does the Senator think that is a pleasant work, or one likely to elevate the President and his party in public esteem to circulate that insinuation among the millions of soldiers now surviving? I have no objection to printing it, but I should like to have the committee send out with it a report upon the case, making the comments that naturally occur to gentlemen.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, Mr. President, I desire to offer the following resolution——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not receive it now, the question being on agreeing to the resolution reported from the Committee on Printing, which, however, is subject to amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that my resolution be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 100,000 copies of the messages of the President of the United States sent to the Congress of the United States vetoing pension bills during the Forty-ninth Congress and the Fiftieth Congress to this date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be in order as an amendment to the resolution of the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer it as an amendment to that resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri proposes to amend the resolution reported by the committee by adding what has just been read.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, as far as the Committee on Pensions is concerned and so far as I myself am concerned, who drew the report now under discussion, it is a matter of perfect indifference whether it goes forth to the country in the shape it was presented or with the addition of the President's message in the Dougherty case. That case, with the message, has been referred to the Committee on Pensions for consideration, and will in due time receive all the attention which it deserves and be the subject of a report to the Senate. It is now in the hands of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT], who made the report upon which the bill was passed, for his advisement and consideration; but I deem it proper to say a word or two here in regard to the facts which the President did not place in their true perspective, as to being recent or remote—facts which were carefully considered by the committee, charitably considered, and, I think, justly determined.

It would seem from the language used by the President of the United States in regard to this unfortunate woman, who, while working in a Government arsenal in making cartridges, suffered a severe accident, who lost her son, who had been made almost insane, as she says, wholly so—it would seem, I say, from the language used by the President in his message that she is at this present time a person of bad character and a drunkard.

I took occasion when the files came again from the Pension Office to examine the record in that respect to find what ground there is for the assertions against her. I find that the police of this city report, and its latest report comes down no further than the year 1872, that this woman had before that date been arrested seven times and not nine; that the other two cases were of another person entirely; and that the President of the United States has gone back fifteen years to investigate the character of this poor, old, decrepit, half-crazed woman, for the purpose of putting an imputation upon her and thereby justifying the veto. From 1872 to 1888 this committee were advised that her conduct had been proper.

I find also, from the records of the Pension Bureau, transmitted to the Committee on Pensions for re-examination, in connection with this remarkable message, that on the 5th day of July, the date of the veto, a report as to her had been withdrawn from the files and delivered to the chief of police of the third Metropolitan district of Washington, and that it has not been returned. The result of it all is this: That after the committee examined the action of the Pension Bureau, considering the case fairly and charitably, with care, the President of the United States has re-referred to that bureau the whole matter for its views as to the expediency of disapproving the action of Congress, and has gone back fifteen years in the records of the police department of this city to ascertain whether the woman at that time, so many years ago, had not, through her misfortunes or infirmities, been subject to the lapses from propriety which are detailed in the message; that all the time since, so far as we are advised by the most reputable authority in this city, she has been worthy of the charity which the committee in its judgment thought ought to be extended to her by the enactment of a pension act.

In due time I assure the Senate that veto and all the facts will receive the attention of the committee.

Mr. STEWART. I am glad this question has come up, and I hope it will be up every morning until some reason is assigned for this extraordinary proceeding on the part of the President besides the fact that it is within the power incorporated in the Constitution. I heard no other reason than that assigned by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] the other morning. The reason assigned by the apologists of the President all over the country is that he has this power.

If the Senate will reflect a little they will find that there are many powers in the Constitution which may be abused. The President has power not to sign any appropriation bill and stop the wheels of the Government, and you have no redress. The Senate might refuse to pass an appropriation bill to carry on the Government; the other House might do the same. The very fact that these powers are intrusted to the different departments makes it possible for all persons having them in charge to abuse them.

I can conceive no abuse liable to lead to more serious consequences than that the President of the United States with a salary of $50,000 a year and at an expense to keep up the establishment of several hundred thousand dollars more furnished by the Government, the whole country being dependent upon the proper conduct of that great office; I say I can conceive of no greater abuse than for the President to occupy his time in hunting about the police-court records to ascertain the character of a poor woman fifteen years ago, to determine whether she is entitled to receive a pension for injuries received by her while in service.

It seems to me that we can have that kind of service performed by cheaper-paid men. It seems to me there might be some other officer to do this detail work. I do object to the precedent that the President of the United States is to become a detective or that he is to examine all these details. If there is nobody in the country sufficiently honest to attend to these matters of small detail, then we are in a bad fix. It certainly can not be done by the head of the executive department of this Government. He has not the time; it is beneath the dignity of his office; it is not his business, and never was intended to be, and it never was supposed that any President of the United States would do more with the veto power than to protect his office from unconstitutional encroachments. That was declared over and over again in the debates in the convention that formed the Constitution. The universal belief was that it would only be used on those occasions, but now we have the spectacle of its being used on disputed questions of fact with regard to very small matters with which the committees of the two Houses are charged, a Democratic committee in the other end, a Republican committee here, as conscientious and as honest committees, I venture to say, as were ever in any Congress. And yet we hear these lectures day after day, the President upbraiding them for not performing their duty properly in regard to these small details, undertaking to say that they are not the judges of these facts when submitted to them, but that he must deal in these small matters, and, as I stated heretofore, the whole expense, if all these bills were permitted to pass, would be only about $24,000 a year.

Why is it necessary for the whole form of government to be changed in order to have a competent person to investigate these details? If it be true that these committees are not competent, if we are to sit here and see the committees rebuked day after day, and their work repudiated and their characters destroyed—for it does affect the character of men to have their work characterized as it has been in these vetoes—if that is the case, reorganize the Senate, reorganize the House, and appoint other committees.

I venture to say, however, that no better men can be found in the Senate or in the other House than are upon these committees.

This wrangle about facts of that kind is unbecoming in the head of a great Government, and it was never expected of the President. I want these vetoes laid before the country, and I want the country to say whether the President has shown in any case such an emergency that he is called upon to exercise the veto to protect any of the constitutional rights of the Executive or to defend the Constitution in any respect. I want the country to judge of that. No bill can be passed but that an argument can be made against it; and because the President has gone out of his way and made arguments against some of these bills on ex parte statements against them, is he therefore justified?

All our work may be criticised; we criticise it daily ourselves and properly; but to have it criticised in such matters by the Executive is changing the whole form of the Government. Although it may pass for the time being without notice, the time will come when these precedents will come back to plague us on other matters than pension bills, other matters than claims; and others may use the precedent of two hundred vetoes in three years and assume the whole legislative power of the Government.

I say it is one of the most serious matters confronting us, and demanding more serious attention than anything that has come before this Congress, or is likely to come before it.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to call attention to one point in reference to these vetoes. The President in many of them seems to assume, after careful investigation, like that of a detective, or an investigation of any other character, that if he is able to fix upon the applicant for a pension a personal stigma therefore the whole country is under no obligation whatever and can be under no obligation whatever to give a pension to the applicant. I have not myself so construed my duty as a legislator in this regard. I have felt that when a man, whatever might be his personal character, had discharged his obligations to the Government, had risked his life, complied with his contract, and had suffered in consequence of his service to the country a physical disability pensionable, if he were a man of the most excellent personal character, that he was equally entitled to the benefit of the country's pension laws although in some respects he might not be up to the highest standard of personal behavior and character. I think we are bound by that rule.

We were willing to accept the services of everybody who was physically competent to render them, and the life of the nation was saved very largely by men who had their little tantrums of drink and it may be other peccadillos, and some of them men who from time to time may have been guilty of serious offenses against the law; but it does not follow that because of these things, if they discharged their duty to the Government, in a way that if performed by persons of the most excellent reputation and character would have entitled them to a pension, they are to be deprived of that benefit under the law although something may be shown against their reputation. A person may be guilty of the habit of using profane language and occasionally getting intoxicated, he may have even committed petit larceny or a breach of the peace, but if he has done his duty to the country he is entitled to his pension all the same, whether he be a man of the best character, or whether something can be said against his character.

Now, in regard to this woman, she was pensioned by this special act because of the personal hurt she had received really in a dangerous employment, as dangerous almost as that of the soldier, in a cartridge factory, and for that reason, and by reason of many other circumstances which bear upon the general merits of her case, this act was passed by the two Houses of Congress. I think that even if the President had succeeded in establishing the fact that she was not in every respect the best of women, she still is entitled to the good offices of her country.

I rose to say particularly in regard to this woman that only a day or two ago I received a card from Mrs. Dougherty and went to the Marble Room to see her, and she presented me a large envelope filled with testimonials to her good name, and with a trembling hand and voice and tears in her eyes she said to me that the President of the United States had put an awful story about her in the papers of the country and begged that she might be vindicated, and those papers which I saw and passed back to her (and they will no doubt reach the committee; I hope they will, at least)—those papers, from many citizens, worthy people in this city, establish a high personal character on the part of Mrs. Dougherty. I say this much in regard to her personal status. I do not know that anything can be said against her in the past. If there can be, it was certainly a gratuitous insult.

I ask the Senators to recall their own personal history and the President to recall his own personal history and say whether silence is not a welcome thing to us all. Let him who is guiltless cast the first stone, whether it be at one end of the Avenue or the other.

Now, Mr. President, I want to make an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri—the amendment calling for the printing of all the pension veto messages of the President—to add these words:

Together with the reports of the Committee on Pensions of the Forty-ninth Congress thereon, and the views of the minority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the amendment the following:

Together with the reports of the Committee on Pensions of the Forty-ninth Congress thereon, and the views of the minority.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senate will not entertain seriously the motion to print 100,000 copies of the veto messages. It seems to me a ridiculously small thing to do, and especially to publish a statement about a woman, even though the statement is made by the President of the United States under the circumstances. Upon the face of the statements made by the Senator from Minnesota, I would not vote to publish the message at all; but think of the idea of printing 100,000 copies of a veto message on a pension bill about a poor woman! You had better pay her a pension ten times over. The cost of the publication would be ten times the amount of the pension she would get. It is simply a discreditable proceeding on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the motion of the Senator from Missouri proposes to print 100,000 copies of all the pension vetoes that the President of the United States has sent in. I must raise a point of order against that, but before doing so I will state my reason for doing it. Most of these vetoes have already been printed in the volume ordered not long ago that contained the vetoes of all the Presidents up to date of the order. I have no personal objection to printing any reasonable number of the pension vetoes alone as an independent document except this, that they give only one side of a case, and that if they should be issued by authority of the Senate and sent through the country without a protest, that might seem to imply a willingness at least to be silent under these grossly unjust insinuations and comments of the President and his entire misconstruction of the proper function of the veto power.

For example, I do not wish remarks like these to go without a proper report of the committee of the Senate to accompany them:

Unreasonable, unfair, and reckless granting of pensions by special acts.

Eight hundred cases have been considered by the Senate Committee on Pensions during this Congress, of which three hundred have been reported unfavorably.

The committee in the other House has a majority of Democrats, in the Senate a majority of Republicans upon these committees are men whose private and public lives are as reputable as that of the President, who are as good lawyers as the President, who are as faithful in the performance of their constitutional duties as the President. I object to comments upon two committees of Congress and the two Houses of Congress of that description from a President who is violating the Constitution by the character of his vetoes.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut in reference to the last observation of the President he quoted, whether, on the President's construction of his constitutional duty, that he is a part of the legislative power and bound to examine and consider and approve or object to every bill, he is not responsible for every single act of legislation that has passed Congress, except those that he has himself vetoed?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think so. I think the President makes a great mistake as to the function of Congress and the function of the President. I do not propose, however, to go fully into the argument concerning the veto power, but I will briefly refer to the following statement in the same message:

Adjudications of the Pension Bureau are overruled in the most peremptory fashion by these special acts of Congress.

These two Houses of Congress represent the law-making power of sixty millions of people. The Pension Bureau is one of the subsidiary, auxiliary servants and creations of the nation. Clerks in that office adjudicate these pension cases, and the President accepts the adjudication of a $1,200 clerk as superior to the judgment of three or four hundred members of Congress, and scolds us for overruling them, to use his language, "in the most peremptory fashion."

Every act that is passed that changes an existing statute is an overruling of these subordinates, a new command to them to pursue a different course hereafter. They are there to obey us, not to complain of adjudications overruled.

He says:

Adjudications of the Pension Bureau are overruled in the most peremptory fashion by these special acts of Congress, since nearly all the beneficiaries named in these bills have unsuccessfully applied to that bureau for relief.

That is why they are here, because they have applied there unsuccessfully and they have been unsuccessful, not of necessity because the claims were unfounded, but the rigidity of general statutes makes it impossible to do justice in all cases. For what were the courts of equity established during these centuries but to supply that wherein the statute law by reason of its universality is deficient—if I quote Blackstone correctly? This Congress is the great legislative court of equity to correct errors, to make exceptions, if it chooses to do so, and what is more common than for the Pension Bureau to say in regard to a pension case unofficially or even officially, "Our sympathies are with you; you really ought to have a pension, but the letter of the law is such that we can not grant it. Go to Congress." And yet the President positively makes it an objection to these bills that the applications have been once overruled there, whether by reason of the generality of the law or the impossibility of making out the case technically under the law.

It is the uniform practice of the Pension Committees to inquire first whether the application has been made to the Pension Bureau, and if the case be pending there, the committee makes it a rule to wait until it shall have been adjudicated, and then take up the question as to whether equity does not require a different result.

I object also to this remark of the President in his message, and it is among the things I wish to see replied to in any publication of the veto messages:

Those with certain influence or friends to push their claims procure pensions, and those who have neither friends nor influence must be content with their fate under general laws. It operates unfairly by increasing in numerous instances the pensions of those already on the rolls, while many other more deserving cases from the lack of fortunate advocacy are obliged to be content with the sum provided by general laws.

I am indignant, sir, at that which I would say outside of this Chamber is grossly false. Who are the friends of this poor woman Dougherty? Who are her friends of power, influence, wealth? And in regard to 99 out of 100 of the petitioners, what power have they over a Senator sitting here under his oath to perform his duty? Who knows them? They are A, B, and C in the great list of humanity to all of us. They are known only by the evidence they send here, the certificates from the adjutant-generals of the several States, extracts from the rolls of the Adjutant-General's Office here, the affidavits of respectable citizens of their localities, etc. If there be one thing in which the great Congress of the United States imitates the Divinity it is in the manner in which it listens patiently to the humblest and the least known in this and other matters.

I raise the point of order that the proposition to print 100,000 copies of all of President Cleveland's pension vetoes is against the rules, for it would require a volume of probably two hundred pages, and would cost far more than the rule permits us to order without the concurrence of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the Senator proceeds, the Chair will state that the rule peremptorily requires that all motions to print additional numbers shall be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not rise for the purpose of expressing any opinion in regard to the merits or demerits of this particular veto message under discussion, for I really know nothing about it, except what the papers disclose. But there has been, it seems to me, a good deal of rather wild talk about the exercise by the President of his veto power, and a good deal of mock indignation has been manifested, I must think, for some other purpose than to get the bill passed; and many appeals have been made to our sympathetic feelings by Senators who have spoken in regard to this poor woman.

I want to say, for one, that if it can be made to appear that injustice has been done to her, either to her legal rights or to her character, the Senator from Connecticut shall have my vote to correct it.

Sir, I think it might be advantageous to have read occasionally some passages from a document which seems to have got into bad repute in this body, to wit, the Constitution of the United States, and, with the permission of the Senate, I will have read part of section 7 of Article I of the Constitution, beginning with the words "every bill."

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it become a law, be presented to the President of the United States; if he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal and proceed to reconsider it. If after such reconsideration two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of that House it shall become a law. But in all such cases the votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the President within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, a good deal has been said about the violation of the Constitution by the President of the United States, because he sees fit in the exercise of his executive functions to withhold his approval to certain bills passed by the legislative department of the Government. That provision of the Constitution, with all other provisions of that instrument, was evidently prepared with great care and with great caution.

Mr. DAWES. And should be so exercised.

Mr. BUTLER. And the Senator from Massachusetts says it should be so exercised. If he will excuse me for differing with such a distinguished constitutional lawyer as that Senator is, I will say that in a great majority of cases I think it has been very judiciously exercised. That is my judgment.

But if the Constitution has been violated, if the President has exceeded his powers under the Constitution, the legislative branch of the Government has a very plain specific remedy provided by the Constitution. It says in terms that if two-thirds of both branches of Congress should not agree with the President's action and should so record their votes by yeas and nays the bill shall become a law notwithstanding the objections of the President. So I can not quite see the force of this attempt to alarm the country, that the President of the United States is a usurper, that he has violated the Constitution, that he has been guilty of falsehood, that his own character is not above reproach.

Sir, I shall leave those Senators who choose to characterize the head of a great Government in that language to have all the advantage that they think can be obtained from it. For one, sir, I have too much respect for the high office to use that kind of language in speaking, in my official capacity at least, and in a forum where he is not permitted to be heard. If I were called upon to express an opinion, I would say, what I believe to be true, that this country is in much greater peril, that there is much more danger to the liberties of the people of this country from the usurpations of Congress, the legislative department of the Government, than from the executive. We are in danger, sir, if some authority does not check this propensity on the part of the legislative department of this Government, of having erected upon the ruins of constitutional government all the evils of a parliamentary government without any of its advantages.

I believe that the President of the United States has done this country a very great service in the scrutiny and care and courage which he has manifested in the exercise of his constitutional right in interposing his vetoes upon many of these bills.

Now, sir, it can not be charged, I think, successfully, and I believe it will not be, that in this matter there is any partisan feeling whatever. I think that both sides of this Chamber have voted with unusual unanimity and liberality in the granting of pensions to the Union soldiers of this Government and to all of those who are dependent upon them; and it comes within my knowledge and within the knowledge of Senators upon this floor, that where there has been patent injustice in the exercise of the veto power the legislative department of the Government has promptly rectified it in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution under which he acts; and if any injustice has been done in this case or shall have been done in one hereafter or has been done in the past, I venture the opinion that that injustice will be promptly remedied by both Houses of Congress.

I therefore can not quite understand why this onslaught, this assault, this attack on the Chief Executive of this country should be entered upon with the indulgence of such epithets as I have heard this morning applied to him. I say that I can not appreciate and I can not understand it. I here and now pledge my vote and my support to override the President's veto whenever it shall be made to appear to my judgment that he has been mistaken and has done injustice to the humblest citizen or the humblest individual in this country.

Congress in my opinion has been too lax. I think I can afford to say, what is declared to have been improper on the part of the President, that it has been reckless not only in regard to pension bills but to many other acts of legislation, and the people of this country would have been in a very much better condition in my humble opinion if more of the predecessors of the present Chief Executive had exercised the same scrutiny and the same courage and the same independence in regard to the legislation of Congress. And in saying that, I do not intend to make in the remotest degree any reflection upon the patriotism or character of the distinguished men who have preceded him. Instead of being rebuked and denounced, my opinion is that he will receive the thanks of every patriotic citizen of this country for the check which he has imposed upon this recklessness and carelessness by Congress. And, sir, in saying that, I plead guilty myself to the imputation and the charge, and I am prepared to take my share of the responsibility.

I will now repeat that if there is anything unjust or unfair or harsh to this poor woman there certainly is intelligence enough in the Committee on Pensions of this body to demonstrate it, and if they do, I repeat my purpose and my willingness to override the President's veto and see that justice may be done her in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution and with the orderly procedure of a legislative body constituted as ours is.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina can not understand how this subject came before the Senate this morning, or to use, I think, more exactly his phrase, he can not understand the onslaught made upon the President of the United States. Sir, I reported from the Committee on Printing a simple, plain resolution to print an extra number of a somewhat unusual and elaborate report upon seven vetoed pension cases, because it contained an answer to many inquiries made by citizens, and set forth though all too briefly, as I said, the views of the Committee on Pensions.

I did not bring up the Dougherty case. I did not bring up the President's exercise of the veto power. The Dougherty case is only incidentally referred to here, because the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] arose to praise it and to specially adopt its language, and to desire that it might be printed in connection with a document to which it has no relevancy whatever. He brought the Dougherty case in here, and he brought it in by his proposition to override the rules, as he will see upon reflection, to print 100,000 copies of what would be a 200-page volume, containing all the President's pension vetoes. He began a eulogy of the Dougherty veto.

The Senator from South Carolina says that the President will receive the thanks of the country for his vetoes. Will he receive the thanks of the country for saying that among the innumerable widows and daughters of soldiers who are the beneficiaries of the Government, there are too many parallels to cases of drunkenness, larceny, and misdemeanor? Is that one of the things for which he should be thanked?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

Mr. HAWLEY. No; I did not say a word or interrupt when the Senator was speaking.

Mr. BUTLER. I beg the Senator's pardon. I would not interrupt him without his consent, though I submit to interruption without the slightest impatience.

Mr. HAWLEY. I prefer that the Senator should wait until I get through.

Mr. BUTLER. I wanted to correct what I thought was a misstatement on the Senator's part; but I will do so afterwards.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator says the President will receive thanks for his vetoes. One of them contains the language I have just quoted, which is a careless reflection upon the decency of all these women. He will receive the thanks of the people, I suppose, for this expression:

> The theory seems to have been adopted that no man who served in the Army can be the subject of death or impaired health except they are chargeable to his service.

The Senator from South Carolina can not make it appear that I have indulged in insults or personal reflections upon the President. I will not be guilty of that, but I intend to comment freely upon his conduct within the line of public duty and without personal ill-will. And I say, as I said before, that the statement just quoted is untrue. It is simply untrue that the theory has been adopted that from whatever cause a soldier dies his death is traceable to his service. But that it is so traceable is true in a multitude of cases. There is no skillful veteran in the medical profession who will not tell you that no man who spent three or four years in that war, subject to its physical exposures, its terrible trials, has now truly an unimpaired constitution.

I say further that the President will not receive the thanks of the people of this country for declaring, in the language I have before quoted, that "adjudications of the Pension Bureau are overruled in the most peremptory fashion by these special acts of Congress," when three hundred of eight hundred cases have been reported adversely; nor will he receive the thanks of the country for complaining that these persons have pensions granted after pensions had been refused by the Pension Bureau. He will not deserve the thanks of the country for declaring the conduct of Congress in this matter "unreasonable, unfair, and reckless."

Surely it is not a party question, as the Senator says. Indeed it is not, because it is a Democratic House that shares with the Republican Senate the charge of unreasonable and reckless and unfair legislation in this matter. Certainly this is such language as no President who ever was in that chair before him has used toward Congress. I appeal to the rhetoric and temper of these pension vetoes. Compare their terms with the language which, without an exception for a hundred years in all the messages of all the Presidents, has been that of deliberation and courtesy and dignity and respect, and such as comes also from the Supreme Court, in dealing with co-ordinate branches of the Government.

Now, sir, how many scores of violations of that sense of propriety can I furnish from these messages which are not merely disagreeable in a political sense—for with that we have no fault to find—not merely vigorous, earnest, decisive, but they contain in them covert stings and insinuations concerning the wisdom, integrity, and common patriotism of these great legislative bodies. Shall I make a bill of specifications? There is scarcely one of his one hundred and seventy-eight veto messages that does not contain something of the kind, even to the verge of reflections upon the accidents to which soldiers in some branches of the service were peculiarly liable, as in the famous cavalry case.

But the Senator points to the Constitution, and he says that if the President does not approve a bill he shall return it. That section has a definite construction in the history of the Government. All the legislation and all the vetoes have a general consensus of judgment as to the limitations of the words "approve it." It is not required of the President that he shall agree with us upon minute questions of fact to which we have given elaborate consideration. Unless he is to assume to be an equivalent legislative body he must leave something to the legislative judgment and power of Congress. All the legislative power, properly speaking, is committed to Congress.

But the veto power is evidently given to him, as the history of the country shows, that he may allow Congress a "sober second-thought" in special cases; also that he may protect his own branch of the Government against interference and trespasses upon it; and further, that he may protect, if need be, the Supreme Court of the United States from encroachment. These are the uses of the veto power. The general construction and judgment of the country to that effect for a hundred years is shown conclusively enough in the fact that all his predecessors vetoed but one hundred and thirty-three bills, and his number runs up to over two hundred. Is this the first President in a century who has found out the limitations of the Presidential office? Is this a new "Daniel come to judgment" to pass condemnation upon the illustrious line from George Washington down? Is it for him, first of them all, to assume the right to stigmatize the legislative branch as unjust, unfair, unreasonable, and reckless? Is he the only one who has found that it is his business to be a judge of every minute question of fact as if he was sitting in a dusty-foot court? So it would seem.

This is a new-fashioned Democratic party, which will put no limitations upon a President, which has hedged its divinity about with such a wall that even 60,000,000 people by their representatives must beware how they touch his majesty.

Mr. BUTLER. I was very much in hopes that what observations I made would have in a measure allayed the indignation of my friend from Connecticut, and have induced him to pursue a more moderate and conservative course; but it is a little out of his way to manifest quite so much feeling in a matter of this kind.

I have stated that I thought the patriotic people of this country would thank the President for the courageous manner in which he had interposed his veto power. It was not quite fair for the Senator from Connecticut to garble an extract from a veto message of the President and put me in the attitude of saying that the country would thank him for that particular language, without giving the entire context of the message.

I am no apologist for intemperate or improper language, if that is improper language, which is used by the President of the United States or by a Senator of the United States. My judgment is that there is a certain decorum which ought to be exercised in every department of this Government, one in dealing with the other. I am not responsible for the language of the President in this particular message or any other. He may have gone beyond the proper boundary, or he may not. I think he has quite a direct and, if I may use the expression, sledge-hammer way in going at things that is pretty effective, something like the style of some of his distinguished predecessors in his high office.

What is the remark of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HOAR. I made the remark to a Senator at my side that the ones he went at with sledge-hammers seemed to be soldiers and widows.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator says the President went at the soldiers and widows with a sledge-hammer style. Sir, I do not know that he uses any stronger sledge-hammer than the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, when there was an opportunity to use sledge-hammers. I never heard of his using any very destructive weapons at any time, unless they were the weapons of language. But that is a matter for the President and the Senator from Massachusetts. I have nothing to do with that. I was simply discussing the veto messages in general.

Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut says that the custom and construction of that provision of the Constitution is so well recognized in this country that there can be no mistake as to what the meaning of the word "approve" is. I shall not go into the discussion of that question with him. The language of the Constitution is very explicit, very plain, and very simple, and I think is not susceptible of any very great discussion.

The Senator then went on to say that the Democratic party was giving a new construction to the powers of the President. I do not understand that the Democratic party has anything to do with it. The Constitution of the United States settles that question. That regulates the powers of the executive and the legislative and the judicial departments of this Government.

The President of the United States places his construction upon it on his responsibility as President of the United States. He is plainly and unquestionably a part of the law-making power of this Government, and the framers of the Constitution appear to have attached very great importance to that feature of law-making for the country, because they have hedged it about by this provision of the Constitution which confers upon the President the right to veto bills which do not meet his approval. He has done that, as I have said, upon his responsibility and upon his judgment; and I repeat that if he has violated the Constitution, either in letter or in spirit, the same paragraph which confers that power upon him gives Congress the remedy for any mistakes which he may have made. Therefore, it seems to me that all of this parade and this discussion of the President and of what he deems to be his duty under the Constitution is out of place. We can remedy it without the slightest difficulty by simply passing this bill over his veto.

Mr. BLAIR obtained the floor.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator yield for a moment? I desire to simply waive an objection which I suggested yesterday to the passing of a resolution which the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] asked to have passed.

Mr. BLAIR. I have but very little to say, but I will yield if it is important that action should be had at once on the matter to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers.

Mr. HOAR. Yesterday morning the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] reported from his committee a direction to the Civil Service Commission to furnish certain information to the Senate. I inquired of that Senator whether there was any legal authority vested in the Senate to give such a direction to that board. I am satisfied, however, on reflection and examination, that the legal authority does exist, and that either branch of the legislative department, either House of Congress, has the right to direct any Department of the Government, in regard to which it makes laws and for the support of which it makes appropriations, to give such information in regard to matters within that Department as the Senate or House desires; and the customary direction to the different heads of Departments rests on nothing but that immemorial usage, except in the case of the Treasury, in regard to which there is an express statute.

I call the attention of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], who also joined in the objection, and I think he is now satisfied to the same effect. I therefore desire to withdraw my objection to the resolution and let it pass, if the Senate will permit it to be passed.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow that resolution to be passed——

Mr. BLAIR. I prefer to proceed now. Other Senators desire to speak on this question, and it will soon be 2 o'clock, and it will be a mere matter of courtesy at that time to allow this debate to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] criticises the action of Congress in reference to pension legislation and other legislation with great freedom, and appears to feel that he is justified in so doing by confessing that he is as great a sinner as any, or the greatest of all himself. I have no objection whatever to the Senator from South Carolina filing his confession, and I am willing to accept his word for it, and I doubt not but that the evidence is sufficient to prove the proposition that he may have been neglectful of his duties himself and reckless in the exercise and in the discharge of them; but I do not think he is justified by any facts of which he is in possession in saying that any of this pension legislation has been characterized by recklessness on the part of the Pension Committee in the last Congress or in the present. I admit that Congressmen may be reckless and that people may be reckless. They may be reckless in peace and they may be reckless in war, and unless they had been so there would have been slight occasion for the discussion of pension bills in this Congress or in any other Congress during the last quarter of a century or the next half century.

But with reference to the action of the Pension Committee of the last Congress, which is chiefly reflected upon necessarily, because then the great mass of legislation which has been vetoed took place, I wish to say (and I ask any one in the Senate Chamber, in the House of Representatives, or in the United States to point out the error if I commit one) that of all those cases which the President has vetoed upon the merits there has been none which was not a good case and with reference to which there has come from any part of the United States after the veto, after the advertising of the facts to the communities where they were known and where the parties lived, any response whatever to the accusations of the President. There was one case which I heard something of in the State of Missouri, but it turned out that there was another side to that, and that a Democrat who had been hit made full and ample response, establishing that the case was one of merit.

There have been a few instances where there were mistakes in names, a few cases, as in other legislation, where bills had doubled upon one another; but there has not been even in those cases a single instance where there was any danger of the Treasury losing a dollar, because the name of the person when pensioned goes upon the roll with a proper description, and if there be two bills passed giving a pension to the same person in the same Congress the error is detected and the Treasury is safe.

Now, sir, in the last Congress, having had by reason of the illness of the regular chairman of the committee the duties of the chairmanship devolved upon me during the most of the Congress, I took upon myself to send for all the papers in every vetoed case to re-examine them myself, every essential paper that there was in the possession of the Pension Office, and such evidence, in addition to that which the Pension Office possessed and the President possessed, as bore upon the merits of those cases. I do not assume to be right always, but if it were my dying word I would say that, so far as I can judge, the President vetoed quite as good cases as he approved, and, take them as a whole, the vetoed cases are cases of absolute merit, and the vetoes were outrages upon the rights of American citizens. That is my belief; not guilty outrages upon the part of the Executive, but outrages in the sense that he was wrong upon his facts and that it is the most natural thing in the world that he should get so. He could not re-examine these cases; he did not re-examine these cases. Every one of these vetoed cases which was examined or which had ever been filed in the Pension Office was referred to the pension officer with a request that the facts should be reported. The evidence in the possession of Congress does not go to the Executive, and of course the Department sustains itself, and the clerk who has been overruled, and who chooses to think he is snubbed when the American Congress forms a different judgment upon the facts than that which was formed by the clerk, reports the facts again and the President follows him.

In some of the messages which he has sent to us, by reason of the curt and cavalier manner in which he expresses himself, one would think that if it was necessary for him to veto these bills he might have done it as a gentleman, not to say like a President.

I had occasion to say something with reference to the Irish woman, Mrs. Dougherty, a few moments ago. Senators seem to question whether there is anything in these vetoes to irritate anybody, either the soldiers or those who took occasion to pass upon their claims in either branch of Congress. Let me read to Senators a case which occurred in the Forty-ninth Congress, that of Harriet Welch. I have the whole case here in the report of the committee in favor of allowing the pension, the veto message, and the report of the committee upon the veto message. The original report is this:

Harriet Welch is the widow of Syreannous Welch, private Company C, Thirty-eighth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, who was pensioned for gunshot wound of his left leg, received in the military service and in the line of his duty. The rate of pension was increased from one-half to three-quarters because of increasing disability in the wounded leg. Again applying for increase of pension, he was directed to report for examination before the examining board of surgeons convened at Green Bay, Wis. Returning from Green Bay, Wis., he fell from the cars and was killed, September 7, 1877.

John Hammer filed affidavit May 22, 1884, that "soldier's leg was so crippled that he could not depend upon it, and that it gave way many times and caused him to fall." That it is his belief that in attempting to pass from one car to another while returning from Green Bay his leg gave out and caused him to fall between the cars, when he was crushed to death.

In view of all the facts, the committee believe it to be their duty to report in favor of this bill, and recommend its passage with the following amendment.

Which was simply one as to amount, and of course the amount was small. Those are the facts; that was the finding of the committee of the Senate. The President vetoed the bill, and he said:

The beneficiary named in this bill asks for a pension as the widow of Syreannous Welch, who was wounded in 1864 while in the service, and was pensioned therefor in 1867. In 1876 his rate of pension was increased. In 1877 he appears to have applied to have his pension again increased. It is alleged that upon such application he was directed to appear before an examining board or a surgeon at Green Bay, Wis., for examination, and in returning to his home from that place on the 7th day of September, 1877, he fell from the cars and was killed, his remains having been found on the track the next morning.

No one appears to have seen the accident, but it is claimed that he could not depend upon his wounded leg, and that it "gave way many times and caused him to fall." From this statement the inference seems to have been indulged that his death was attributable to the wound he had received thirteen years before.

The widow's claim, based upon this state of facts, was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the accident resulting in death was not the result of his military service.

Just as though it were not the result of his military service, if that is the limitation to the discretion of Congress if it be a case of merit or of commendable generosity to give the pension.

And on an appeal taken to the Secretary of the Interior from that determination the same was sustained.

Now, this is what I call attention to, and I call attention to it because I think it appeals to the honorable instincts of real men, of human nature even in its uncultivated form:

Though this widow admits that prior to her marriage with the deceased soldier she had married another man whom she could only say she believed to be dead, I believe her case to be a pitiable one, and wish that I could join in her relief. But unfortunately official duty can not always be well done when directed solely by sympathy and charity.

There was a woman who had lived with her husband and borne seven children, her husband had been wounded in the service of his country, and Congress thought that his death was attributable to the results of that wound; Congress thought that widow should have a pension; and without the slightest occasion to call in question this domestic history, with not a particle of evidence anywhere to indicate that this woman had not been married honestly and upon a fair and legal presumption of the death of her first husband, there seems to have been an intentional effort to cast upon her the slur of an infamous alliance and of illegitimacy upon her children, wholly outside of the record and wholly unnecessary to reach the merits of the case. The committee commenting upon the matter say:

The principal facts upon which this claim is based are set forth in the previous report of this committee, which is hereto appended. The reason alleged by the Pension Office for the rejection of this claim is that the death of the soldier did not result from the service. The following newspaper account of his death appeared at the time:

"Syreannous Welch (or Deuney, as he was generally called), a veteran and pensioner of the late war, was killed on the track of the Wisconsin Central Railroad, about 4 miles north of this place, on Wednesday night or Thursday morning last, and was mangled in a fearful manner, his head having been cut into just above his eyes and his brains scattered along the track. He had been to Green Bay attending to some business relating to his pension and returned on the 11 p. m. train. He was known to have left Hilbert, but was not known to have ever reached Chilton, and it is supposed that he fell from the 11 p. m. train and was lying on the track, when the 1 a. m. train going north killed him. An inquest was held by Esquire Green, of this city, and a verdict rendered in accordance with the facts. The deceased was an industrious and hard-working man and was an engineer at Zech Brothers' mill, and leaves a wife and seven small children to mourn his loss."

The committee proceed:

The question is raised as to the legality of the marriage, which seems to have resulted in long cohabitation and the birth of seven children. The claimant was married to the soldier June 7, 1868. There is nothing in the evidence to justify the slur which the President casts upon the chastity of this widow and the legitimacy of her seven fatherless children. Pensions have heretofore frequently been granted in cases similar to this. Human nature cries out aloud for the allowance of pension in such a case, and if this woman, with her seven small children, is to be deprived of it, your committee at least are glad that the responsibility rests elsewhere.

From the reports in this large number of cases I might select others, many others. I was led into this debate from the circumstance that the Senator from Missouri moved that 100,000 of these veto messages be printed, many of which are libels upon Congress, offenses for which men in private life would assail each other, at least in the courts; and I do insist that if 100,000 of these veto messages of the President are to be printed and sent broadcast all over this land, the committees which he assails and the individuals whom he assails in these messages shall be heard in the form of the reports of the committee upon these vetoes along with the accusations contained in the messages themselves. That is why I offered the amendment asking that with these veto messages, if they are to be printed, may go along the explanations, not to say in vindication, but the humble explanations of the members of the Pension Committee, made through their chairman in the last Congress; and if the resolution goes to the Committee on Printing, I trust they will bear in mind the great injustice they will perpetrate if they spread this slander and allow no opportunity for vindication to go along with it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire has seen fit to characterize my observation with a good deal of freedom, and he complains that I have criticised the action of Congress. He then goes on to say that I having confessed that I was the chief sinner and principally responsible for the negligence and recklessness of Congress, he had no doubt the evidence was quite sufficient to convict me on that confession. Of course I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire in the earnestness and devotion and fidelity with which he transacts the business of a Senator from a sovereign State. I know, sir, that he, in that respect, is entirely beyond criticism; but I may be pardoned for saying that I think the greatest blessing that could overtake this country, to say nothing of this Senate, the greatest good that could befall us would be that the Senator were less faithful to the line of duty which he has marked out for himself, for I think if there has been any incumbrance, any incubus upon the sensible, orderly, respectable discharge of the duties of this body, it has been in the person of the Senator and the measures which he has introduced for our consideration.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator please to specify what measures he refers to?

Mr. BUTLER. Why, Mr. President, it would be absolutely impossible to specify.

Mr. BLAIR. I think it would.

Mr. BUTLER. I think I might take everything he does in solido, and repeat the proposition. We should be infinitely better off if he were less attentive and would fatigue us less and fatigue the country less with many of the measures which he brings into this body for our consideration. I suppose the Senator sets himself up as a model, and he feels called upon for an excuse for making the observations and criticisms upon me which he did.

Well, sir, he says it is much more manly, he will pardon me for saying so much more in accordance with that standard which he himself attempted to establish a few minutes ago of manliness and courage to attack a man where he has the right to vindicate himself, as he has done in my case, than to attack the President of the United States when he knows the President has not the opportunity of replying to his aspersions.

He says that the President at least might send his vetoes in like a gentleman. Why, Mr. President, what a calamity, what a terrible calamity it would be to this country if the standard of a gentleman had to be established by the Senator from New Hampshire! Why, sir, it would undermine, it would destroy every rule upon the subject recognized among civilized people. And yet the Senator says the President of the United States might at least have sent his veto messages in like a gentleman. God save the mark!

He says that I, as a member of this body, discussed with too much freedom the action of the Senate and of the Congress in passing bills and making laws for this country. Will the Senator from New Hampshire inform the Senate and the country how many pension bills we pass per minute from that desk? We pass them so many per minute. I understand one hundred and forty-seven bills were passed in an hour and ten minutes. The guardians, the representatives of the people, supposed at least to guard with reasonable fidelity and attention the Treasury which contains their taxes and their money, vote out of that Treasury one hundred and forty-seven bills to pay money in one hour and ten minutes—over two a minute. Yet the Senator says I have been too free in criticising the action of the Senate, and upholding the President of the United States when he calls a halt upon that manner of doing business, and voting the money of the people out of the Treasury in that reckless way, under his power under the Constitution; and because I saw fit to advert to what I thought was bad practice, and which I think every Senator on this floor in his heart will admit is a bad practice, am arraigned, I am personally charged with neglecting my duty.

I perhaps have not more courage than the Senator from New Hampshire, perhaps not as much, but I have the courage to do what he does not seem to have—to admit when I have made a mistake, and not attempt to create a diversion with the facility of a demagogue appealing to the soldier vote of the country, and then arraigning me because I, as I thought, in a modest and perfectly proper and conservative manner, criticised the action of this body for recklessness not only in that respect, but in a good many others; I mean not only in respect to pension bills, but to many other matters. I believe every honest man will admit it, and in making that admission he does not necessarily cast a personal reflection upon the gentlemen constituting the committees of this body. I have said not one word of disparagement of any gentleman of the Committee on Pensions. I have the highest personal respect for the chairman; I have the highest personal respect for the members of that committee; but they are not infallible, and neither am I. If I had any doubt of the virtue and propriety and wisdom of that provision of the Constitution, the conduct of this body and, if I may be permitted to say so, of the other House has justified, if any justification were needed, the wisdom of those who framed it and made it a part of the fundamental organic law of this country.

In making that statement I did not intend to do, and I did not in point of fact do more than what was my right within the strict rules of parliamentary propriety, as I understand them; and there was nothing in my opinion to justify the Senator from New Hampshire in his arraignment of me, saying that I had neglected my duty and that he had no doubt the evidence was quite sufficient to convict me of it.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina can not escape the predicament in which he chose to place himself by insulting me for accepting his own words as the only proof I was looking to or that I know of that he is a negligent Senator. He rose on the floor of the Senate and denounced the Senate and the House as reckless bodies, failing to discharge their duty with that attention to their oaths and their obligations with which a common carrier must transport a bag of salt in order to avoid liability under the law. That is what the Senator said, and he clothed himself with the larger share of the common insult by saying that he confessed to it. I denied his evidence so far as I myself was concerned, based upon my own consciousness, and, so far as I know, any other of the Senators, or even the Senator from South Carolina, for I believe he is really innocent of the charge, notwithstanding the exigency of this debate made it necessary for him, in order to defend his Presidential candidate, when he was charged with that which constitutes the lack of the ordinary qualities and forms of expression that attach to a gentleman, to say nothing about official intercourse, to confess to himself and to fasten upon this body an opprobrium which does not belong there.

Finding himself in that predicament, and I endeavoring to rescue everybody else, at least myself, and confessing that his own evidence, for I could not doubt the veracity of a Southern gentleman, ought to be taken against himself, passed the matter along, and then undertook to vindicate myself and my own committee in the last Congress. I thought I had a right to do so. I did not understand that in so doing I was exhibiting the qualities particularly of the hero or the courageous gentleman. I did not suppose I was to be complimented with the insinuation that I probably possessed more of courage than the Senator from South Carolina. I never surmised that, nor that I might understand what he means by insinuating that the Senator from New Hampshire is a demagogue.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from New Hampshire is no traitor. He is not indebted to the mercy of his country for his life——

Mr. BUTLER. I did not——

Mr. BLAIR. And if he has offered measures here on this floor which have not met with the commendation or the approval of the Senator from South Carolina, God knows if they had met with his approval it would have been for his own good; and the Senator may see the time, and the Senate and the country may see the time, when if the measure which I suppose he has principally in his mind, had become the law of the land a quarter of a century ago there would have been free men and a free ballot in his own Southern country as well as in the North, and the institutions of America would not have been threatened with subversion and destruction by a too successful rebellion that flaunts itself now under the forms of government and boasts that it does added work under the old flag.

I am aware that it is getting to the time to close this debate to-day, but I wish to say to the Senator from South Carolina that while I claim no excess of courage and never expect to be called upon to exhibit even the ordinary courage of a Senator or a civilian, I shall not shrink from any test probably that he sees fit to subject it to.

The Senator from South Carolina seems to think there is necessarily wrong legislation because one hundred and forty-seven pension bills were passed in an hour. I have seen vast sums of money, single items covering more than all the pension cases vetoed by the President combined, passed here just as fast as the Clerk could read line after line. Who found fault? Nobody. They were true and just charges upon the Treasury of the United States. They had been investigated by committees. They had been investigated by the Executive Departments and acted upon without investigation by committees of Congress. Who ever found fault with that form of recklessness in legislation?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will pause. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 62) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses.

Mr. GEORGE rose.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. BLAIR. It is not proper that I should seek to retain the floor. I have said what I care to say. There may be an opportunity for resuming the debate, if it be necessary.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope the Senator will be allowed to proceed.

THE FISHERIES TREATY.

Mr. GEORGE. I move that the Senate resolve itself into open executive session with a view to the consideration of the fisheries treaty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolutions of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and the fisheries treaty in open executive session.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is now in open executive session. If there be no objection, the reading of the Journal of the last open executive session will be dispensed with. The Executive Clerk will report the pending treaty by title.

The EXECUTIVE CLERK. Treaty (Executive M) between United States and Great Britain concerning the interpretation of the convention of October 20, 1818, signed at Washington, February 15, 1888.

Mr. GEORGE proceeded to address the Senate. Having spoken over two hours,

Mr. GRAY said: If my friend will yield to me, if it be agreeable to him, I will make a motion to adjourn at this time, or if any Senator wishes to have any other business transacted I will move that we go into legislative session.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like very much to have an opportunity to call up Senate bill 405.

Mr. GRAY. I am willing to do whatever is the pleasure of the Senate. I move that we go into legislative session.

Mr. SPOONER. I shall ask to take up a bill.

Mr. GRAY. I do not wish to take the Senator from Mississippi off the floor.

[Mr. GEORGE'S speech will be found complete in the succeeding day's proceedings.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the object to be to enable the Senator from Mississippi to retain the floor to complete his speech hereafter. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is now in legislative session.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 6612) to grant right of way through the Indian Territory to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7261) granting the right of way through certain lands in the State of Minnesota to the Moorhead, Leech Lake and Northern Railway Company;

A bill (H. R. 7223) to grant the right of way through the Public Land Strip and Indian Territory to the Montana, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7843) granting to the Citrous Water Company a right of way across Papago Indian reservation, in Maricopa County, Arizona;

A bill (H. R. 7864) granting to the Aberdeen, Bismarck and Northwestern Railway right of way across a portion of the Sioux reservation, in Dakota Territory; and

A bill (H. R. 10028) granting to the Wyoming Midland Railway Company the right of way through the Wind River or Shoshone Indian reservation.

APPOINTMENTS TO CLASSIFIED SERVICE.

Mr. HOAR. I desire, in the nature of morning business, to ask that the resolution of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], which came over from yesterday and to which I interposed an objection, may be now passed. There will be no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Maine, coming over from a previous day.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. HALE was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Civil Service Commissioners be, and they are hereby, directed to send forthwith to the Senate the information relating to certifications and appointments in the classified service in Washington called for by resolution of the Senate adopted May 1, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ARKANSAS RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. BERRY. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3215) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Cummings' Landing, Lincoln County, Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to.

SEACOAST DEFENSES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 62) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, unless the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] has some other disposition he desires to make of it, so that I may ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 405) providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law. The Senate must have observed the diligent effort I have made now for some five or six weeks to get this bill heard, and from my much speaking I hope they will consent to dispose of it. Will the Senator from Oregon assent that the fortification bill be temporarily laid aside? It would be a very kind thing to do.

Mr. DOLPH. I shall consent if I can procure an agreement of the Senate that the coast-defense bill be laid aside to be considered immediately after the Army appropriation bill is disposed of. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] would like to have that considered first, and I have no objection to that arrangement.

Mr. HOAR. If it be laid aside informally it will come up again. That is the effect of it without any stipulation.

Mr. PLATT. Let it be laid aside informally.

Mr. DOLPH. I have no objection to its being laid aside informally for the day. That will enable the Senator from New Hampshire to call up his bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Perhaps the Senator may get the arrangement he proposed, that it be laid aside until after the Army appropriation bill is considered. Then the bill I wish to call up would become the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Oregon to ask unanimous consent from the Senate?

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that the bill be laid aside informally to be taken up immediately after the Army appropriation bill is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the bill (S. 62) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses be informally laid aside, its consideration to be resumed after the completion of the Army appropriation bill so called. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ACCOUNTS UNDER THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 405) providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to yield to me to call up a private bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Let the question be taken on my motion, and then I will yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLAIR. I now yield to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator to yield to me to enable me to ask the Senate to take up a bill which I think will elicit no discussion.

Mr. BLAIR. I can not yield to anything where I do not have the assurance that it will not consume time by debate.

Mr. SPOONER. If I find that it elicits debate I shall withdraw the request.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well.

MRS. SARAH L. LARIMER.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to call up the bill (S. 2563) to compensate Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer for important services rendered the military authorities in 1864 at Deer Creek Station, Wyoming, and for loss of property taken by Sioux Indians.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator designs to ask that the pending order be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will preserve the rights of the Senator from New Hampshire. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Wisconsin?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer the sum of $5,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full for valuable services rendered by her to the Government in the year 1864, by giving important information to Captain Shuman, in command of the United States troops, and others, of the evil designs of hostile Indians, while she was held in captivity by them.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report in that case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read, if there be no objection.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to move an amendment to the amendment. In lines 5 and 6 of the amendment I move to strike out the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," and to add at the end:

Said sum to be paid out of any funds due to said Indians if there be any available for such purpose, and if there be none, then out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri call for the reading of the report?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the report read.

Mr. SPOONER. I can state to the Senator from Missouri, I think in a few words, the case, and it will take less time than to read the report.

While this lady was traveling with her husband and a considerable number of people in 1864 she was captured by the Sioux Indians. A large amount of property was taken from them, I think the testimony shows about $10,000 worth. Her husband was in ill health, a wounded soldier of the Union, who had recently been discharged. She was captured, and in a day or two escaped carrying her child some 75 miles or thereabouts. She gave information to the troops of the United States, which it is established by overwhelming evidence prevented their falling into an ambuscade and their destruction. A small band of the troops, in violation of the order given in pursuance of the information, fell into an ambuscade and were destroyed.

A Mrs. Fanny Kelly, who was captured at the same time, and who also gave information to the Government which was beneficial, was some years ago paid $5,000 by the Government. The bill was $5,000 for services and $5,000 for property. One of these sums was taken out of the annuities due the Indians, the other was appropriated out of the general fund in the Treasury in her case, and in support of her claim there was presented a statement signed by Spotted Tail, Swift Bear, and other chiefs and warriors of the Sioux Indians, acknowledging the massacre and destruction of property and consenting that payment be made out of the funds due or to become due to the Indians. Of course that statement is just as applicable to the case of Mrs. Larimer as it was to the case of Mrs. Kelly, for she was captured at the same time and was in the same relation, so that there is no question as to the identity of the tribe, nor is there any question as to the capture and the outrage.

There were before the committee, and are appended to the report, affidavits of the officers who commanded the Federal troops, testifying in detail to the information which Mrs. Larimer gave to the troops and to the value of that information.

We were obliged to report against her claim for reimbursement for the property taken, because her title to it as against her husband was not satisfactorily established to the committee.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator to what Indians the bill refers?

Mr. SPOONER. It refers to Spotted Tail and Swift Bear and other chiefs and warriors of the Sioux Indians, who acknowledged this massacre and consented to the amount paid to Mrs. Kelly being deducted from their annuities.

Mr. DAWES. It is not recited in the body of the bill?

Mr. SPOONER. No; but it is recited in the report. It is simply stated in the bill that the amount shall be deducted from the funds due to the Indians if there be any funds available for the purpose.

Mr. DAWES. Ought it not to be more specifically stated in the bill itself, because it simply says "out of any funds due to said Indians?" There are no specific Indians mentioned in the bill.

The Senator will recollect that there are no funds properly due to the Sioux Indians, because all of their funds that they had at the time of the war to which I suppose this refers were confiscated into the Treasury. It would not be proper to say a fund now due to those very Indians. Perhaps it would be proper to say "to be paid out of such moneys as were confiscated" by a certain act. On two or three occasions money has been paid to individuals which it was supposed right to charge over to that fund, and it has been necessary to specify that particular fund.

I think the Senator's statement shows that the money ought to be paid out of any funds that are due to the Indian tribe that committed the offense, and if there are no such, and the moneys were confiscated belonging to this particular tribe, I think it had better be charged to that fund. It occurred to me that the Senator would hardly carry out his own idea by the language of the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. There is no possible question as to the identity of the tribe. The administrative officers of the Government would be able to ascertain that fact without question.

Mr. DAWES. Would they obtain it through the bill? Ought not the bill to specify it?

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to put in the words "due to said Indians so holding her in captivity," and if there be an official statement on record that will be satisfactory.

Mr. DAWES. I should think the Senate ought to go further and charge it on to this confiscated fund, if there are no moneys due to those Indians. There are no moneys properly due to those Indians now.

Mr. SPOONER. Then under the bill it would be payable out of the general funds of the Treasury.

Mr. DAWES. That would be as long as short, for the money is in the Treasury.

Mr. SPOONER. It would be as broad as long.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is a meritorious bill. It is an Indian depredation claim. It amounts to that. It is no more meritorious, however, than perhaps some hundred other bills that are pending in various committees of the Senate.

I make no objection to the passage of this bill, because, as I said, it is a very meritorious bill; but I simply desire to call the attention of the Senate and of the various members of the committees who have this character of bills before them to the fact that it is high time to consider all the bills that are in committee which belong to this class.

In this connection I desire to call attention to the fact that there is a resolution on the table, which has been lying there for some time, providing for a special committee; and I hope that all the members of the Senate will join with me at a very early day in passing that resolution and raising a committee which will have nothing else to do, and which can take up this subject and consider it.

Mr. TELLER. I do not want to antagonize the bill, but I wish to emphasize what has been said by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

This Indian tribe, a very large tribe, committed very gross outrages upon the people of the United States in the early days of our late war, and from that on down for several years. The whole tribe, or the members of it, are supported now by the United States as a gratuity, practically. None of them toil or labor, and all of them are fed and clothed by the General Government.

There are in the Northwest, some of them coming under my personal observation, a great number of men who suffered by their depredations, some of them being actually ruined, all of their property destroyed, and who in their old age find themselves practically destitute, not being aided or assisted by the General Government in any shape or manner.

Up to 1859 the Government of the United States regarded it as its duty to make good to the citizens of the United States the losses they had incurred by a failure on the part of the Government to protect them against the Indian depredations that were committed prior to that time. Since that date nobody has had any claim except by a special act of Congress. Occasionally some man who comes here and hires an attorney on the outside, who belabors Congress day after day, and week after week, and year after year, gets an appropriation to pay him for depredations of this character. I think in the last twelve years since I have been familiar with this body there have been perhaps as many as that number of claims passed. There are a great number equally meritorious which are not provided for at all.

I agree with the Senator from Oregon that there ought to be something done to reimburse those people, who were not allowed to reimburse themselves, as frequently as they might have done, by going after the Indians in times when it was scarcely to be said that there was war with the Indians, when the whites were obliged to allow the Indians to take their stock and drive it away, knowing that the Indians were within their reach, rather than to precipitate a war, which would have allowed them to regain possession of their stolen stock.

I think the committee that is charged with this matter ought to make some effort to provide by some general system of law that this class of cases should be paid. I know something about this case and the other case which has been mentioned. This case has come under my observation, and I agree with the Senator who presents it that it ought to be paid. It ought to be paid out of the money of these Indians, if they have any, and if they donot have any, it ought to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. VEST. One observation made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] ought possibly to receive some attention from the Senate. Sometime ago we established a bureau to investigate these Indian depredation claims. I understand that fourteen hundred of these claims have been passed upon by the bureau, and all that is necessary is for Congress now to take them up. The evidence was furnished, passed upon by lawyers who are employed in that bureau, and the facts collated by examiners in the field; and yet neither House of Congress does anything in the matter. Fourteen hundred of these claims have passed through that bureau and are ready now for the action of Congress, and yet no legislation is had, and I undertake to say that the youngest of us will never see any.

Mr. STEWART. The way is to have——

Mr. BLAIR. I think I shall be obliged to ask my friend from Wisconsin to withdraw the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I suppose we can have a vote on the bill now.

Mr. BLAIR. Let me say that to-morrow and next day have been set apart for discussion of the fishery treaty. I hoped this evening to dispose of the labor bill, but it looks to me that we may fail to do it if this discussion proceeds, so that I can hardly be justified in allowing it to go on further.

Mr. SPOONER. This claim does not involve at all the principle of the payment of the Indian depredation claims. If there is to be further debate, I feel bound to withdraw it for the present, however.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire call for the regular order?

Mr. BLAIR. If there can be a vote without debate, I shall not do so. Otherwise I must ask for the regular order.

Mr. DAWES. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words I have indicated and inserting:

To be paid out of the unpaid annuities stipulated to be paid to said Indians under the treaties, but abrogated and annulled by the act approved February 16, 1863.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is impossible for the clerks to write from the dictation of the Senator.

Mr. BLAIR. I call for the regular order.

Mr. REAGAN (to Mr. DAWES). Let the bill go through.

Mr. DAWES. I withdraw the amendment. Senators are impatient and think it is sufficiently definite. If they are satisfied, I shall not press the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire demand the regular order?

Mr. BLAIR. I have no objection to a vote, but I can not yield to further debate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to compensate Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer for important services rendered the military authorities in 1864, at Deer Creek Station, Wyoming."

ACCOUNTS UNDER THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 405) providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law. The bill provides that whoever, as a laborer, workman, or mechanic, has been employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States since the 25th of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work, shall be paid for each eight hours he has been employed as for a full day's work, without any reduction of pay on account of the reduction of the hours of labor.

All claims for labor so performed in excess of eight hours per day are referred to the Court of Claims, to be adjudicated upon the basis that eight hours constitute a day's work, and judgment is to be given against the United States in favor of each claimant for the amount found due, to be paid as other judgments of the Court of Claims against the United States.

An amendment was reported by the Committee on Education and Labor, in section 2, after the word "limitation" in line 9, to strike out:

Or payment made or receipt given for a less sum per day than the full price of a day's work, as provided in the first section of this act.

So as to read:

No statute of limitation shall bar the right of recovery.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope it will be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I offer an amendment at the end of line 14 of section 2:

And provided further, That any amount allowed under this act to any claimant shall only be paid to such claimant in person, or to his administrator or heirs.

I want to cut off claim agents and attorneys from getting three-fourths of this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator send the amendment to the desk in writing?

Mr. COCKRELL prepared his amendment and sent it to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 14 of section 2 it is proposed to add:

